Catch Him On The Rebound!

NOT Bill Hohenzollern. There's no rebound left in him.

Catch the moving picture patron with the great comedy that has come out of the war.

After sorrow the world wants to laugh. It's a dramatic axiom—hokum, perhaps you call it,—the method of sudden change to comedy following a tearful situation. It always goes big.

So will "Good Bye, Bill!" go big. It is based upon fundamental and successful showmanship.

They've been weeping and gasping at the war.

Now they're ready to rebound, ready to laugh.

Catch 'em with "Good Bye, Bill!"

"Little Miss Hoover"

A Paramount Picture

Adapted from
"The Golden Bird" by Maria Thompson Daviess
Scenario by Adrian Gil-Spear. Directed by John S. Robertson

When Marguerite Clark Raises Chickens!

WITH a few hens and a rooster she tried to frighten the wolf from the door—and you know how difficult it is for chickens to frighten a wolf!

In the midst of it all the incubator broke.

Did she sit down and cry? She did not! She took the eggs to bed with her and in the morning there they were, a whole family of little chicks.

When last seen, the wolf, his tail between his legs, was fleeing, scared to death, over the hill.

So will "Little Miss Hoover" chase bad business.

"Quicksand"
Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. Photographed
by John Stumar

Supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

As a Cabaret Dancer

WERE it not for the fact that royalty these days is in bad standing, we'd say that in "Quicksand" Dorothy Dalton is the queen of the Great White Way—and there she sits on her throne, an inch or so to the right.

In this, her newest Thomas H. Ince-Paramount picture, Dorothy Dalton is a respectable homebody with a husband and a baby.

The night life of New York means nothing to her until they send her husband to jail. It's a frame-up in the top crust of the underworld, but they picked the wrong woman's husband to fool with.

Out of the little flat she goes, seeking to free her husband. She becomes a cabaret singer, to get evidence.

And when she gets it!

Other folks get it, too,—and get it good!

It's another of those wonderful Dorothy Dalton pictures.

In
"The Way Of A Man With A Maid"

A Paramount Picture

By Ida M. Evans. Scenario by Edith M. Kennedy.
Directed by Donald Crisp.

"You're a $3-a-Week Clerk!"

IT was a lie! He was making $21 a week! And Bryant Washburn set out to show the girls what a spender he could be.

A bold front and no cash! What uproariously funny scrapes it got him into!

A genuine comedy from a famous Saturday Evening Post story.

ETHEL Clayton
in "The Mystery Girl"

Adapted from the story, "Green Fancy," by George Barr McCutcheon
 Scenario by Marion Fairfax. Directed by William C. De Mille

A Paramount Picture

—“No. 477” Had the Jewels!—

“THE Mystery Girl” gives Ethel Clayton one of the greatest parts of her career—a stop-at-nothing heroine who sees things to be done and does them!

George Barr McCutcheon's story revolves around a box of jewels, a clever thief, a beautiful girl and, of course, the hero. “Number 477” is the “Mystery Girl” and that's Ethel Clayton.

Every one of Ethel Clayton's Paramount Pictures adds to her box office value. “Women's Weapons” was a big success and “The Mystery Girl” is just as good. You can't ask for anything better than that.

Second CORINNE GRIFFITH Release of the

VITAGRAPH STAR SERIES

NO screen artiste has achieved more fame as a delineator of the society girl type than Corinne Griffith. And in "The Adventure Shop" she is given the role of a girl bored with the humdrum social routine and eager to "start something"—which she does.

The very maximum of action is found in this whimsical comedy-drama, now causing ripples of laughter, now wavering on the very brink of what seems to be tragedy. All in all, it is one of the most unusual and different productions released in 1918.

Here is a photoplay that everyone will like; its subtleties will find response in the minds of the seasoned patrons, and even the littlest of children will find joy in its piled-up action and incident and suspense.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

"Big-city" crowds acclaim "UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS," the 3d U. S. Official War Film, has now scored memorable successes in many of the finest picture houses of America!

In New York, for instance, "Under Four Flags" played to "standing room only" at both the Rialto and the Rivoli Theatres, the week of November 17th.

Even with this liberal presentation, the New York populace clamored for more—with the result that Mr. Rothapfel upset Rialto-Rivoli tradition and arranged for a return engagement, beginning the week of December 1st, with remarkable success.

In Washington, "Under Four Flags" opened the new Metropolitan Theatre, the week of November 23d, and came back, by popular request, for a second run, the week of December 16th. It packed the house to the doors both times.

This dramatic war film has also played conspicuously successful engagements at the following picture houses:

Circle Theatre, Indianapolis—week of December 1st.

Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia—week of December 16th.

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo—week of December 15th.

Playhouse, Chicago—two weeks beginning December 2d.

Liberty Theatre, Kansas City—week of December 8th.

Odeon Theatre, St. Louis—week of December 8th.

Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati—week of December 8th.

Strand Theatre, Dayton—week of December 8th.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS" "goes over the top with a characteristic American bang," as one New York critic expressed it.

Everybody wants to see the pictures that feature so vividly the closing scenes of the world war.

Don't fail to book this authentic official United States Government War Feature for an early showing. The rental has been figured on a basis that permits of showing at regular admission prices.

GOLDWYN: A Great Name Built Solid During the Worst Crisis In the History of the World - - -

THE Goldwyn organization is two years old. It was conceived and launched in the middle of the world war when it required courage to tempt the fates by seeking to build a new wide-world mechanism. Today it is powerful and constantly expanding its reach into the world's far places.

The industry at large is puzzled by the growth and increasing importance of Goldwyn. But no customer of Goldwyn—domestic or foreign—or no internal factor in Goldwyn itself is puzzled for a moment over the success of the name and the organization.

Goldwyn has achieved the expected; has done what it set out to do; and intends in the future to achieve its present objectives. We have built soundly and cleanly. Within the organization there have been ideals and men with ideals to execute them. We have had the vision to see beyond a week, a month or a year and to discern the shifting currents in an industry where the tides turn quickly.

This is a clean nation whose people, no matter how fickle they may seem at times, like and demand the better things. Time and again in two years we could have catered to tastes of the moment and been rated shrewd and successful for doing so. But we have preferred to shoot straight at the mark, to build cumulative confidence on the firm, sound bases of integrity and quality.

Such a policy must be founded upon patience; upon willingness to work and wait. Goldwyn has proved rather than professed its friendship and serviceability to the exhibitors of the country. We have been from the start an independent organization, seeking friends but shunning alliances of all kinds that would hamper or restrict our freedom.

We have been untouched by the changes in the industry; have defied or escaped the predictions and forecasts. We have avoided bluster and sought to create a feeling of dependability in the minds of those we serve and desire to serve. And we feel that we have the finest group of stars associated with any one company name in the industry and that we are making, dramatically and technically, the best pictures available in the entire market. More than 6,000 individual exhibitor-customers give added strength to our belief.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

Five New Year's Releases of the Ford Educational Weekly

PICTURE this great Government's operation of the national postal system; the vital drama of human communication; the linking up of absent ones with their homes; the conduct of our many-billioned volume of internal trade and foreign commerce through the medium of the mails. You will see this fascinating fact-drama in the Ford Educational Weekly's January 12 release:

"What Uncle Sam Will Do For 2 Cents."

Millions of Americans listened to the gloomy tales of critics and disloyalists that our Liberty Motors were a failure; were enveloped in plotting and scandal. Suddenly an official-report revealed their splendid success. Now, in motion pictures, the Ford Educational Weekly's January 19 release depicts

"The Truth About the Liberty Motor."

How many grown persons or children know how the paper on the walls of their homes is made; how the patterns are made and imprinted; the articles used in the making of the paper? A most interesting fact story of an every-day article seen by millions of eyes is pictured in Ford Educational Weekly's January 26 release under the catchy title

"Hang It All!" The Story of Wallpaper.

Everyone has read in the newspapers for months about the great Hog Island shipyards near Philadelphia. The biggest problem that Woodrow Wilson took with him to the Peace Conference was "the freedom of the seas." Here in motion pictures you are permitted to see the construction of our nation's great mercantile fleet in the February 2 Ford Educational Weekly release:

"Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas."

Did you know that Canada has named a mountain after a woman whose place is established forever in the history of civilization—Edith Cavell, the martyred nurse who was slain by the Germans? In Ford Educational Weekly's February 9 release you will be shown the beauties of

"Canada's Mountain of Tears."

Effective with the New Year Goldwyn is the exclusive distributor of this greatest of all screen educationals. A fortune is spent upon the production of this remarkable weekly which, now playing in 3,000 theatres, will soon be seen in 7,000 theatres of the nation for each and every issue. Ask your nearest Goldwyn office for details or consult the nearest of the 10,500 Ford Motor Company sales agents who will take your application and deliver it to Goldwyn.

We issue a pleasant warning!

NCE in a very long while the story, the star, the cast, the director, the title man and the photographer all happen to be right, and then is born the 100% picture. You remember "Skinner's Dress Suit", for example, and you know how you and your audience enjoyed it? Well, Metro will release in January a picture similar in type but, we believe, even more enjoyable because it is so human and its characters really live. It is better than we hoped or guessed when we read Frederick Orin Bartlett's story in the Saturday Evening Post.

It portrays the making over of a Millionaire skinflint, a type familiar to every city in the United States, into a benefactor and friend of humanity, who decides, under the guidance of his bright young nephew, that the real way to enjoy life is to spend money in making others happy.

The story is in all respects so charming, so appealing in its pathos and blithe humor, that we take this occasion to congratulate George D. Baker on his splendid supervision of the production, together with A. G. Kenyon who assisted in the adaption, Charles Swickard the director and the photographer Robert B. Kurrle.

We want exhibitors to know thus far in advance that this is a Metro All Star Series picture, not a special, and that by advertising and getting back of it they may reap the rich harvest which the picture warrants.

They Delight the Kiddies and the Grown-ups Too!

Four more beautiful screen productions of child life can not be imagined. The kiddies like them because they echo all of their own every day joys and sorrows and appeal to childish fancies. And the grown-ups like them just as well because these feature plays take them straight back to the days of the old swimmin' hole and the rag doll. Full of pathos and whimsical humor, they are just the thing for the holiday season.

The Price You Pay

THERE is a feature article in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that reminds us of an editorial subject that has been frequently suggested by friends in the producing ranks.

"What's the Price?" is the heading of the article, which you will find on Page 73. In interesting manner it sets forth the exchange man's viewpoint towards the booking methods of a large percentage of exhibitors.

In a way it is an effective answer to the complaints of many theatre men regarding the quality of the general run of their attractions—though, it does not reply to the exhibitor who put quality above price in booking, and still find room for complaint.

The writer of the article declares that it is the continual "What's the Price?" slogan of so many exhibitors that hampers the production of really big attractions and puts a premium on mediocre pictures.

What he says should start an interesting exhibitor discussion on the editorial subject we have in mind.

* * * * *

What Determines the Price You Pay?

THERE is the subject—What method of calculation does the average exhibitor follow to determine the price he can afford to pay for any particular picture or individual star?

Whatever the method, one of our producer friends tells us that it works an injustice to the unusually big star and the extra strong Special.

There are a select few stars, he says, whose box office value is limited only by the size of the theatre playing them. He adds that there are always a few Specials on the market which fall in the same class.

Then he goes on to his point—either the exhibitors are not paying enough for these sure-fire attractions, or they are paying too much for the average run of their bookings.

It sums up—the great difference in the drawing power of the sure-fire offering and the average one overbalances the difference in rental paid.

Is our producer friend right?

He would probably admit that the "select few" of which he speaks get close to their real rental price. The manufacturer usually sees to that when he discovers a sure-fire attraction on his hands.

So the point at which he seems to be aiming is—too much is paid by the exhibitor for his average attractions.

As against which another producer told us that the rental price on a pretty good quality of program attractions when averaged up for the entire country and all classes of theatres barely reached the munificent sum of ten dollars.

What is the answer?

Rentals and the Big Fellows

ABOUT a year ago when "High Rentals" was the phrase on everyone's lips MOTION PICTURE NEWS learned in its investigations that the big exhibitors of the country give little time to worrying over the rental question.

The class of men who make up the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Advisory Board will roar at the drop of the hat about the class of advertising aids supplied with productions, about the quality of the market's offerings. But their opinions on the subject of rentals can be summed up in the statement:

"Give us the attraction—a good picture plus good advertising aids—and we'll pay the price. It's pictures, not price, with us."

We'd like to hear the ideas of all exhibitors on this rental problem.

Is your method of determining the price that of merely cutting in half the exchange man's first figure and then, finally, splitting the difference?

Or do you carefully calculate the possible box office returns and then pay just so much—and that much—as your books show you can afford to pay?

Or do you let the big attractions pass because their rentals are so much higher than your day-in-and-day-out offerings?

What's your opinion of the general problem of picture rentals, anyhow?

* * * * *

Another "Suggested Editorial"

HERE is a subject for an editorial that has been suggested to us on an average of once a month for two years. The speaker is usually a state rights man or an exchange man:

"Why don't you take up the question of closed towns," he asks. "The cities and sections that are controlled by one man or where two or three exhibitors have an under-cover pool to keep prices down?"

The particular friend of the moment then goes on to show us how from twenty to forty per cent of the rightful earnings of a big production are lost to the manufacturer by the cut-rating he suffers in the "closed towns."

And still further goes our friend to show how this, on the one hand, hurts the exhibitors in other sections where competition exists, and how it hamstring the manufacturer who would spend real money on his productions.

Then we ask our friend, "What shall we do about it?"

He says, "Write an editorial."

Shall we tell the man who is fortunate enough to control all the theatres in a town that he is naughty-naughty to pay the lowest prices for his subjects that the exchanges will accept?

Shall we dare to hope that he will then "get religion" and greet the next visiting salesman with the declaration, "I'm going to pay you twice as much for your program as I have in the past. I know I'm foolish because you can't sell anywhere else in this town. But I read an editorial in the News and I've seen the error of my ways. Haven't you some short subjects I can pay you real money for—instead of demanding them in the bargain as I used to? Have a couple of cigars."

Shall we?

Or shall we tell our producer friend that he is supposed to be a business man; that there is a business method to meet every business problem—if a business man goes at it.

* * * * *

The Sunday Question in New York

THERE'S little need for alarm over the fact that a division of the Supreme Court in New York State has denied the petition of David Cohen, a Binghamton exhibitor, to make permanent an injunction against his local police interfering with Sunday performances.

Contrary to opinion in some quarters this is not a test case, and has not the backing of New York's organized exhibitors.

With two conflicting decisions of the Supreme Court regarding Sunday openings in New York on the records, and the only further court prospect a doubtful appeal to the higher court, the State League is wisely satisfied to refrain from court actions. With the laws as they stand on the statute books now there could be little hope in carrying the case to the Court of Appeals.

The State League has plans of its own to secure justice on the Sunday question. A Court of Appeals decision against us would smash these plans to smithereens.

It's a wise moment to refrain from bungling. Let the State League work out its own course.

Dealing in Personalities

"They Have to Create
for Him"

JOE BRANDT has a new job. After reading the announcement we can't give you a very definite idea of what the job is, but our own experience tells us that somewhere in the Universal organization there has developed the need of a ninety horse power executive mind, with the observation powers of a microscope, and a distaste for remaining in any one spot longer than one-sixtieth of a second. That's the new job Joe Brandt has. It's the same one he has held on various occasions—but the externals change. This time it is a roving commission to co-ordinate all branches of the organization into a machine co-operating one hundred per cent with the exhibitor. From the days of the Universal's Union square offices Joe Brandt has held about every job there is around that organization—and now it's got so bad they have to create brand new ones for him. Well, he's the boy who can handle 'em—new or old.

A Few Odds and Ends

WILLIAM KEEFE—We have Pete Milne's authority for it, though that they all call him "Bill"—is in town from Los Angeles. Bill, who is David Griffith's production manager, made quite an impression on us as we talked over a lunch table this week.

HARRY CARR, of the Los Angeles Times and the Mack Senne Beauty Shop, left for Los Angeles on Monday after a visit to New York on business. Harry repeated Bill's performance with us.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH left New York for Los Angeles a few weeks ago, but never arrived. Samuel Goldwyn is expected to start for New York from Los Angeles within a few weeks.

SYDNEY COHEN and quite a number of New York State exhibitors will be guests at the inauguration of "Al" Smith as Governor next Wednesday.

EUGENE RICHARDS, of New Orleans, is in town for a view of the White Way.

MYRON SELZNICK and "Selznick Productions" have broke loose on Broadway with a big electric sign announcing Oliver Thomas as the star.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON returns to these parts within a few days after some few weeks resting in the Southern clime.

After a week's stay, WATKINSON ROTHACKER jumped the Century for Chicago last Saturday. Arrived in time to send us cheery Merry Christmas telegram.

SANTA CLAUS made a present of a package of tonsillitis to our justly famed Frances Klein this week and MOTION PICTURE NEWS office hasn't been the same place since Monday.

"He Has Evolved
Into a Corporation"

WE had intended to break a big new story here. We wanted to tell you about the MacManus Corporation. It's existence; that we know. Perhaps that news enough. We had hoped to give you the details, but the past two weeks have been busy ones, and the trip to West Forty-seventh street suffered a continual postponement. And as for getting the details out of genial Eddie—why Houdi couldn't be more mysterious. So we must content ourselves with the bare announcement that the same Edward MacManus, who invented serial exploitation, who directed Hearst's film activities for so long, and who had considerable to do with some Pathe serials that enjoyed considerable success, is now—The MacManus Corporation.

W.W. Irwin Joins Famous Players-Lasky

Becomes a Vice-President, Director and Member of Executive Committee of Zukor Organization—No Executives Displaced

FOLLOWING closely on the heels of his recent resignation as general manager of Vitagraph's distributing organization came the announcement on Thursday of this week that Walter W. Irwin will this week be elected a vice-president, director and member of the executive committee of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

With the announcement comes the assurance that none of the executives now in charge of production and distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be displaced by the addition of the new member to the organization. The office of first vice-president is held by Jesse L. Lasky, while Walter E. Greene was elected to a vice-presidency some time ago.

Mr. Irwin's Statement

"Mr. Irwin supplemented the announcement by a brief statement as follows: "It is very gratifying to me to become associated with the other executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. From conferences with them and from the thorough examination I have been privileged to make I am more convinced than ever of the present and future strength and leadership of the organization. This fact, as well as the broad and progressive spirit of the operation, resulting in perfect coordination, persuaded me to cancel plans for my own company. It will be a real pleasure for me to take up my duties at an early date."

The personnel of the executive committee of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with the addition of the new member, includes Messrs. Adolph Zukor, president; Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer; Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer; Elek J. Ludvigh, secretary; Ralph Kohn, assistant secretary; Walter E. Greene and Walter W. Irwin, vice-presidents.

Mr. Irwin has made a unique position for himself in the motion picture industry since he took active control of the distribution of the Vitagraph productions in May, 1915. Subsequently, in September of the following year, Mr. Irwin devised the methods of distribution of the V-L-S-E organization.

At the present time Mr. Irwin is chairman of the executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. In trade discussions and conferences in which the future of the industry as a whole has been the subject during the past three years, Mr. Irwin has always been a participant and an enthusiastic worker.

Hal Reid Is Engaged by Universal Film

Hal Reid, father of Wallace Reid and one of the best-known film and stage play writers, has been engaged by Universal as a "special idea man."

Mr. Reid's experience in the film field is wide and of varied character.

He has at different times been scenario editor for Vitagraph, Paramount-Artcraft and Universal, and is also the author of "Human Hearts" and over a hundred different stage successes.

"We Thank You"—Staff of Motion Picture News

THE feeling of good will which members of all departments of the Motion Picture trade entertain toward MOTION PICTURE NEWS is measured every year anew by the scores of holiday greetings that reach the office through the mails and over the wires. As each year rolls by the list of well wishers grows larger, and while it may seem somewhat vain to dwell on our list of friends in type, MOTION PICTURE NEWS cannot but help feeling justly proud of its veritable army of comrades throughout the country.

Among those whose season's greetings are on our desk at this writing are representatives of the exhibiting, the producing, the acting, the writing and the directing ends of the business. Those who used the wires to express their messages were D. W. Griffith, S. Barrett McCormick and William S. Hart.

Cards were received from the following individuals: Jackie Saunders, Fred B. Warren, Captain Joseph Morrison, Vivian M. Moses, Dolores Cassinelli, R. W. Baremore, Theodore C. Deitrich, T. O. Eltonhead, Francis Carroll, C. L. Yearsley, Lawrence A. Urbach, Arthur James, P. Allen Parsons, Harry Raver, William E. Raynor, Mr. and Mrs. William L. Sherrill, Pell Mitchell, Earl J. Hudson and Joe Lee.

Many exhibitors from all parts of the United States sent cards of Christmas and New Year's greetings. Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Grandjean, of the Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans; Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Taylor, of Buffalo; Paul Gray, of the Dayton theatre, Dayton; A. G. Stotte, of the Strand theatre, Omaha; Harold B. Franklin, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; A. J. Moeller, of the Theatre de Luxe, Detroit, were among the theatre men.

From the Pacific Coast Ed. Rosenbaum, H. H. Van Loan, Pat Dowling, Le Roy Stone, of William S. Hart's company; Mrs. Nellie Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Tom J. Geraghty, Mary Anderson, and others sent greetings.

Others on the New York side of the continent were Anthony P. Kelly, Louise and Edgar Lewis, Arthur Oliver, Lillian Hall, Charles Maigae, Willard Bradley and George N. Atkinson. The Riley theatre at Doland, South Dakota, also sent greetings.

As usual there were a number of novelties among the cards received. Pell Mitchell, editor of the Mutual Weekly, felt a comic urge upon him a few days before Christmas and penned a lot of lines that made everyone from the editor to the office boy laugh. Fred Schaefer, of General Film, thought a card would look much better if decorated with a full length picture of Fred Schaefer and acted accordingly. Harry Raver said "May Happiness Fill Your Screen."

From Luxemburg, Europe, came word from George Gould, formerly of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS staff. He was headed for the Rhine. And from Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, Ben Grimm found time to drop a card between flights in the air.

Greetings that were particularly welcome arrived from First National, Bill Rudolph and W. H. Productions.

Frank Keeney Completes Two New Theatres

The two new theatres that Frank A. Keeney has had under construction are now practically completed and will be ready for occupancy about February 1.

According to Ray C. Owens, general manager of the Keeney enterprises, these theatres are located at Kingston, N. Y., and Williamsport, Pa., and each represents a capacity of 2,500. The new houses are said to attain the ultimate in advanced theatre construction, and the furnishings are said to be of lavish appointment.

A policy has not been decided upon as yet, but the houses may play high-class pictures, with an augmented orchestra and pipe organ, similar to the New York Strand. On the other hand the usual Keeney policy of vaudeville and photoplays at "pop" prices may be maintained.

A number of other sites are announced as being considered by Mr. Keeney.

S. Goldfish Becomes S. Goldwyn

Head of Goldwyn Pictures Gets Permission from Court to Adopt Name Which He Coined for

His Organization

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, of Goldwyn Pictures, is no longer Samuel Goldfish. Under an order of Supreme Court Justice Thomas F. Donnelly he has been authorized to adopt as his legal name for the future Samuel Goldwyn, which is the name he coined two years ago when he organized the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Behind this change of a name lies an interesting story. When in 1916 Mr. Goldfish and Edgar and Archibald Selwyn organized a new motion picture producing organization they cast about for a name that would blend their identities and wound up by contributing one syllable of each of their names to the word "Gold-wyn." Through the medium of the screen their company's output soon reached out to the ends of the earth.

Within a few weeks after the formation of the company inquiries addressed to the president and chief executive officer of the company began to arrive from foreign lands and invariably they were addressed to "Samuel Goldwyn." This error also found its parallel in the United States, and for the two years of the company's existence fully half of the mail intended for Samuel Goldfish has been marked or typed "Samuel Goldwyn." The recurrence of this confusion of identities soon convinced Samuel Goldfish that in building Goldwyn Pictures Corporation he had created a friendly Frankenstein that was destined to swallow up the man who had conceived it.

Under ordinary circumstances the changing of his name by a man in his thirties who has made his name count in an important industry is a matter not to be acted on hastily, so for the past twelve months Mr. Goldfish has watched his new identity make inroads upon his old identity. Not until a day or two before he departed for his mid-winter trip to the company's California studios did he make the decision, and news of Justice Donnelly's approval of the change was conveyed to him by telegraph from Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for Goldwyn, in the following message:

"Samuel Goldfish is dead. Long live Samuel Goldwyn!"

This is a step that is rarely taken by a man who has reached the elevation of business success such as Mr. Goldfish has attained, but here again the screen itself will be called upon to perform a news function and engulf in oblivion one of the best known personalities ever identified with the industry. Beginning with the Goldwyn Pictures releases for the New Year and thereafter screen patrons will, see the words "Samuel Goldwyn presents" whatever Goldwyn picture is being shown, and the billboards of the country on which picture are widely exploited will carry the new name, as well as any and all advertising of the Goldwyn Pictures and Goldwyn Distributing corporations.

The fact that this can be done and blot out a name that for ten years has figured on a large scale in two industries and simultaneously substitute therefor a mythical name that became a fact is but another example of the potency of the motion picture and the screens on which they are shown.

out among all other businesses. The theatrical business has always been the first called upon for benefits, donations, free advertising and every other kind of charity, and the first to be taxed, abused and closed by the very individuals it has helped. The theatre men have just as much regard for the health and welfare of the public as anyone else, and if the authorities believe that places in which crowds gather are helping to spread the disease, then the theatres are perfectly willing to close, but when they close they demand that every club, store, saloon, restaurant, etc., where any large number of persons gather be also forced to close. It is the rankest kind of injustice to close the theatres and then allow these other places to remain open. It is the purest kind of nonsense to infer that theatres help spread the disease and that stores, restaurants, etc. do not. I think that if any honest health official were asked, he would be forced to admit that the large department stores and quick lunches where food is exposed on the counters are a far greater agent in spreading the disease than the theatres. If it is such a serious affair that the livelihood and investments of the fifth largest industry must be jeopardized then it is serious enough for the public to submit to a little inconvenience.

If the theatres and exchanges are going to die—and that's what will happen to many of them if there is another shut-down—then let them die fighting. It doesn't cost any more. The leading theatre and exchange men in every district should get together and appoint a committee to present their case clearly and forcefully before the proper authorities. You can't expect the authorities to worry about the picture business if the picture men won't worry about it themselves.

"Close one close all" should be the demand of the picture business, and I am doing my best to rally the exchangemen and exhibitors of New England so that they will get a square deal from the authorities should the epidemic again threaten their business.

Very truly yours,
TAMAR LANE.

Wm. Fox Takes Two More Soldiers Back

In pursuance with the Fox Film Corporation's policy of re-employing men who left the organization to enter war service, two more Fox men returned to their former positions last week.

Sam Dembow, Jr., formerly Fox branch manager at Atlanta, Ga., who was discharged from the army last week, has resumed management of the Atlanta exchange, succeeding F. G. Marchman. Burt C. Phillips, who left the Exhibitors' Service Bureau to accept a commission as lieutenant in the Signal Corps, returned this week as photographer in the bureau.

Last week George Dembow, formerly branch manager at Philadelphia, resumed his old position, having been honorably discharged from the army after winning a lieutenant's commission.

Irving Maas, for the last several months head of the requisition department in the Fox home office, has been transferred to Chicago as assistant manager of the Chicago exchange. He is succeeded in the requisition department in the home office by W. E. Sennett.

Colorgraph Laboratory Is Ready for Business

After many years of experimenting and development by Arturo Hernandez-Mejia, the art of making color films by the colorgraph process is now declared ready for the public.

The Colorgraph Laboratory has been incorporated and is installed at New Rochelle, N. Y., and the price of this color work is declared to be the same as black and white films to the distributors—about 5 cents a foot.

The inventors and promoters claim that natural color pictures with the color on the films without any filters on the projectors, by means of double-coated film, is here now and they declare that the process is commercially practical.

Nine years of hard work and the expending of thousands of dollars is said to have been injected to procure the final results. The company gives notice that its process is thoroughly covered by patents and that all imitators will be vigorously prosecuted.

Former Exhibitor Honored for Daring in France

F. E. Kindley, formerly active in work of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has written a letter to Lee Ochs of United Picture Theatres of America.

Mr. Ochs says that Mr. Kindley is now Captain F. E. Kindley, commanding officer Seventeenth Aero Squadron, American Expeditionary Forces in France, and has a record of 11½ Huns in the air, having been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross by the King of England and recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross with an oak leaf.

He writes Mr. Ochs that American pictures have registered heavily "over there."

Tamar Lane Writes from Boston Criticizing Industry's Attitude During First Influenza Scare WRITING from the Fellsway theatre, Medford, Mass., Tamar Lane shows that handling a playhouse has not dulled the point of his pen.

The letter follows:

Fellsway Theatre, Medford, Mass.
Dec. 20th, 1918

Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,

Dear Ed.:

With the influenza epidemic returning in many parts of the country and a new shut-down threatening the theatres, it is about time that the picture industry came to its senses and took some steps to protect its interests, instead of standing by in clammy silence while the business is being subjected to the rawest kind of unfair treatment at the hands of the various local and state authorities. During the last shut-down the exhibitors and exchanges, at least in this district, were dead from the heels up. They had no more spirit than a dried up Egyptian mummy and submitted to the closing of their businesses without a whimper. As is the case with all troubles of the picture industry, there was no organization, no getting together of interests.

This time—in the event of the epidemic returning—things have got to be different or the industry will receive a blow from which it will be some time recovering. The closing of the theatres during the last scare was an outrage and a flagrant case of discrimination. The picture men were fools to stand for it. Even to the extent of defying the authorities they should have refused to close unless other businesses were closed. It is not so much a matter of being closed which is so galling; it is the being singled

Influenza Evil Subsides Considerably

Past Week Sees Several Changes for the Better and Few for the Worse—Milwaukee Rejoices at Tilting of the Lid—

Rochester Fearful

THE influenza bugaboo, which has for some months been pursuing exhibitors and others within the motion picture industry, seems to have lost most of its powers to cause excitement within the ranks. Christmas week saw a number of changes for the better in the situation, and very few for the worse. Milwaukee is one of the cities in which it is believed the influenza evil has abated until the theatres need be troubled no longer.

Rochester became alarmed just before Christmas at prospects of the scourge returning to close the theatres, and motion picture houses prepared to combat such a turn of affairs.

Comment by Olsen

R. B. Olsen of General Film Company's legal department, in commenting upon drastic bans put upon picture houses during the influenza epidemic, expresses the thought that a vital point has been overlooked in the official discussion of measures. He thinks it has been overlooked as well by the film interests. Mr. Olsen makes rather a constructive suggestion from the viewpoint of the motion picture trade in that he presents arguments for a different official attitude which might be secured through a careful consideration of the usefulness of theatres at a time like the present. Mr. Olsen to MOTION PICTURE NEWS said:

"The film industry has been all too slothful in awakening to a consciousness that it is more than a mere sub-division of theatres and general amusements, when in fact it is a dynamic force for social welfare. It is conceded by others to have several aspects.

"Federal and state authorities, commissions and legislators, when revenue is to be raised, classify the industry as an amusement only, and more or less non-essential. When bonds are to be sold and money raised it is considered as a convenience. When a plague or epidemic scare spreads through the land its doors are the first to be closed. And in certain instances authorities have gone to the extent of using this great industry as a means of traffic control, with absolutely no consideration for the good and welfare of the institution as such.

"In our recent experience of the influenza, without any notice in many instances unwarranted regulations were imposed costing the industry millions of dollars. This scare is again being re-echoed and again the moving picture industry is the first that is being obliged to close its doors.

Should Prove Our Help

"This in face of the admitted mystery regarding the disease. At the recent meeting in Chicago of the American Public Health Association, Colonel V. C. Vaughan of Ann Arbor states, 'The saddest part of my life was when I witnessed the hundreds of deaths of the soldiers in the army camps and did not know what to do. At that moment I decided never again to prate about the great achievements of medical science and to humbly admit our dense ignorance of this case.'

"Dr. Price, in reviewing the matters presented at this conference, and especially as to the control of this disease, states, 'It was in the discussion of these questions that the total bankruptcy of the present health administration of the country appeared in full light and was admitted over and over again.'

"The discussion of any epidemic or plague of this nature involving the whole country presents itself along two lines, first, individual attention; and second, community health control.

"It is under this second heading that we as an industry can be of such constructive help and support. We should be able to compel the authorities to recognize our assistance, so that instead of closing our doors and destroying our activities and investments, they will rather realize the importance of giving motion picture houses every consideration, so that it will only occur as a last resort that these theatres will be obliged to close down.

Schools of Theatres

"Boards of Health, apparently cannot be made to understand that motion picture houses can be made schools and centers for the instruction of the community in such emergencies as the present.

"It is not the intention here to outline specific programs to be effective throughout the moving picture trade, but simply to direct attention to the unscientific and ruinous methods adopted in closing motion picture theatres on the slightest provocation, when, as a matter of fact, they should be used as a most potent factor in social control and community work, through the facilities they offer for instruction, education and general dissemination of scientific medical thought.

"The testimony of the various officers and health commissioners at their recent great convention as to the efficacy of the closing of theatres and motion picture houses was conspicuous in the lack of any unanimity in the conclusions arrived at.

"It was pointed out that Detroit without a closing ordinance had suffered less than Buffalo where nearly all the doors were closed. And in Philadelphia and many other cities the disease increased very greatly after the closing orders were put in effect. Great emphasis was laid, however, on this point that the closing of recreation facilities was ineffectual without the simultaneous closing of stores and other industrial establishments.

"Dr. Robertson maintained that the value of closing was to gain time for sleep, and somebody asked, 'Why Philadelphia?'

"The thought of these students of public health perhaps can best be summed up that the most effective methods of control of epidemics and disease is public health education. Why then should the motion picture houses, the most effective agency at the command of the community, be compelled in nearly every instance to be the first to close their doors?'

Had Rochester Scared

The influenza threatened to do a comeback in Rochester, N. Y., last week, when the number of new cases rose above the 200 mark for several days, a figure that was nearly equal to the October mark when the city was under quarantine. Veiled warnings came from the offices of the health authorities that it might be necessary to put the lid again on theatres unless the situation showed marked improvement. At the intimation of such a catastrophe, moving picture men prepared to fight, and it is believed that their attitude had much to do with preventing the health officials from putting their threat into execution. It was an open secret that the theatrical men were chiefly responsible for having the ban lifted before, and there is reason to believe that they exerted a considerable influence in keeping it off altogether the second time.

By the end of the week the disease had showed a falling off once again and the officials announced that they believed that it was under control and no further cause for alarm existed. It was said that the form of the disease now going around is much milder than the first, as further evidence of which is the fact that the death rate remains much smaller than before, notwithstanding that the number of cases at times lately reached a high figure.

Investigation revealed the fact that some of the picture men were preparing to launch a publicity campaign of their own if the closing ban was invoked again, and that they had statements from prominent medical men to the effect that the disease was not conveyed by public assemblies but only by actual contact with victims. Plenty of medical men have gone on record as declaring that the ban on public gatherings has had little effect on combating the disease, and it was the intention of the exhibitors to advertise this fact in the hope that public pressure would keep the theatres open here.

While the disease is expected to hang on to some extent all winter, there is thought to be no further likelihood of a closing order.

Milwaukee Sees the Light

The influenza lid has been tilted by the Health Department for the holidays and theatre men do not expect to see it go back on again. The removal of the influenza ban which has practically throttled show business in Milwaukee for the past two weeks was ordered off by the health commissioner as a sort of a Christmas present for Milwaukee, Tuesday.

Insurance Policies Gifts from Rothacker

Watterson R. Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Laboratories, Chicago, Ill., established a precedent this Christmas season when he presented everyone of his employees with a life insurance policy. The amounts of the policies varied with the terms of service of the employees, those receiving the largest amounts who had worked for the company the greatest length of time. No one was neglected in the entire plant, the general gift being presented to department heads and office boys alike.

Mr. Rothacker has long had this idea in mind and believes that if generally followed out by all the companies in the trade, the business would be established on a sounder basis. "The individual feeling of safety and solidarity it brings to each person receiving the policy," he said, "goes a long way toward bettering a business spirit of enthusiasm and cooperation between employer and employee."

Mr. Rothacker's studio and laboratories entail the services of a large number of employees. The gift of a policy to each one, therefore, is considered an undertaking of no small proportions and monetary outlay.

Plunkett Made Manager of Strand

Moe Mark, president of the Michiel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the Strand theatre, announces that the post of managing director of the Strand, recently made vacant through the untimely death of Harold Edel, will be filled by Joseph L. Plunkett. Mr. Plunkett was associated for a number of years with Liebler & Co. and George C. Tyler, handling most of their biggest productions, including the "Garden of Allah," "Joseph and His Brethren," and he was also the manager of the Century theatre for two years. He has been manager for Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Kyrle Bellw, Arnold Daly, Eleanor Robson and other prominent stars. He also managed the Children's theatre, which was located atop the Century Roof. Mr. Plunkett entered the motion picture field three years ago, and has, during that time, produced numerous comedies and features, the last one being "The Cavell Case."

Buffalo Theatre Managers Elect Officers

Ira M. Mosher, manager of the Palace theatre, has been elected president of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association. Other officers named for the ensuing year are: Vice-president, J. H. Michael of the Academy and Regent; secretary and counsel, Valentine E. O'Grady; treasurer, Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome.

The board of directors for 1919 will be John R. Oishei of the Teck, Dr. Peter C. Cornell of the Majestic, Harold B. Franklin, M. Slotkin of the Olympic, Earl L. Crabb of the Strand, Ira M. Mosher and William Graham of the Garden.

Baby Marie Osborne, the diminutive Pathe star who came to New York from Los Angeles to witness the home coming of the American fleet December 26

Baby Marie Perambulates Across Continent

She's in New York now, and not even the Woolworth Building is safe from her antics.

Just before Christmas, Baby Marie Osborne abducted her Pa and determined that she would pay her first visit to New York. She was determined to find out if Santa Claus ever operated east of Jersey City.

Santa does. The Christmas previous was spent in Los Angeles and "Little Mary Sunshine" received enough presents to comfortably fill a Ford car.

Her first Christmas day in Gotham brought her enough presents to uncomfortably crowd a Packard machine.

Baby Marie is just as full of pranks off the screen as she is in the film. As this is her first visit East she is busy comparing New York City with the West.

When quizzed by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS as to whether New York compared favorably with the Far West, she carelessly sat on the representative's new derby hat and nonchalantly pulled three buttons off his overcoat.

But at the same time she still thinks that the Grand Canyon of the Colorado contains more natural beauty than the Subway Canyon in Times Square.

The little Pathe star arrived in New York with her father December 18, having made the long journey from Los Angeles expressly to witness the home-coming of the American Fleet on December 26.

This was Marie's first trip to New York, and she was immensely excited over the tall buildings and other New York sights she had only seen previously in the magazines.

As soon as she and Papa Osborne were established at the Hotel Claridge she insisted that she be taken to the Pathe Home Office. Little Marie soon found out that everyone knew her. The elevator boy who carried her up to the eleventh floor of the Pathe Offices, at 25 West Forty-fifth street, called her by name, and the outer office Pathe employees greeted the tiny star with open arms, and she was escorted at once into the office of Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager.

Department of Labor Asks Co-Operation

David K. Niles, chief, motion picture section, Department of Labor, has sent the following request to the motion picture producers. It explains itself:

"The Department of Labor is very anxious to stimulate productions in order that we may find employment for our returning soldiers. The situation is critical and Secretary Wilson feels that a good deal can be done by stimulating the building of homes. I am, therefore, sending you copy for trailers which I trust you can and will use in connection with your releases.

"Let me call your special attention to the trailer on building roads. We are very anxious to create enough public sentiment so that we may be able to build roads and public works in order to furnish employment.

"Thanking you for your co-operation in the past, we remain,

"(Signed) DAVID K. NILES,

"Chief, Motion Picture Section."

Allens Will Erect a New Theatre at Ottawa

Julie and J. J. Allen of Toronto have announced the completion of arrangements for the erection of an immense moving picture theatre in Ottawa, the Canadian Capital.

The new theatre will seat 2,500, and work will be started at an early date, it is stated.

Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Monarch Film Company, Limited, Toronto, which is also controlled by the Allens, was in Ottawa on December 9 and 10 in connection with the new theatre matter.

The Allens already control the Regent Theatre, said to be one of the finest moving picture theatres in Ottawa.

The theatres will be allowed to play to their full capacity, children will again be admitted and the only restriction will be against crowds in the lobbies waiting for the shows. These will be absolutely prohibited.

The fifty per cent restriction as to capacity inaugurated by the Health Department so as to allow the theatres to remain open has cut very seriously into the receipts as the weather during the past few weeks has been splendid, and all of the down-town houses were forced to turn away hundreds nightly.

If weather conditions continue at all good theatre owners look for a tremendous Christmas week as the public has been practically kept away from the theatres by the fifty per cent capacity order.

Even dancing will again be permitted in Milwaukee, though all dancers will be required to wear masks. The fact that the ban has been lifted from dancing is taken as an indication that there will be no attempt made to put the ban back on again unless conditions take a turn for the worst.

A. E. Smith Advocates an Enemy Import Tariff

A world wide penalty tariff of 25 per cent on all imports from any enemy country, collectable at each port of entry of all Allied and neutral nations, to be paid towards the defraying of the Teutonic indemnities, is the suggestion made by letter to Hon. David Lloyd George, Premier of Great Britain, by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

Similar letters have also been sent President Wilson and the various premiers attending the Peace Conference.

In his letter Mr. Smith points out these advantages which may result from a standing penalty tariff on Teutonic goods: First, it will provide a means for these nations to earn their just fines, and be an answer to such pleading as that of Turkey to the effect that they are bankrupt; second, it will offset the advantages in commercial competition which always come to nations dependent on cheap labor, and therefore cheap raw materials; third, it will be an object lesson, as long as the League of Nations applies the penalty, to the war makers, especially the German empire, and will be the most effective punishment of the guilty, in so much as the physical penalty may be visited on a few only, whereas the commercial chastisement will be against the nations, who after all have been the wrongdoers, and will hit them in their most tender spot.

Willard Mack Goes West for Goldwyn

Rumors that Willard Mack would probably discontinue his work in connection with Goldwyn pictures were set at rest this week when it was announced from the West Coast that Pauline Frederick and Mr. Mack, her husband, were expected to arrive in Los Angeles soon after January 1, to resume their Goldwyn work. Samuel Goldwyn announced that Mr. Mack would likely have an important place in the scenario department.

Madge Kennedy has reached the Coast and expects to begin production work shortly.

Geraldine Farrar is scheduled to visit the Coast for Goldwyn picture work in March, according to Mr. Goldwyn.

Adolph Zukor Leaves for Los Angeles

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York for California. This is his annual mid-inter business trip to the West Coast, and he will spend three or four weeks there and then return to his New York office.

Mr. Zukor stopped over at Chicago for a few days and spent Christmas there with relatives. On the West Coast he will visit the various producing organizations and consult with D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, Cecil B. DeMille, Frank Garbutt, Mack Sennett and other heads of producing units affiliated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Cohen Quits Affiliated Ranks

President of New York State League Declares Differences Over Policies Force Him to Leave Directorate

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the New York State League of Exhibitors, and one of the organizers of the original Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, this week announced that he had tendered his resignation as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the units associated with that organization to the directors associated with him in the original formation of the corporation.

Differences over matters of policy and changes in the manner of the formation of the organization are given by Mr. Cohen as the reasons for his withdrawal.

Mr. Cohen's letter to the directors of the Affiliated follows:

"To the Board of Directors of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation:

"Gentlemen:

"I herewith tender you my resignation as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the units associated with the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation.

"Changes in the plan of organization and operation of this corporation, which in my opinion are so vital as to completely nullify the original purpose of the co-operative movement as formulated at the first meeting of the Board of Directors, are responsible for my decision.

"I have delayed several months presenting this resignation in order to allow the fullest opportunity for the development of our original plan of co-operative booking, which, as I understood it, was for an exhibitors' counsel, in which the voice of the exhibitor was to be the dominant and controlling factor.

"Recent developments, however, have convinced me that the organization is getting farther away, instead of nearer, from the purposes and plans formulated at its inception by the fifteen exhibitor members of the Board of Directors, and in justice to myself and to the confidence which you reposed in me by selecting me as your chairman, I have no other alternative than to terminate further identity with the corporation.

"I feel that this confidence imposed a sacred responsibility upon me to see to it, insofar as it was within my power to do so, that our original co-operative idea should be carried out to the letter, and failing, by reason of the changes in the organization, the opportunity to fulfill this responsibility, I must disclaim any further responsibility.

"Furthermore, the demands and obligations imposed upon me as President of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors are such that I can no longer risk any embarrassment which that body might suffer through the failure of anyone to rightly understand my position with relation to any booking movement.

"With sincere appreciation for the confidence which you were good enough to extend me, and with pleasant remembrances of our meeting at the inception of the Affiliated, I am,

"Very truly yours,
"(Signed) SYDNEY S. COHEN."

Mr. Cohen, when questioned regarding his resignation, said that the letter spoke for itself.

"I have nothing to add to it," he declared, "save that I am still deeply interested in the idea of co-operative booking. It is the biggest thought which has come into the industry within the past year, if carried out for the purpose of helping the exhibitor."

Mae Marsh Keeps Her Marriage Secret

Mae Marsh is married, it became known in Los Angeles on Tuesday, December 17. She was married in New York on September 21 to Louis Lee Armes, a former New York newspaper man, and now in the service of the United States Navy. He is in California on leave, and he expects to return to New York after the holidays. Mr. and Mrs. Armes have taken a home on Crenshaw avenue in Los Angeles. Following the wedding in New York and a brief secret honeymoon the couple came to Los Angeles, where Miss Marsh planned to resume her motion picture work. Since her arrival in the West, however, she has been ill with influenza, and is just now convalescing. When the rumor began to gain currency that the famous film star was a bride, a battery of newspaper men went to the home on Crenshaw avenue and asked direct questions.

"It was nobody's business but our own," said Mr. Armes in a genial way. "We just wanted to keep it to ourselves for awhile."

Mr. Armes was engaged in newspaper work in Los Angeles several years ago, being in the advertising department of the Morning Tribune.

A. S. Aronson, of Canada, Joins Goldwyn

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces that early in January A. S. Aronson, a motion picture executive known to many exhibitors of the United States and Canada, resigns as general manager of Regal Films, Ltd., of Canada, and joins the Goldwyn organization.

Mr. Aronson will be the resident executive head of one of Goldwyn's most important divisions, consisting of four offices serving some of the principal exhibitors of the nation. For the last three or four years Mr. Aronson has been associated with N. L. Nathanson in the large distribution and theatre-owning enterprises of the Regal Organization, with home offices in Toronto and branches in six cities of the Dominion.

Prior to going to Canada he was associated with the World Film Organization in New York. From the early days of Goldwyn he has been a friend of the Goldwyn Organization, and his capacities have led to his now coming into the company.

Universal Cites "Wonder" Man

Joe Brandt Steps in and Accomplishes Much and Gets Full Share of Credit—Built Up Exchanges

AROUND the Universal offices, at 1,600 Broadway, U. S. A., and in the various Universal exchanges throughout the country, it would seem that Joe Brandt is the wonder man of the age. Although he is not grabbing any of the front page space in the papers usually allotted to the President, he is nevertheless, to quote the press agent, making "some speed."

In announcing a new turn which Mr. Brandt's endeavors have taken, in behalf of Universal, that organization this week released a few words of appreciation for him as follows:

"When difficulties and perplexities, new or old, arise in the course of events in the Universal offices a cry is immediately raised for the assistance and services and counsel of Joe Brandt. And Brandt manages to respond. Emergencies find him invariably manning the breach. 'Brandt can do it' and 'Brandt will do it' are two familiar expressions among the Universal forces—in New York, in Universal City out on the Coast and in all the country that intervenes. All the faith, too, that they imply is justified, for no less familiar is the phrase, 'Brandt did it.'"

"A year ago, to cite a single instance, Brandt was called upon to take general charge of all the Universal exchanges. The hard task of systematizing exchange policies and operations, of following exchange activities through all their multitudinous details and phases, of directing exchange effort, of meeting and even of anticipating exchange requirements—these matters were all placed in Brandt's hands. And—'Brandt did it!' He did everything there was to be done; he did it quietly, efficiently, thoroughly. He did it all despite the fact that during the twelve months affairs were complicated by a dozen different emergencies never before encountered.

"This work is finished. Universal exchanges, as a result of Brandt's year of patient labor, stand today as models which exchange managers of other producing and distributing firms seek to emulate.

"And now Brandt turns to a new field. He has been called upon to undertake another difficult task—and a bigger task. Beginning with the first of the new year, Universal's assistant treasurer—for Brandt occupies that office as well—will devote himself to the promotion of the greatest cooperative system ever established in the history of motion picture exploitation. All of Universal's numerous departments will be coordinated in the new campaign.

"His work, nation-wide in scope, will take Universal's assistant treasurer on frequent and extended tours of the exchanges. Brandt will carry the campaign direct to all the leading cities and all the leading newspapers. The entire campaign, in all its details, involving the most advanced step thus far undertaken by any film producing company, will rest completely in Brandt's hands. Not a little of his time, too, will be spent in the studios at Universal City, where he will have much to do with the selection of serial scenarios particularly and with other essential phases of production.

"Mr. Brandt's assumption of these new duties means a most substantial step forward for Universal. It means, to state the matter briefly, increased cooperation for the exhibitor—the development of a new field of exploitation, and, what is of equal importance, its development in the thorough, vigorous, effective manner that is characteristic of Brandt.

"In his new capacity, the title of assistant treasurer still attaches to Brandt's name and, while he is putting his new policies into execution, he will continue, as heretofore, to discharge the duties of that important executive office as well."

J. W. Allen Is Paramount Exchange Systematizer

J. W. Allen, special representative—Department of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who earlier in the season thoroughly systematized the Cincinnati Exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, proceeded from Cincinnati to Cleveland and there repeated the process of systemization and selling.

During his stay in Cleveland he sold service first-run in the following cities: Cleveland, Akron, Youngstown, Marion, Bucyrus and Sandusky, Ohio, and in numerous smaller localities and many suburban accounts in the larger cities.

While in the Cleveland Exchange, he thoroughly systematized this branch in accordance with plans originated by Mr. W. E. Greene, managing director, and Mr. Al Lichtman, general manager, of the Department of Distribution.

Mr. Geo. W. Erdmann was appointed manager of the Cleveland Exchange by Mr. Allen. Mr. Erdmann has had a long experience in film exchange management and is proving a capable manager at the Cleveland Exchange.

Western Press Agents Storm New York

Western press agents of filmdom had a "good showing" on Broadway last week. No less than four publicity men from the confines of Hollywood disported about the once-again white way and viewed the tall buildings in wonderment.

They were Harry Carr, who puts pieces in the papers about Mack Sennett and his Paramount comedies—and who takes the stills of those bathing girls—W. E. Keefe, who is not an out-and-out press agent, his title being Production Manager for D. W. Griffith, but who supervises the publicity work of that organization; Carl Robinson, formerly publicity man for Charles Chaplin and now an ex-lieutenant; and Ken O'Hara, who used to send out stories about well known film players.

Messrs. Carr and Keefe came on from California together. Robinson has just been honorably discharged from the army, as has O'Hara.

Salesmen at Detroit Have Annual Dinner

The first annual salesmen's dinner under the auspices of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Detroit Board of Commerce was held Friday evening, December 20th, at the Detroit Board of Commerce. It was attended by about one hundred exchange managers, assistant managers and film salesmen, the purpose and object being to thoroughly discuss and understand the new trade rules which the association is putting into effect on the first of the new year. The dinner was at 7 o'clock, the business session following. There were a number of musical numbers.

J. E. Flynn, president of the Detroit organization, presided, and among the out-of-town guests were W. F. Barrett, vice-president of the Canadian Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, and J. R. Johnson, treasurer of the Cleveland Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers. Each speaker reviewed the progress of organization work in his respective territory and expressed themselves as being highly in favor of the work being done by the Detroit association. The complete program was as follows:

Introductory address, J. E. Flynn, president; "Transportation Charges," by H. K. Moss, manager Triangle Distributing Corporation; "Payments," by J. M. Duncan, manager of Vitagraph; "Contracts," by M. S. Bailey, manager Fox Film Corporation; "Changes in Bookings," by James Friedman, office manager Universal Film Exchange, Inc.; "Holding Film," by F. W. Gebhardt, manager Pathe Exchange, Inc.; "An Industry or a Game?" by Robert Cotton, manager World Film Corporation; "Cleveland Organization," by J. R. Johnson, Cleveland, Ohio; "The Problems of Booking," by G. Knox Haddow, assistant manager Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; "The Salesman's Perspective," by L. C. McConnell, special representative, World Film Corporation; "The Industry in Canada," by W. F. Barrett, Toronto.

During the coming year the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers will adopt stringent and drastic measures covering their business dealings with exhibitors, and they absolutely insist that exhibitors live up to all terms of contracts which they sign.

So successful was the first salesmen's dinner that the board has decided to make it an annual affair to take place during December.

A great deal of the credit for the success of the meeting was due to Harry Abbott, manager of the Detroit office of the Educational Distributing Corporation, chairman of the entertainment committee.

Oklahoma Exhibitors to Hold Special Meeting

A special meeting the Exhibitors' Organization of Oklahoma has been called by the Executive Board for Oklahoma City at the Hotel Lee Huckins, January 6-7.

The Oklahoma legislature will meet early in January, and this meeting of exhibitors will take the place of the regular February meeting.

Rothacker Starts Membership Campaign

For the purpose of enlisting new members from the Pacific Coast section, Waterson R. Rothacker, president of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, and chairman of the membership committee, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has started a campaign during the course of which he expects to interest every company in that section that is not now identified with the association.

Mr. Rothacker will leave for the Coast next week to make the preliminary arrangements for the campaign. Plans are now completed for a meeting of all the executive heads of the producing companies in Los Angeles.

Mr. Rothacker will be aided in this work by Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldwyn, David Wark Griffith, Jesse L. Lasky, Frank W. Garbutt, Winfield R. Sheehan, William Sistrone, Joseph W. Engel and others who are active in the councils of the organization. Walter J. Reynolds, secretary of the Producers' Association of Los Angeles, will, it is expected, assist in the movement.

Adolph Zukor is the ranking vice-president and acting president of the organization, as well as a director and chairman of the Producers' Division. David W. Griffith is a director and is chairman of the National Censorship Committee. Samuel Goldwyn and W. R. Sheehan are members of the board of directors and executive committee. These men expect to be on the coast at the time.

Nearly all of the large producing companies in the motion picture business are now represented among the membership of the Association, and there remains only a few that have not come in. The Producers' Division of the Association now numbers among its members the following: Arrow Film Corporation, Astra Film Corporation, Baumer Films, Inc., Biograph Company, Wm. A. Brady Picture Plays Company, the Bray Studios, Inc., Charter Features Corporation, Corona Cinema Company, Craftsman Film Laboratories, Crystal Film Company, Educational Film Corporation, Eclipse Film Laboratories, Erbographe Company, Evans Film Company, Famous Players Film Company, Fox Film Corporation, Gaumont Company, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Thomas H. Ince, Kalem Company, L-KO Motion Picture Corporation, Paragon Films, Inc., Pathe Exchange, Inc., Harry Rapf, Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Select Pictures Corporation, Selig Polyscope Company, Mack Sennett Comedies, Norma Talmadge Film Company, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Triangle Film Corporation, Christie Film Company, Vitagraph Company of America, Wharton Releasing Company, and World Film Corporation.

General Makes Changes

Frank E. Samuels, a well-known motion picture man of New York City, who was formerly General Film Company manager in Philadelphia, has been appointed a traveling auditor for that company. His work for the present will be on the Pacific Coast.

W. J. Clark Locates in New York

William J. Clark, President Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, to Direct Activities from Metropolis

WILLIAM J. CLARK, president of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and vice-president of Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, has resigned as president of the City Commission of Grand Rapids, Mich., to come to New York and direct the activities of Exhibitors' Mutual.

Mr. Clark became president of Exhibitors' Mutual upon the recent reorganization of the Mutual Film Corporation, when a group of exhibitors was announced as having acquired the ownership and control of the Mutual exchanges.

He resigned almost immediately as president of the Municipal Commission of the City of Grand Rapids in the middle of his two-year term, to take over the direction of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, which, under its new control, has announced the regular release of a one-feature production a week.

He entered the field of distribution as vice-president and general manager of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, which was organized last spring.

Early in November it was announced that exhibitor interests had acquired control of the Mutual exchanges to further carry out plans for an exhibitor owned, exhibitor controlled distributing organization.

"The exhibitor is the most substantial factor in the motion picture business," declared Mr. Clark in discussing the plan under which exhibitors own and control the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing organization.

"As the most substantial factor in the business it was but natural that he should seek to enter the field of distribution. The Affiliated idea worked out so splendidly that we decided to carry it one step further.

"There seems to be an impression within the industry that the Affiliated acquired the ownership of the Mutual Film Corporation and converted it into the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. This is completely untrue.

"Affiliated Distributors' Corporation and Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation are distinct and separate organizations, and while they are and will continue to be closely allied, they are and will remain independent. Affiliated has contracted with Exhibitors' Mutual to handle its releases through its exchanges, but Affiliated productions will be sold under the Affiliated plan by the various exhibitor booking corporations which are allied with it.

"The Exhibitors' Mutual is a co-operative organization in that its ownership is in the hands of exhibitors, but it will continue under exhibitor ownership to sell and distribute pictures under the exchange system.

"It will go further, in maintaining an exhibitors' advisory board, which will decide upon the policies of the company and advise upon productions released through its exchanges."

Official Commends the Industry

Director of Publicity of Liberty Loans for Treasury Department Praises Motion Picture Interests

IN his address before the Advertising Club of New York, in which he reviewed in detail the publicity and advertising campaigns of which he was in charge, Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity of the Liberty loans for the United States Treasury Department, gave the motion picture industry a large share of the credit for the success of the Fourth Liberty Loan.

"One of the most effective and unique contributions to the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign was made by the motion picture industry," said Mr. Wilson. "We sent requests to thirty-five of the leading stars to produce short films of about 500 feet in length. From each of these negatives we made 112 prints, giving us a total of nearly five thousand prints which were distributed through the channels of the motion picture exchanges so that each one of the 17,000 motion picture theatres in the United States was able to present a new Liberty Loan appeal each third night during the campaign.

"The only cost to the Government was the actual manufacturing cost of the prints, or about $20,000. The stars and producers actually spent more than $200,000 in producing these films, and their contribution, if the salaries of stars were taken into consideration, would have exceeded one million dollars. Through this film co-operation on the part of the motion picture industry we were able to provide animated appeals to the ten million persons who nightly visit motion picture theatres, at a cost per theatre of $4 for the entire campaign, or $1 per week per theatre."

Mr. Wilson referred several times to Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who, as chairman of the Fourth Liberty Loan committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, labored for the success of the plan of co-operation evolved by the committee.

Projection Association to Have Dance

A dance under the auspices of the International Projection Association will be held at the Burland Casino, Saturday night, January 18th, Westchester and Prospect avenues, New York City.

All city officials who have any connection directly or indirectly in motion pictures are also expected to be present. Many screen stars have already accepted the invitation to be present, according to report, and Prof. Henry M. Kielgast's Jazz Band will start the noise making about 7:30 p. m.

Washington Prosperity Normal

V. P. Whitaker of Select Says Outlook Is Excellent in Nation's Capital for Continued Good Business

DURING a visit to Select Pictures' home office, V. P. Whitaker, manager of Select's Washington branch, spoke encouragingly of the outlook for business in the future at the nation's capital and denied some of the rumors of backsliding conditions which recently have become current.

"Despite the fact that thousands of war workers have left Washington during the past month and are leaving every few days, the city is still above its normal population. This will remain true for so long a time to come that it seems foolish for anyone to state that conditions in Washington will recede to a prewar basis.

"Washington has been badly overcrowded—so badly overcrowded that life in the city was distinctly an uncomfortable existence. The cutting down of some of the larger emergency departments has only slightly relieved this congestion. Washington, a small sized city, which has often been spoken of as an overgrown town, finds its population covering thousands of citizens more than its physical accommodations were designed for.

"For years the city must grow and extend in order to try to overcome these conditions. And whoever heard of a growing city that was not prosperous?

"The ending of the war does not end the busy days for the capital of the United States—and the Mecca of world progress. Washington will continue to have thousands and thousands of visitors annually of those very classes who seek and demand the best in amusement.

"With a population which even in normal times has a higher percentage of leisure than that of any other American city, the war and postwar traffic at the nation's capital emphasizes this condition. There need be no fear that business in Washington will collapse. Amusement enterprises there are on a firm footing and have an honest and assured future.

"The opening of three new picture theatres of the higher type within the last two months is another indication of the firm belief in the continuance of Washington's prosperity as embraced by the three controlling factors in amusement enterprises there. I refer to the new downtown theatres just opened by H. M. Crandall, Marcus Loew and Tom Moore.

"It is generally expected that the opening of these splendid and most modern theatres in Washington's shopping district will exert a profound influence for better picture theatres throughout the entire district."

Goldwyn in Los Angeles Announces Plans

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Company, arrived in Los Angeles and immediately made some important announcement relative to Goldwyn plans and about the industry generally. He was accompanied to the West Coast by S. L. Rothapfel, perhaps the world's best-known exhibitor.

Fewer, but still better, Goldwyn pictures are to be made in the future, Mr. Goldwyn said. Goldwyn pictures have been steadily improving both in quality and popularity during the past twelve months, he said. The new plans of the company will give much longer time for production, with the result that greater care will be exercised in the making of pictures.

There will be a general organization of film interests along the line of more carefully planned production, and while it is possible Goldwyn may reduce its output of pictures, it intends to increase its list of stars, Mr. Goldwyn said. In verification of this statement he announced that, while en route to the Pacific Coast, he signed Will Rogers, well known in musical comedy and vaudeville, who will appear in special Goldwyn productions.

The signing of Rogers was unique. Mr. Goldwyn met the vaudeville star in Cleveland, where he was appearing in the "Follies." He will come West as soon as his engagement is completed.

He will bring with him his wife and children and, according to his present plans, he will make his home in Long Angeles for an indefinite period. His contract, it is understood, will cover several years.

Winfield R. Sheehan Having Successful Trip

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles for a stay of ten days. Mr. Sheehan's trip is made for two reasons—to study conditions throughout the country while en route, and to get closer in touch with conditions at the Hollywood producing plant, with the view of increasing the number of producing organizations in the West.

"The Fox Film Corporation is making plans for 1919 to be the biggest of its career, for we have gathered by my trip touching Chicago, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, and intermediate points, the general opinion that business for the theatre will be materially improved now that hostilities are ended," said Mr. Sheehan. "The foreign market for American-made films will be greater in the next year than ever before, due to peace in Europe. Russia and China offer a great field for our company, and during the year I expect there will be an intellectual awakening and that will create great business for the film industry of this country."

Definite plans of the Fox Company were not announced by Mr. Sheehan, but he emphasized the fact the future would see more productions made at the Hollywood studios of the company.

He is decidedly enthusiastic about conditions even in the face of tremendous losses caused by epidemics and feels positive that industrial conditions, which have materially increased the earning power of American people, will result in greater business for film theatres everywhere.

Territories on "Woman" Reported Selling

Maurice Tourneur's production, "Woman," is smashing all records in the remarkable way the various territories are selling, not only throughout this country, but throughout the world, according to Hiller and Wilk.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the New York Rivoli and Rialto theatres, while en route to the coast, is reported to have appeared before a big convention of exhibitors in Cleveland and earnestly asked them to aid the advancement of the photoplay by playing Mr. Tourneur's production, "Woman."

He had already announced, even before "Woman" had scored at his Rivoli theatre, that the production marked a new advance in the photoplay.

So impressed were Morrison, Beverstock & Co. of Cleveland that, immediately after Mr. Rothapfel's address, they purchased the Ohio territory for "Woman." Paragon, Inc., of Boston, has taken the New England territory, and the Independent Sales Corporation with offices at 130 West 46th Street, New York, has purchased the New York State territory.

Frank Gerson, Inc., also with offices at 130 West 46th Street, has taken northern New Jersey, the First National Exhibitors Exchange of Pittsburgh has taken western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and Tom Moore, the Washington exhibitor, purchased the District of Columbia, Maryland Delaware and Virginia.

R. M. Savini, of 63 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., has North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, and the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, of Detroit, have Michigan.

Hiller & Wilk, selling agents, report that the foreign territories are being disposed of as rapidly as the domestic ones. Already "Woman" has been purchased for Australia, the entire Far East, the Scandinavian countries, France, Switzerland, Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay and Mexico.

Lubin Recovers from Major Operation

Herbert Lubin, of the S-L Production and for some time identified with the Sawyer-Lubin enterprises, has recovered from an operation performed at Dr. Stern Sanatorium and left that institution this week for his home to rest before taking up his duties with the S-L Production. Mr. Lubin will leave shortly for Palm Beach where he will recuperate. During Mr. Lubin's absence Mr. Sawyer will supervise the work of placing the S-L Productions' latest picture, starring E. K. Lincoln.

Director Has Been Long in Amusements

Harry Revier, director of "What Shall We Do with Him?" the McClure-Worrell special, has long been engaged in the amusement business. Before entering motion pictures he had a number of vaudeville and theatrical enterprises.

Co-operation Between Producers and Exhibitors Is Keynote of Weekly Luncheon in Los Angeles—Rex Beach Also Speaks—Rothapfel Avoids Politics

CO-OPERATION between producers and exhibitors was the keynote of addresses made to Los Angeles exhibitors and film exchange men by S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York; Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Rex Beach, the author, at the regular weekly luncheon of the Theatre Owners' Association in Los Angeles, Wednesday, December 18th.

All of the speakers voiced the opinion the industry is in a chaotic condition, due to war, epidemic, and accompanying stringencies, together with failure on the part of the exhibitors and producers to co-operate, and lack of introduction of better presentation.

Faces Great Crisis

"The motion picture industry is facing the greatest crisis of its career, due to existing conditions, and the exhibitors and the business at large being in a rut which will be difficult to get out of," Mr. Rothapfel told the gathering of almost one hundred and fifty when introduced by President Frank MacDonald. "Exhibitors, exchange men and producers are all in this rut. The industry is in a chaos of uncertainty, panic, war, epidemic and hard times. You, the exhibitors, must make the change. Efforts have been made to dominate the motion picture industry, but all have failed. The producer first, and now the exhibitor. It can't be done, for the industry is too big. Dire failure will result if it should be accomplished.

"Every theatre man must make his theatre an institution, and not depend upon the attraction for this week to draw the people. He must build around his feature, creating an atmosphere and balancing the program so that it will be good every week in the year. The Rialto and Rivoli theatres to me are greater than any picture or star or story. Yet the picture is the foundation—the groundwork of the institution. Some have told me my music is greater than the pictures. You must add originality to your program, for it has been proven the fallacy of the showman of yesterday and today was and is 'Give the public what it wants.' This can't be done, because the public does not know what it wants. Many exhibitors of today are like a fellow outside a door with a plate waiting for someone to drop something in it—the exhibitors want the producers to give them each week a picture with a star and story that will create a following. The producers cannot do this, for there are not enough good pictures made by all producers to give a given exhibitor as many good pictures as he would need. Take the best pictures you can get, build your program with whatever other good material you can secure, thus adding an atmosphere, and you will make of your theatre an institution. You do not have to have wonderful marble palaces with golden domes and rich draperies to do this, for it has been demonstrated that a good showman can create an atmosphere in a barn. The most important is to have the environment for your feature, and to do this you must not let the remainder of your show go fishing.

Build Show Around Feature

"At the Rialto and Rivoli theatres we build our performances around the feature, making the feature incidental. In some instances we have saved it by the surrounding bill." Mr. Rothapfel quoted figures concerning results at his theatre. The record business, he said, was last Sunday, when "Arizona," the Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft, played to $4,650. He urged the theatre men to co-operate with their staff. "I pay my orchestra leader $25,000 per year. My chief operator $5,000 per year. The average operator $55 per week, and all others in proportion." Before he concluded Mr. Rothapfel sent a bombshell into the assembly by giving his reasons for resigning from the First National Exhibitors' Association.

"J. D. Williams, the manager of the First National," he said, "has sent broadcast the statement that I am against the star to prevent them from getting greater prices, and that this was the reason that I resigned. This statement is untrue. I refuse to play politics with my theatres, for I consider them institutions, and they come first. There are to be no intrigues or politics with them. Doug., Mary and Charlie are institutions. The stars are necessary for pictures. They earn every cent they get, and are worth more to the film industry than they receive because they are artists and they have lifted the plane of the industry."

In conclusion Mr. Rothapfel urged all exhibitors to go into their offices and pull down the blinds. "Get acquainted with yourselves, think for yourselves, and add something to your theatre that will make it distinctive and a credit to motion pictures. My ambition in life is to build something that will live after I am gone, and that is why I give my theatres the attention I do."

Goldwyn Urges Co-operation

"There must be a get together between the exhibitors and producer, and the latter's distributing organizations, or our industry, the fourth largest in the world, is doomed to failure," is the statement made by Samuel Goldwyn.

"On this trip with Mr. Rothapfel I have learned a great deal, and it is the greatest thing I have done since I entered the picture world. I have discovered there has been no progress for two or three years. The producers have accomplished great things. Wonderful theatres have been built, but the relation between the exhibitor and the distributor is in a dangerous and chaotic condition. Unless these two elements get on a basis that is on the level with each other, all we have done to create an industry will be lost.

"In other cities there are meetings of exhibitors for the purpose of gaining control to fix the prices of motion picture rentals. An exhibitor will say to the branch manager: 'I will pay you $25 a day for your picture, and that is all I will do.' This is very dangerous, for we have learned that the producer cannot dominate the field, neither can the exhibitor. What would happen if the producer had to meet these prices all over? Conditions now are not as good for the producer as they were five years ago. Then the average rental price was $50 per day, and it is less than that now.

"What we have got to do is to put truth into the motion picture industry. Now it is a good deal like the clothing merchant of the East Side in New York. He would ask $100 for an overcoat he would finally sell for half or less. A film salesman of many concerns now asks a price, and takes what he can get. This industry, the fourth of the nation, will go just like every other industry that does not build good will, and we can best do that by being honest, for it is a certainty there must be only truth in this business, or it will fail. I see the mistakes of my organization, and they apply to the industry. We must stop cheap publicity. The trade papers must tell only the truth, and eliminate the 'bull' and 'bunk.' Half of it is bunk in all publicity now, and so the exhibitor and the public do not know which half to believe.

Exhibitor to Make Stars

"Greater co-operation must be given. The exhibitor must help to create new stars. The Triangle did pioneering in this field, and they got all but money. The exhibitors did not help. In most instances when a celebrity is introduced to the screen, if there is indication of failure at the end of one or two days, the average exhibitor will be ready to cancel. They are not giving the producer backing to build new personalities for the screen. The Triangle men were told when Douglas Fairbanks first came out, 'King Baggot will get me more money than Fairbanks,' but the Triangle had faith in Fairbanks, and the exhibitors are now profiting by their expenses. The picture industry is in a very unhealthy condition. It is living on untruths and vanity, and I will give $10,000 to anyone who will prove to me that any of the big producing organizations have paid a dividend in the past two years. This is partially due to increases in cost. Cameramen were making $50 a month, and now they are receiving $200. Directors were paid $250 per week, and now getting from $800 to $1,000. They are earning it, for they have added to the business.

"The motion picture is the greatest art in the world. It stopped the war by ten years, and President Wilson says we kept up the morale of our Allies by showing pictures of United States preparation to counteract the German propaganda. Such a great industry as this, I think should get together. There should be less beating down of prices, and more co-operation given to help the producers. Some exhibitors have said, 'make fewer pictures, and better ones,' but if the producers did that, the daily change theatre could not live. The producers are making the best pictures they possibly can, and if the banks are to aid us as they have in the past, we must have undivided support by the exhibitors. We must get better stories, for you would starve on the present stories if it were not that the stories are greater. If you use good pictures without expensive stars, but have ones that have good stories, you are helping the producer, for today it is the star must have a good story, and a good cast to be successful. Many exhibitors kid themselves by placing signs over their doors which mean nothing.

Must Think Deeper

"Exhibitors must be deeper thinkers in the future. They must come to realize that every time a good picture is made, the industry is bettered. When I saw Griffith's 'The Greatest Thing In Life,' I was pleased, for he had bettered the industry, and thereby improved my circumstances. When Farrar was first brought onto the screen, I think the greatest benefit was given the industry up to that time. Her

'Carmen' brought the carriage trade that no other star could bring. So I say, co-operate with the producer and his distributors. We want to live and we want you to live."

After Rex Beach had learned there was dissension between the exhibitors and distributors or producers, he laughingly suggested the author dominate the industry and thereby bring peace. "I want to correct a mis-apprehension," Mr. Beach said, "regarding the author. All were thought of as alien enemies by the industry at large, but one or two producers have come to think of us as not guilty of treason. The author belongs to the industry as much as any other part, for the picture is nothing more than an illustrated story. A magnificent production cannot be made with a poor story, nor a good story made with poor production. We must get into the industry more of the better authors who are now writing stories for the press.

"Some exhibitors have voiced the opinion that war pictures are 'cold.' This is a mistake. There are going to be war pictures as long as you and I live. They will not be the same as those we have had, but this World war has been so great that it cannot be forgotten. There will be writings of all kinds, and there are bound to be plays and pictures. The war has a million phases, and there are as many dramas as there are men who went and women who stayed at home."

While en route to Los Angeles, Messrs. Rothapfel and Goldwyn stopped at several of the most important cities, their itinerary including Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco. In many of these places Mr. Rothapfel has spoken to exhibitors

Jewel Branch Managers Hold Conference

"Curley" Calvert of the Omaha exchange, S. J. Goldman of the Chicago exchange, Sam Cohen of the Albany exchange, and Manager Spry of the Boston Jewel department.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, entertained the visiting managers at dinner Xmas eve.

Pat Kearney Transferred to West Coast

Pat Kearney, formerly editor of Progress-Advance, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's house organ, has been transferred to the West Coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Kearney entered the film business several years ago as reviewer for the Motion Picture Mail, since which time he has been connected with publicity departments of several big companies.

His work on Progress-Advance has attracted much attention and he goes west with the best wishes of all his many friends.

Rowland Takes Shot at Star System

President of Screen Classics and Metro Also Thinks Pictures Should Be Fewer and Better—Maxwell Karger Discusses Future of Screen Drama

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., and Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro All Star Series pictures, this week added their Yuletide statements to those which have already been published regarding the future of the silent drama. Mr. Rowland took occasion to heartily condemn the star system as it is pursued by various of the larger companies, and asserted that the time is here for fewer productions, but better ones. Mr. Karger is of the opinion that foreign directors have added much to the development of the American screen drama.

In his arrangement of the star policy, Mr. Rowland insists in his announcement that the only way a film company can succeed in running its own business is to get away from the star milestone around the neck. "This," he declared, "is precisely what Metro and Screen Classics have done."

Keep People Away

Mr. Rowland further declared that many pictures being made today keep the people away from the motion picture theatres, instead of drawing them in. He uses this as an argument for fewer and better films. In announcing the policy of his company Mr. Rowland sets forth that fewer productions, but bigger ones, with stress laid upon the attraction value, will be the policy pursued during the coming season. He says that in almost all instances, with the exception of Nazimova, it has been demonstrated to him that the production has made the star rather than the star the production, and that it is now time for the manufacturers of pictures to run their own business in their own way, so that the business can be conducted at a profit.

Mr. Rowland said: "In our opinion the time has come when motion pictures must cease to be a game and become a business. Regardless of what others may do we have determined, after careful thought and a full analysis of the situation, upon a definite program of activity. This, briefly, embraces a policy of fewer productions, with bigger and better ones based on the play value and an excellence of production, a running of our own business at our own dictation, stepping out of any competitive bidding for billion dollar stars, and devoting ourselves solely to the making of as many great, big pictures as our production units are capable of turning out, and no more."

"We know what is going on in the field, we know that no money is being made out of the so-called programs, and very little out of the star attractions. We know that usually three or four productions make a star, rather than a star making the productions."

As Strong as the Stars

"The only chance a film company has for running its own business is to get away from the star milestone around the neck, because under the present conditions the so-called business organization can only be held to be as strong as the stars make it. In order to right this condition it is necessary to turn the method of operation upside down, so that the companies shall be permitted to spend their own money in their own way to provide productions for the public that will not ultimately kill the industry.

"Countless numbers of pictures are being produced today which are driving people away from the theatres and the entire industry is suffering from it, suffering to so great an extent that these pictures constitute the handwriting on the wall, and whether other producers and distributors in the industry heed this warning or not we purpose to do it."

"Our productions will be made with reference to the play, the cast, the scenarios, the directors, the title men and the studio equipment, for we believe that we have built up a wonderful organization which will provide the finest kind of pictures. It is toward this end that we have been working, and recent events have crystallized our determination into doing what may be regarded as racial steps."

Great Strides Forward

Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro All-Star Series Pictures and Screen Classics, Inc., super-productions in the first statement he has made within a year, says that the motion picture within the twelve months has made greater strides in an artistic direction than in any two previous years. Public taste has improved, he points out, and the producer, quick to note this improvement, has striven to satisfy it.

"From the standpoint of art," Mr. Karger says, "motion pictures have advanced amazingly. They are better in every way. They are better because the public is becoming more sophisticated and therefore more critical. The public taste has improved and the producer, quick to note this improvement, strives to satisfy it."

"One of the most helpful things in the artistic development of American screen productions has been the influence of the foreign director. He came to us steeped in the artistic traditions of the old world. He knew his old masters."

"On the other hand, the American director had a strong sense of drama and a technique thoroughly original and well adapted to our style of pictures. For instance, the "close-up" was his, the American "foreground shot" and "the cut back." He had something to learn, however, in his composition. Here the foreigner excelled. He could film scenes that looked like great paintings."

"And it didn't take long for the American director to adopt and apply the foreigner's bag of tricks. All of which has helped the photoplay in this country."

Room for Improvement

"The public is demanding an increasingly higher grade," said the director general. "And it's increasingly hard to find them."

"There has been a great advance," he said, "in the staging of photoplays. Our technical work is better. We are building settings with more attention to detail than ever before and quite regardless of the cost. We are going to the ultimate extreme to insure authenticity and the illusion of absolute reality. And, of course, in California we can get virtually any natural setting that could be required."

"There still remains one important phase of picture making that offers the widest field for improvement. That is the writing of sub-titles. Much has been done to better them, but they are still a long way from perfection."

"The sub-title and the spoken title frequently will spell success or failure for a production. This is especially true of comedies. It is not so difficult to write dramatic titles, although even these require the greatest care and continuity of ideas. The motion picture industry has its arms flung wide to receive the man who can write light, subtly clever titles to link up the kaleidoscopic and fleeting action of a comedy."

Within the past twelve months Mr. Karger has not only selected the stories, plays and books for over 90 Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., productions, in addition to many other manuscripts for future use of these companies, but has supervised the casting, general work, cutting and assembling of the pictures. Between times he wrote the novel, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," from which the Screen Classics, Inc., picture was made. This Marshal Foch of pictures is truly a human dynamo.

On the Quinn Letter

"Give Us Service"

[Editor's Note—Two contributions to the letter-writing controversy started by the J. A. Quinn letter are presented this week. Curiously, both writers disagree with the wail that "there are no good pictures" and set out to point out the real trouble in their opinion. "Service" is the predominating need, according to the interesting letter which follows, from C. W. Goodwin, of San Francisco, who adds to his signature the additional information, "One of the Army of 'Ima Small Exhibitor.'"]

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

There is one important factor that stands out as preeminent in the discussions in your valued columns by the prominent men of their respective crafts in the film industry, and may be interpreted as a remarkable coincidence in that they all AGREE there is something wrong, but disagree as to just where this evil exists and the remedy to be applied to remove it.

On the one side of this controversy we have the prominent producer, who is supplying the exhibitor with a product of exceptional merit and has surrounded this department with a corps of efficient and popular stars, directors, artists and writers, and spares no expense and effort to secure proper and available material for the full development of their respective talents and arts. On the other side we have the prominent exhibitor who has erected and equipped an establishment that is practically perfection, and is furnishing his clientele with every convenience and comfort that money can buy or intelligence can devise in order that they may enjoy to the fullest their evening's entertainment.

Generally speaking, and referring to the better class of producers and exhibitors, and by whose efforts the final judgment of the standard of the industry rests, THERE IS NOTHING WRONG WITH PRODUCTION; THERE IS NOTHING WRONG WITH EXHIBITING; THERE IS NOTHING WRONG WITH THE PATIENT AND AMUSEMENT-LOVING PUBLIC, who are pouring their millions into the coffers of the industry, taking into consideration, however, that while one can please all of the public some of the time and some of the public all of the time, it is humanly impossible to please all of the people all of the time. But that there is something wrong—radically wrong—it is AGREED, and it did not need this discussion and difference of opinion to convince us of the fact. That has been apparent for some time. Apparent by the general feeling of discontent, dissatisfaction and unrest among exhibitors generally. Evidenced by the glaring evils of promoting, speculation and profiteering that has become intimately associated with the industry, as well as the astonishing fact that several organizations that are to be considered as active competitors have entered the field of late and each have adopted different policies as a basis for the conduct of their operations.

"DISTRIBUTION," gentlemen; there is where the evil exists; there is where the remedy should be applied. Neglected, misguided and misdirected distribution. Anxiously waiting and longing for its helpmate and associate, "SERVICE," and without which no enterprise or industry can hope to attain that peak to which it naturally aspires and to which we as partners and loyal enthusiasts know the film industry can attain, "SUPREMACY" in the industries of the world.

Not that service as may be defined as the product or service of a company; not that service that might be illustrated by an act of courtesy or politeness and which is not only received and as a natural course expected in other lines of business endeavor, but, if necessary, demanded. But "SERVICE" in all that the name implies; that indefinable something that is at all times apparent and in evidence and still is not discernible. That centralizing influence that is instrumental in the opening of and continuance of an account, and tends to cement that cordial relationship of loyalty and friendship absolutely essential in the business conduct of buyer and seller. That vital and important factor that is of inestimable value to both exhibitor and producer and still, in a monetary sense, costs either nothing.

"DISTRIBUTION," there is where the evil exists, and which YOU, Mr. Producer, introduced at the very inception of the industry. YOU who are not only encouraging, but actually inviting, additional evils. YOU who are making no apparent effort to remove them, but by the very methods by which you are operating are promoting their growth. We fully appreciate what you are giving us in the way of meritorious productions, admire you for and congratulate you on what you are doing in this branch of the industry; but WAKE UP, brush the cobwebs of obscurity from your vision, get a shovel—a steam shovel would be quicker and more effective—and remove those evidences of evil and incompetency that are gnawing at the very vitals of the various organizations. What are you doing to offset the glaring evidence of overproduction? What preparations are YOU making in the way of fortifying your organization against the advent of England and France, and possibly other foreign countries, all of whom are to be considered as serious competitors in the importing and exporting of film. Stop crying over spilled milk. Quit wailing "LET GEORGE DO IT." Tomorrow is another day. The sun is shining brightly, the birds are chirping merrily, the flowers are blooming gloriously, and YOU are SLEEPING SOUNDLY. WAKE UP! GET BUSY! The evils are apparent, their location is evident, and the remedies are simple and easy.

Respectfully,

C. W. GOODWIN.

"Plenty Good Ones; Too Many Mediocre Ones"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I read with all interest the discussion regarding the kind of pictures and venture to add my opinion to the stream flowing through the News.

I cannot agree with some of my brother exhibitors. As far as I am concerned, while I have to rely on my own judgment in buying, I intend and use every endeavor to get the kind of pictures my patrons like—not what may suit me. I am at the door when my audiences leave and I hear what they say.

I do not consider that strict adherence to plausibility is essential. For instance, one writer speaks of "A Romance of the Redwoods" as bad because of the ending not being plausible. I played this picture, and the "punch" at the end—the new situation, the unusual idea—made it go over big. The same way with "The Hell Hound of Alaska." The unusual ending—the "punch" I speak of—made it go over here.

What I object to more than anything else is the easy running, average love story—the kind the office girl can write—with no originality, no "punch"—the kind that makes you feel that you have wasted an evening reading a Laura Jean Libby novel. There are so many of them, too—why, the Lord only knows. They may be put on with a good cast and with all imaginable scenic excellence, but just the same they are no good, in my opinion.

Take a picture like "The Spreading Dawn" and you have the love interest—plenty of it, but you also have the unusual, and your audience goes away enthusiastic about the picture. There are many more. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "The Fair Barbarian," "Ruggles of Red Gap," for instance—all of them gave splendid satisfaction to my audiences—and, as far as I am concerned, that is all I want.

There are plenty of good pictures—but so many more mediocre ones. We do not need more production, but we do need the junking of half, or more than half, of the films on the market.

But a discussion such as you have inaugurated cannot help doing

The Exchange's View

"What's the Price"

By C. J. BRYANT

Manager New Orleans Exchange First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

"HOW much will it cost me?"

Can any exhibitor deny that this is not the first question he asks of a film salesman when he is approached for a booking? It is an expensive question. It has cost hundreds of exhibitors thousands of dollars. It is a luxury of the first water, tax free. It is the parent of countless "for rent" signs, and it has cost the public almost as heavily as it has the theatre owners.

Invariably, certain exhibitors in this and many other territories will say, when they are told the rental price of a production, "too much." They do not arrive at that conclusion through reasoning. Possibly, once, in the long ago, they did stop to reason out the earning possibilities of a release based on its rental price, and decided that too much money was asked by an exchange. Now, however, it has become a habit. And they say it automatically.

The fellows who exercise this pretty little nicety as a business expression would get a terrible jolt if any one, and particularly an exchange manager, told them that it was a razor edged knife that is slowly but surely slitting their commercial throats.

Nor is the "how much" habit typical of small exhibitors exclusively. It applies equally to many of the large theatre operators. But the harm in it is greatest for the small town exhibitor. In the larger cities the possibilities of patronage from a transient location will often influence an exhibitor in his judgment of a rental price. But in the smaller towns, with only their regular patrons to depend upon, the exhibitors show decided tendencies toward playing safe by booking cheap features, and this at the expense of large profits.

This is not an argument for higher rentals. No exchange with the interest and welfare of exhibitors sincerely at heart—and the modern branch manager knows that the good will of exhibitors in his territory is his greatest asset—will purposely attempt to overcharge an exhibitor for a production. But the exchange executive does know, as a rule, the approximate earning capacity of his subjects, and the rental prices are graded according to age based upon the needed maximum gross rental receipts.

Exhibitors can book features for as low as $5 a day. Perhaps they make $10 or $15 profit at this price. The subjects which they can buy for so low a figure cannot be exceptional, nor are the prints apt to be in good condition.

As against this, let us presume that an exhibitor who has been using this class of film is prevailed upon to book a production which costs him $70 for two days. His house will seat four hundred people. His average admission price is ten cents. The local population is about four thousand. This picture is really better than average. It can be rated by him as a good special attraction. Its quality merits an increase in the admission price. But the exhibitor does not figure on the quality of it as the reason for boosting the admission. That rental of $35 is the necessity for charging his patrons more. The item of screen quality is relegated to second place. So the admission is boosted to fifteen cents. He adds to his expense by investing about $15 in newspaper advertising, window cards and possibly two twenty-four sheet stands.

This gives him a total investment of $85 for two days, with a population of four thousand to draw from to fill four hundred seats at fifteen cents.

The first day's receipts aggregate $90, or the equivalent of six hundred paid admissions. He is in possession of a profit of $5, or about one-half of what he would nominally make on the day with a $5 picture, with his service and advertising charges for two days taken care of. Whatever he does on the second day will be profit. The production has entertainment value, and overnight there is some talk about it by people who were patrons on the first day. The result is that on the second matinee and night, allowing one show in the afternoon and two complete shows at night, he plays two capacity houses, or eight hundred admissions at fifteen cents. Deducting nominal house overhead of $29 a day for two days, he makes a net profit of approximately $85.

Of course this is theory, to an extent, but it has been done, and is being done, by exhibitors who are awake to possibilities, and who do not substitute "how much" for "what can I do to put it over."

Perhaps an exhibitor cannot do this on an average of more than once a week, but he can so manipulate his bookings for the remaining time that he protects himself against outright losses which would eat too deeply into his profits on better-than-ordinary attractions.

Mention higher rentals to some exhibitors, and they immediately declare that they will have to boost their prices to get it back. And that, they swear, is impossible. Their patrons won't stand for it. But they do seem to be convinced that their patrons will tolerate a consistent program of ordinary or less than ordinary productions, just because the exhibitor can buy them cheaply, and cannot lose much if he does lose at all.

The motion picture public is changing in its attitude toward the screen. It wants better and bigger pictures. For evidence of this witness the results of many of the big specials released within the last year by the various distributing concerns. These specials invariably played to higher admissions. But they gave the public a value in proportion to the increased prices they paid to see them.

The successful, growing independent exchanges of today have a purchasing policy which contains an example of method that exhibitors could adopt to their own advantage. When an independent exchange is offered a feature for its territory the first consideration is not the price, but the quality of the picture. Will it be a box office success? Can exhibitors book it to a profit? Will it appeal to the public? Has it got any particular screen value? With these elements to its credit, it constitutes a "good buy." Then comes the question of price. The exchange manager knows pretty well what he can realize in gross rentals from his territory. Accordingly, he knows to within a few dollars of what he can afford to pay for it, and be sure of a profit.

The exhibitor who reasons out his booking problems along similar lines will rarely pick a "lemon." But when his judgment of a picture is derived from the rental price asked of him, he is almost always certain to miss his target.

It is not entirely a proposition of merit in a production which makes money for the exhibitor. A release must have quality to warrant a good rental, but when the exhibitor expects his patrons to flock to his box office in droves with no encouragement other than the fact—about which they know nothing and care less—that he is paying a better than usual price for the picture, he rarely makes anything like a good profit.

The really successful showman, to my mind, is the man who can take the average picture, tear its story to pieces, analyze it, study it from all angles, and then pull out of it the things which he knows will most appeal to his patrons, and then let that information or "dope" be the basis of his advertising and publicity campaign. He seldom loses money on a booking. Perhaps there is only one scene or situation in the picture with the kind of action or screen material most preferred by his patrons. But he digs in, finds that one situation, and plays it up to the maximum. He does not need to promise anything wonderful. He does not risk public confidence by using a lot of adjectives and superlatives. He simply "merchandises" the picture from an angle which he knows will appeal.

good. If it will help the exhibitor develop a little backbone and quit quietly taking what is handed him, it will be worth while.

Toronto Paper Over the Top

Daily News Gives an Excellent Example of What Can Be Done by Getting the Smaller Ones In

WHEN we were commenting on the situation in Kansas City a couple of weeks ago we pointed out the large number of theatres that advertise regularly, both daily and Sunday, and found that there were thirty-one out of fifty that were using one of the newspapers. But it remains for our sister country to the north to beat this record, for we have just received from Toronto newspapers showing fifty-one out of a total of seventy houses using space.

Once before we called attention in these pages to the splendid Photoplay Calendar that was published each Saturday by the Toronto Daily News, but now it has grown marvelously until it all but fills a solid page, as the reproduction opposite shows. It is probably the best example of the directory style of advertising that can be found anywhere, and we haven't the slightest doubt that this is a valuable feature to the newspaper as well as a highly profitable arrangement for the theatres.

Toronto is a city of 376,538 and is ranked as an excellent motion picture center. There is only one Sunday newspaper published there, the advertising centering, therefore, in the Saturday afternoon editions. The theatres themselves are not allowed to show on Sundays. The News has begun its hearty co-operation with the motion picture houses since this series of articles was started, and we must say that the newspaper and the theatres have both shown how well co-operation will work out when there is sincerity of purpose on both sides.

Forty-nine theatres are represented in this Photoplay Calendar in the Saturday issue and in smaller space every other day during the week. Loew's and Shea's Hippodrome use separate display space. But the theatres that advertise under the reduced rate in the Calendar are not given representation either in the reading matter or in engraving. It would add very much to the interest of the readers of the News for the paper to devote at least a page of matter to general photoplay news in the Saturday issue. It would be impracticable to give notices of any length to the theatres using the Calendar, but the aim should be to print matter of general interest that will help all of the houses.

There are only sixteen downtown theatres in Toronto, and that means that the bulk of them have to appeal to the neighborhood. We have touched on this neighborhood appeal so often that repetition now would be out of the question except that here is such a splendid opportunity to show how the plan does work. And remember that we keep repeating the statements that we make here because we want you to take these articles to your newspaper and urge them to give you the same sort of co-operation that the leading papers in other cities are affording. You have here evidence that it pays a newspaper to go after the smaller houses as well as the big downtown theatres.

Naturally, the newspapers are wont to depend on the advertising of the big theatres to support their motion picture departments. They figure that these houses have their own advertising writers, that they lay out their space allotments well in advance and that the newspapers will not have to worry about either soliciting the business or collecting the bills. Unquestionably that is the main reason why most newspapers do not make any serious effort to get the neighborhood managers. And it is also too true that many managers of the smaller houses are so lax in their business methods that they forget about sending in their changes of copy and also that quite a few of them don't remember when their checks are due.

The writer of these articles has been through the newspaper game. He has seen motion picture advertising from the point of view of the exhibitor and that of the publisher of the paper. And it is only when real co-operation comes that there can be real results achieved. If there were real local organizations of exhibitors in each community and they would band together and agree to do their part by the newspaper that affords them the right sort of treatment, there would be no trouble. But this is impracticable in most cases, and therefore the burden necessarily falls upon the newspaper, and it is largely due to the intelligence with which the paper carries out this work that success or failure comes.

We are insistent that accounts of motion picture doings are a part of the news of the day. We believe that with the millions that are attending the photoplays more people are interested in the silent drama than in any other one thing—far more than in baseball, prize-fighting, the sports, or even fashions, because in all of these things there is a class appeal and in the motion picture there is the big, popular urge. Therefore it is up to the newspaper to take the initiative, not alone because of the advertising revenue that will come in, but because it is filling one of the missions that it ought to fill in covering the territory so far as motion pictures are concerned. It cannot be a hundred per cent newspaper that fails to do this.

We haven't the slightest doubt that when the special advertising man that the Toronto News put on this work started out he was met by the excuse from fully fifty per cent of the theatres that they could not afford to advertise. They pointed out to him that they had a strictly neighborhood appeal, that they were getting all the people that they could get and that they could not afford to spend money in the hope of competing in the slightest degree with the larger houses. We are not in the confidence of that advertising solicitor, but we know that was the experience we had when we undertook similar work for a newspaper. But it is a peculiar thing that, once you get these neighborhood managers in the habit of advertising, they remain steady customers of the paper—that is, the men who are showing real showmanship and who are trying to keep their theatres up to the notch.

One trouble that the newspaper has with these exhibitors has been proven in a number of cities. To get advantage of the special rate it is necessary for the papers to ask for a contract for a specific term. After a couple of weeks' advertising the theatre manager imagines that there have been no results and he decides to drop out, regardless of his contract, and the easiest way to him appears to be to fail to send in his advertising copy. Of course, the newspaper is justified in such cases in printing "special feature bill" or any other generality that it desires and expecting to collect on the account. And it can. There is one New York newspaper today that made similar contracts and that is carrying some twenty or thirty theatres that do not send in their programs. Of course, the newspaper is within its rights.

We keep repeating:

Co-operation is real when it comes from both sides with a whole heart.

You may as well realize that to do the biggest amount of business that you have to advertise, no matter where your theatre is located.

And the newspaper has to realize that the only way it can make advertising worth while to the theatre is for it to take the lead, to assume the guidance and to furnish the sort of service that makes advertising all the more essential.

Now the plan that is followed by the Toronto News consists in printing the chart in the Saturday issue. This gives the bill for the entire week. In addition to this, there appears daily in the paper advertisements of each of the theatres for the specific days. These run five agree lines deep and are devoted mainly to the feature attraction, giving the name of the theatre, its location, the star and the title of the picture. And while we are touching on the daily co-operation of the star we want to call your attention to the manner in which this is handled. Two full columns are devoted to the combination of the reading matter and the advertising. The reading matter does not consist of reading notices for the theatres, but general news of the industry. It would be impossible to give a few lines to each theatre, and therefore the paper does the proper thing in making this matter of interest to all motion picture goers. We are sure that these columns are looked for each day by thousands of Toronto people.

But, to return to the remarks about the "chart" and daily advertising plan. The newspaper should supply blanks to the theatres, covering a full week, in which may be filled in the attractions for the different days. This should be mailed far enough in advance so that the material will be at hand for the "chart," and from this the photoplay editor, or the advertising man who is handling this matter, can readily make up the advertisements for the different days. The newspaper cannot expect the smaller theatres to send in their advertising daily. We know that they won't do this, but if the whole thing is in the newspaper office in ample time the trouble is solved, and only in the case of a last minute change in bill is the exhibitor even required to use the telephone.

In handling this sort of business the newspaper must realize that it is dealing with men who have not advertised before, who are not familiar with either the pulling power of advertising or the mechanics of it. If the newspaper can get a theatre to advertise for a couple of months, it is pretty sure to have a steady customer; but it is unfortunate that some of them, after having signed the contract, will try to drop out before they are well started. And we want to say right here that we would not advise any theatre to advertise merely for a couple of weeks, or even a couple of months. It is the cumulative power of advertising that counts. We may well agree with you that you have been advertising for a couple of months and that you have been unable to see the direct benefits of it. Naturally, it is hard to say to that exhibitor that he has to keep this up to get the full results, but it is nevertheless true, and the newspaper man who is going to handle this matter correctly has to be diplomat enough to get his contract and then get it lived up to.

The writer had a noteworthy experience of this sort with one of the larger neighborhood theatres in a certain city. The manager of this house signed a contract for six months and after a couple of weeks he stopped sending in his program. A last moment call on the phone for his copy for the "chart" brought the information that advertising was not paying him and that he had decided to drop out. Naturally this was not permitted and so we did the next best thing and called up the various exchanges and so secured the bookings of this theatre for the coming week. They were correct as they stood, but at the last moment he had a chance to get a special attraction for a Thursday, laid his regular booking on the shelf and put on the special. Naturally the advertisement of that day carried the announcement of the regular booking.

This man had said that advertising did not pay him. Quite by chance it happened to be that very Thursday night that we called on him to try to straighten matters up. He was as mad as a hornet. "Look what you've done," he cried. "I've had two hundred angry patrons here tonight because your paper advertised that picture and I have something else booked." Our newspaper had kept the faith with him, had done the best it could under the circumstances when he failed to send in his bookings. He had canceled the star that was due to appear that night because he thought that the special was a bigger attraction, yet he had hundreds kicking because they did not get a chance to see the star that they had come to see. Our only answer could be:

"And you say that it doesn't pay to advertise? Where did all these people get the idea that so and so was to appear at your theatre? Do you think our paper brought them?" And that was the end. That manager is advertising today and you couldn't keep him out of the newspapers if you stood at the business office window with an axe.

And so we say to the smaller theatres, to you who have never advertised: Make up your mind that you are going to give it a real trial. Furnish your newspaper with your matter in ample time. Because you do not see your receipts doubled the first week, don't come to the conclusions that the only thing to do is to try to duck the bargain. Keep on coming back day after day and you are as sure to find that advertising pays you as you are that the sun is going to be around about somewhere before the week is out.

And to the newspaper we say: Here you have a man who doesn't know all about the advertising game. Probably these five agate lines a day don't mean much to you, but always remember that you are developing a potential big advertiser. Always remember that it is worth your while to go out of the way to show him, and that the little things that you know how to do will work for his interest and make for him permanent prosperity and a steady customer for you. And remember, too, that there is a big news interest in these announcements—that this motion picture directory is going to make your newspaper a necessity in thousands of homes.

These remarks are inspired by the showing of the Toronto News. It has certainly gone far. When we first printed its directory there were only a few theatres represented and now the majority are in. We haven't the slightest doubt that these are going to increase, and certainly those theatres that do not come in are overlooking a big opportunity. We would like to see the example of the Star followed in most of the cities. It shows what can be done.

Go thou and do likewise.

Attractive Program Helps Offset the Lack of Newspaper Aid

DOWN in New Orleans, where the newspapers once did more for the photoplay than in nearly any other city in the country, the dailies have apparently taken the other track and among other things have recently doubled the price on motion picture advertising. One of the results has been that the theatres have correspondingly reduced the space that they had been using and are depending largely on other exploitation media.

Strand theatre, one of the handsomest houses in the country and the gem in the constellation of Saenger Amusement Company enterprises, is putting much of this weight on the program. It is now printing weekly a twenty page 6 x 9 booklet, which not only contains the two bills for the week, but announces coming attractions. There is also gossip about the pictures and the players and a puzzle corner that results in the program being preserved. Advertising more than pays for the publication.

Recently the Strand abandoned the policy of using a standard cover and now it employs on the front cover the picture of some star who is to be seen the following week. In the case of the one reproduced here the Saturday Evening Post effect has been secured with the Charles Ray picture. The Caruso-Chaplin number carried the pictures of both of these players, one behind the other, and also got the Post style.

While theatres in the larger cities realize that they have to do newspaper advertising to reach the public, programs do help a great deal when they are properly gotten up. In the case of the Strand there is something that is attractive in appearance and something that will be kept.

Making the Box Office a Real Asset

Stage displays at Shea's Hippodrome celebrating the surrender of the German fleet and the victory of the Allies

By Harold B. Franklin

Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

IT is a peculiar fact that in building a theatre the box office is one of the last things thought of. The motion picture theatre evolved a new idea when the box office was placed in the middle of the lobby, almost on the street. It has a psychological effect on the public. It makes sure of the patron—don't give him much chance to hesitate.

Don't let your box office attendant be grouchy, slouchy, irritable or mean tempered. It is here the patron gets his first introduction to your theatre. Exhibitors will find it well worth while to start their patrons into the theatre feeling in good humor and with a smile. One of the best ways to do this is to have the "smile producer" in the box office. Whether just mere men or a suffragette, the one who sells the ticket should have as his or her motto, "Keep them Smiling." There is nothing that brings forth the old grouch quicker than a dispute at the box office, and if one takes place and the patron side of the argument really does come into your show, it is a good bet that he is not going to like it, no matter how good. Exhibitors should insist on having sunny dispositions in the box office.

It is not necessary to have "the belle of the town" in the ticket dispensary, but it is necessary to have "the jolly good fellow" (male or female) there. A "smile with every ticket" is as good a premium as any exhibitor can give. Some theatres employ ticket sellers who seem ready to bite the nose off every one who comes to the box office. The longer these "joy killers" remain the quicker the bankruptcy petition will be filed.

Some time ago K. C. B., a famous writer on one of the metropolitan dailies, was inspired to write a verse, because the cashier at the Rialto theatre smiled and said "Thank You" when he bought a ticket.

At Shea's Hippodrome the cashier is able to give the patron almost any information desired. She has a copy of the time schedule and can tell anyone just when any particular picture will begin. Two box offices are used on "big days" causing as little inconvenience as possible to the public in purchasing tickets.

The motion picture theatre has really paved the way for a courteous box office. In the so-called legitimate theatre, little if any courtesy is shown the patron. It is as though one were buying a railroad ticket. The "treasurer" in most instances acts as though he were condescending to sell one ticket.

It is a good thing to know that your patrons come because they "prefer" your theatre. Courtesy is an asset that no theatre can afford to be without. Every employe should be proud of "their theatre," and it is a good plan to make your employes feel that they are as much a part of the theatre as you are. This sense of responsibility creates a desire to assist. Let your box office attendant be a model for the rest of the staff. Your cashier should feel that it is up to him or her to show the way. A good cashier will never "guy" patrons, give flippant answers nor laugh at the mistake of the patron. The cashier will try especially to please the grouch. It is an easy thing to please those that are generally always satisfied.

Mr. Exhibitor or manager should realize that it is his own fault if patrons go away displeased. No one blames the cashier or usher. Everything that is done in your theatre merely reflects your ability for the job.

No doubt, patrons are often very trying, but it is good business to meet that class of people with unfailing patience. Because the patron is irritable does not justify you to imitate him.

A good cashier can make the patron feel that he or she is going to have the most enjoyable time imaginable, and vice versa.

display from the Strand theatre of that city showing much improvement, and here is another one that is far better yet. In fact, it is just about an ideal advertisement so far as covering the field is concerned.

Now most managers would have advertised this as a "grand triple bill" or something of the sort, but Manager Charles H. Williams did the one proper thing to do and picked out the one picture to play up strong and let the others come along as incidental. Now the Strand is appealing to a high class patronage and there is tone to every line of this display.

There are clever selling arguments on each picture. It couldn't be surpassed in the space—nine inches across three columns.

Fighting is over; cut out the camouflage.

Worst Epidemic Ever Known Sweeping The Country From Coast To Coast; Contagious Nene Can Escape It; Incurable But Not Fatal

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Another epidemic that is causing medical men much anxiety on account of its incubation is sweeping the entire country. Its origin is not exactly known. Doctor Mirtho, a French army surgeon, in his report, states that his first cases were German soldiers, prisoners from the front line trenches. They communicated the disease to our boys, quarantine measures were adopted with no results. French medical authorities claim there is absolutely no cure for this disease, which they have named Lachentia. There are no two cases of this and American physicians are as much at sea over the malady as were their French contemporaries. American physicians admit the disease to be incurable, with very few fatalities.

The symptoms are peculiar. In mild cases the patient feels uneasy, restless, and emits a peculiar noise, which is a low, continuous, secondary symptoms appear accompanied by a nervous jumpy sensation in the limbs and feet, also convulsions with arms and hands, after a few minutes the third stage of the malady appears. The patient has violent contortions of the face, emitting a loud noise, shaking of the sides and violent expulsion of air from the lungs. The attacks last from a few seconds to an hour and a half. You can't escape it. You will know that you have the disease as soon as you laugh at Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" at the Schade Theatre for three days, beginning tomorrow.

was the sort of a stunt that he used with the showing of the new Chaplin picture, "Shoulder Arms." Now the "flu" had hit his city hard, and the theatres had been closed so that the greater trend of the conversation was about the "flu." Now you know how, while the epidemic was raging, you read all of the patent medicine advertisements and wondered if they were really a sure cure. And you also are familiar with the type of patent medicine advertisements in which the medicine people try to imitate the text reading matter of the paper.

So following this style Mr. Schade proceeded to insert a series of these humorous talks, all with the "flu" as the background and never mentioning the Chaplin picture until the very end. It must have gotten lots of laughs and have brought business.

This was in addition to the regular and generous display advertising which the Schade did daily.

A "diamond in the rough" would never stop a crowd in front of a jewelry store.

SAVOY theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., certainly overdoes the use of "Goldwyn" in this display. We believe in theatres making prominent the name of the producer where the name means something, but there is no reason in the world to overdo it, as is the case here. When the theatre used the line "It's a Goldwyn picture" it did properly, but the repetition of the word in the border leaves the impression on the average reader that this is about the only thing to commend Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat."

If you will read over this display you will see that this display deliberately ignores every selling point of the picture, with the exception of the statement that Miss Farrar is a star of the Metropolitan. Advertisements of this character leave the impression upon us that the man who wrote them did not stop to take the trouble of finding out what the pictures were about, of putting over the selling appeal. And if you do not know first what the appeal of the picture is, you certainly are not going to be able to put up much of an argument to the public.

ENACTED WITH A DASH AND STRODE THAT WILL SET YOU WILD WITH ENTHUSIASM, PULSATING WITH THE SPIRIT OF THE ENDLESS PLAINS—EVERY INCH CROWDED WITH ACTION THAT WILL LINGER LONG IN YOUR MEMORY ENTICING IN THE DEPTHS OF STERLING MEMORY

THIS work of the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., is one of the very best specimens that we have seen, except for one little thing. We would certainly have omitted the bottle of liquor, the poker chips and the cards at the bottom of the display. Now it does not feature prominently and it is apparent that the designer merely brought these in to round out the display.

You must remember that there is a certain element in every community that objects to pictures in which they believe that drinking and gambling are featured, and this is not the case with "Three Mounted Men." These details were not needed to carry out the spirit of the production, because this had already been mighty well done. In drawing advertisements and in writing them it is always well to bear in mind something that we keep repeating to you: "Put in your display everything that is essential and then stop." Of course, there is always a temptation to add just a few flourishes to round things or to fill a particular little nook, but when you start to doing more than you ought to do there is generally trouble ahead.

The display is 13½ inches across four columns.

Advertising is as essential to your success as the barrage was to our boys "Over There."

WEEK after week we note the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, doing things "different," which means that the readers of the Sunday newspapers there are always watching for the displays. This one, 11 inches across four columns, is one of the most striking that we have seen in a long time and will certainly get the attention of everyone. It belongs in the "curiosity arousing" class, but it is by no means a "teaser" advertisement. The name of the star is played sufficiently strong to attract her special following, and then the reproduction of the poster of the "Merry Models" is going to bring all of those who want to find out what the picture is about to the theatre. And the best part about this is that the advertisement is fully borne out by the production, and the theatre cannot be accused of using anything of the fake to get the people. This is one grave danger of any of the freak advertising, for the temptation is strong to step a little over the limits of fact, and this should never be done, not even by suggestion.

It's not the weather—probably the atmosphere.

AS we have pointed out in these columns on a number of occasions the advertising of the Albany theatres is generally poor, because of the fact that most of the theatres insist on displaying the attractions for the whole week with equal emphasis, the result generally being a confusing display without punch. Therefore we hail with unusual interest this one of the Clinton Square theatre, which occupies 9 inches across six columns.

Especially since this was a return engagement of "Shoulder Arms," we believe that the theatre did perfectly right in playing up the name of the bride to the limit. And for almost the first time since we have been studying the advertising of Albany theatres we find the bill for the last half of the week given exactly the sort of display that it should have. We hope that the Clinton Square is going to keep up this good work. Albany theatres as a whole need this excellent example.

Motto for the new year—To-day and "every day."

ORPHEUM theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, did the right thing in not sacrificing the selling argument of "The Woman Who Gave," even in order to use striking cuts, and at the same time it has left plenty of white space around the lettering. We would have played the name of the star stronger than the title in this case, especially since the face of Miss Nesbit is so small in the cut. But it is very evident that the designer of this display knew that the character of the story was the appeal that the picture had to his patrons, and when that is taken into consideration it can be seen why a merely pretty picture was sacrificed and instead there was used a scene cut.

And there is a point that is to be remembered right here. Never use a scene cut unless you explain its meaning with the selling argument. Most scene cuts supplied are unfortunately mighty poor, and the exhibitor who cannot afford to have his own made will be safer in using a straight picture of the star. Naturally to bring out the character of the production, as well as the star's name, is the ideal arrangement.

Instead of merely making a resolution, get resolution to be a progressive.

WE distinctly do not like any advertisement that is misleading. It is unfortunate that many of the producers have set examples that have been followed by the exhibitors in putting into their advertising some thing that does not appear at all in the picture. Now while the reduction is very great here, the scene at the right of this display shows a naked woman seated on a rock at the edge of a pool. As far as the symbolism is concerned, this is all right, but there are a lot of people who are going to be left with the impression that is a part of the picture. Some of them are going to stay away on that account, and others who do go are going to be disappointed because the clothesless female is not shown on the screen.

Artistically this display is all that could be asked, but we believe the Holman theatre, Montreal, would have gotten bigger business if it had really gone into the selling argument of this picture. One of these was the all-star cast, and that pulling power has been entirely sacrificed. Space used is 8 1/4 inches across four columns.

KEEP YOUR FILES

A Little Simple Indexing Will Save You a Lot of Trouble

WITHIN the past week we have received five inquiries which have been answered in the columns of the NEWS, either in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau, the Complete Plan Book or in the Music Department in the past month. Two of these took the trouble to wire for the material.

We are mighty glad to accord this or any other service, but these exhibitors would save themselves a great deal of trouble by indexing all of the material on pictures that they are going to show and then they will have the material at hand. The Complete Plan Book contains an index each week and to this you can add any other material.

Don't be merely content with reading these pages, but make them work for you today, next week and next month. You can either clip and file the material or index it in a book, and then it will be right at your hand when you need it.

Get system in your theatre. It costs little and it's a great insurance for business.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

WHEN Samuel L. Rothapfel came into his own two theatres the middle of this week he must have felt that there was a Yuletide greeting for himself, for never had the Christmas spirit entered more fully into two presentations than those that are being offered this week at the Rialto and Rivoli. And we are not saying this because at each of these houses there is a special number to mark the Natal Day. It is the entire spirit that runs through the bills which carries the full sentiment.

But there is another thing that impresses in passing on these two presentations and that is the point one must have the pictures themselves before the spirit of any presentation can be put over. At the Rivoli there is not a laugh in "Eye for Eye" and at the Rialto "Little Miss Hoover" is supposed to be funny, but we have the difference between a convincing production at the former house and an artificial affair at the latter. One may not carry so many laughs away from the Rivoli as one does from the Rialto, but certainly there is a more contented, more Christmassy spirit in the heart.

"Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda" is the brilliant overture at the Rialto. While the opera itself is a tragedy the spirit of frivolity runs through the selection. The music pictures the time of dawn, the day, the evening and the night and the splendid lighting effects of the Rialto are used to carry the idea through, the overture opening with the lights down, in blue, and then coming up, then dimming into red for the evening and finally a golden burst at the end. We went to the Rialto at a time that we have never been before. Another had been leading the orchestra until this overture and then Dr. Riesenfeld took the baton. And, oh, what a difference!

"Vacation Land" is the scenic that follows. "Siegfried Idyll" is the music that helps it out the best it can. Then comes the over-pleasing Rialto male quartet. With the lights dimmed and the organ only playing the curtains part and at the left one sees a country home and at the right a cottage with the city in the background and the snow covering the ground; the Holiday spirit in relief as the quartet sings "Holy Night, Peaceful Night."

Rialto Animated opens with a series of Gaumont naval pictures, first showing the port guards on parade in San Francisco then the naval pageant for the Southern Commercial congress and then the visit of Secretary Franklin D. Roosevelt to Paris. First we have "Trumpet and Drum" march and then "Jack Tar" march from the horn-pipe and then "Our Boys Across the Sea." Hearst-Pathe shows pictures of the engine that help speed up the transports with "Pierrot and Pierrette" No. 3 and then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of cutting big trees near Portland, Ore., with "Mountain Music" accompanying. From the same source there come pictures of aeroplanes being speeded up for the across the ocean flight at Rockaway, N. Y., with "Master

RIVOLI A YEAR OLD

Many Records Broken by the Newest Rothapfel House

IT seems hard to believe that the Rivoli theatre is a year old, but it is a fact, and beginning with Sunday, December 29, the first anniversary of the house will be celebrated. That bill will also mark the return of S. L. Rothapfel from a month's tour of the country to the Pacific Coast.

Within the year the Rivoli has established a wonderful record. It has been responsible for efforts in stage settings and lighting effects that have even surpassed those that were possible at the Rialto. Many of the year's most successful productions have been shown at this theatre and for the first time in history of motion picture choral effects have been used with male and female choruses.

At the Rivoli Mr. Rothapfel has shown how a thoroughly delightful bill can be presented without one of the so-called feature pictures. He has presented several of these programs that have left the audiences clamoring for more such arrangements. In fact there have been many novelties tried from time to time in the arrangement of the programs and the general public now always looks for something new and distinctive at this theatre.

And during the year this theatre has done its part in winning the war. It is here that the greater number of war features have been shown and the propaganda of patriotism has been carried to its fullest limit. Not only that, but, together with the Rialto, it has played a big part in the Liberty Loans, Red Cross, and other drives.

It's been a big, happy year for the Rivoli—and here's to many more of them!

Gen. Pershing. It is a riot of enthusiasm that marks this ending of the Animated.

"Tabatiere" (the Musix Box) is the Christmas fantasy that follows. With the Byzantine setting used as the background we have a boy and girl doing a clever dance to the music of the music box. All the lights are in red for this with a Christmas tree in full lights at either side of the stage.

"Impish Elves" is the theme for "Little Miss Hoover," the Marguerite Clark feature which is noteworthy for the very noticeable wigs that several of the characters wear. The theme is introduced immediately after the opening, which calls for "Swedish Processional March." "Old Love Story" is also used several times and for the wind-up of the picture. There is a patriotic touch added with the meeting at the grange hall when "Battle Cry of Freedom" is used with trumpets, trombone, piccolo and drums.

Selections from "Going Up" supply the second orchestral number and then comes the hilarious Fox Sunshine comedy, "A Son of a Hun," which gives the audiences enough laughs to last for several holidays. The musical selections are: "Hunting the Hun," "Hunkatin," "In the Land of Wedding Bells," "Frou Frou," "Hop Along," "Hurry" No. 4, "Fighting Tommies" and "Alma, Where Do You Live?"

The ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba" gives the orchestra at the Rivoli an opportunity to do its best with the overture. The number is joyous throughout and sets the audience in easy anticipation of the pleasures of the remainder of the bill. There is no scenic at the Rivoli this week, its usual position on the bill being occupied by the Animated.

With trumpets and roll of drums this opens with the Official War Review No. 27 which starts with scene with the American army in Siberia. The music for this is "Polonaise" until we are introduced to Consul Caldwell when it changes to "Honor to Our Nation." With the review of the troops by Gen. Graves we have "Stars and Stripes Forever" and as the American flag crosses in front of the camera the audience shows that the spirit of victory is still with us. There is added to the War Review this week one of the French official pictures, and certainly one of the most remarkable that has ever been made. This shows the work of the French patrolling fleet and first we have the battle-ships and cruisers and then remarkable scenes of the tiny destroyers in the heavy seas. There are times when it appears that they have been engulfed by the great waves breaking over them. It brings evidenced thrills from the audience at every moment and then get a big hand at the end. "March Heroique" is the music.

Then comes the beautiful Christmas pantomime which Dr. Riesenfeld prepared for this occasion. John Wenger, who has been responsible for so many of the wonderfully artistic stage settings at the two houses again shows his hand in this crea-

Builder," used for this and Gaumont pictures of the airships that aided this country.

Hearst-Pathe then shows pictures of Secretary Baker awarding the D. S. C. medal to the chief of staff and "Invincible Eagle" is used for this and the following Gaumont pictures of "Pushing on to Potsdam," King George decorating American soldiers. With Gaumont pictures of the mothers at Columbia, S. tion. The curtains part very slowly, showing the interior of a home with the fireplace and hanging stocking at the right and two little children sleeping in a big chair nearby. The cuckoo clock strikes twelve and then sleighbells are heard and a few seconds later San enters through the fireplace. From the side of the stage he then brings out two huge boxes, placing one at the right and the other at the left. Next he wakes the little girl and opening one of the boxes (at the left) he brings out a doll and this young woman then does the doll dance with the mechanical imitations that have been seen before. Then the little boy is awakened and he is presented with the Harlequin which does a second dance. Then the two do a dance together with the children and Santa cavorting about the stage with them. At the close we have the children going back to sleep, with the toys in their boxes and the cuckoo sounding one o'clock as Santa disappears and the reindeer bells again ring out. It gets a wealth of applause from the audiences.

There is a wonderful score, mostly of Oriental music, with Nazimova in "Eye for Eye," a feature that gets a great burst of applause at the end. Forty-one selections are used with Keifert's "Love Song" as the theme. "Danse Orientale" is used for the introduction and then after one of the numbered selections is brought back again when Hassouna is shown with her little sister. Some of the other selections employed are "Perses," a varied number of the "Oriental" selections, "Faust Ballet" No 7, "Among the Arabs," "March Araba," "Medusa Valse" and "Song of India." The theme is introduced toward the latter part of the picture one strain being introduced with the flash-back title of "I'll Tell You Why" when the captain explains how the girl saved his life. Many of the selections used belong to the numbered group and this is another instance of where the splendid Rothapfel music library comes in strong. With the splendid selections of music that he has available there can be almost any mood pictured on the screen brought closer to the hearts of the audience with the musical settings that are given.

And, with that the case, when we see one

WITH THE NEW YEAR

Let's All Agree to Help the Other Fellow More

THERE'S one mighty good resolution that you can make with the coming of the New Year, and that is to help the other fellow—the exhibitors of the whole country as a whole all the more. And you can help them by contributing accounts of things that you are doing to these pages.

During the past twelve months there have appeared many articles by the greatest exhibitors in the country in these pages. Included in the list have been S. L. Rothapfel, S. Barret McCormick, Harold B. Franklin, Eugene H. Roth, H. M. Thomas, Edward L. Hyman, Frank L. Newman, and so many others that any pretense of a complete list would be a formidable undertaking.

These big men of the industry have taken time from their other duties, have added extra hours to their day's work to contribute to these pages. At least you can do as much as they have done.

And your ideas are valuable and we distinctly do want them.

of the box office reports come in reporting that a picture that we had seen at the Rialto or Rivoli is "poor" we have only one conclusion that we ourselves reach and that is "no music" and that half of the enjoyment for the audience was therefore omitted. Melody belongs with the true soul of every picture worth while.

There is another variation of the general arrangement of the programs at the Rothapfel houses with the omission of the second orchestra number and the substitution of the Rialto quartet singing "Ring Out, Sweet Bells of Peace."

Then comes a Mutt and Jeff animated cartoon, "A Lot of Bull," which shows the unlucky efforts of the professional matadors and then of Mutt to conquer the savage animals and the way that Jeff performs the task. The music is in keeping with the character of the comedy, but interpreted very liberally so as to get the full comedy effect. The selections are "Los Banderilas," "Carmen," "La Guape," an agitato, then "Carmen" again, "Granada" and the trio from the "Carmen" march at the end. It is a case showing how the classic music can be fitted to a burlesque and add wonders to the pleasures of the audiences.

Since the first of these articles appeared here we have been talking to you of the value of music to the motion picture theatre. Many managers have answered that they could not afford it, and in his talks to you Mr. Rothapfel has continued to urge that if you can do not more than to have a good piano player to pay especial attention to the music. And if you doubters who thing that these expenditures are not vital to your house and not creative of greater business could sit through either of the bills at the two houses this week you would be convinced.

For the Christmas spirit is not imparted by the pictures—not even by the special Christmas numbers at the two houses—but by the music. And, at that, the music is not selected for the Christmas idea, but with the one dominant idea of giving joyous harmony. And it does that, so well that we felt just like a woman who walked out of the Rivoli just in front of us, saying to her companion: "I certainly feel like 'Peace on earth and good-will to man' after seeing such a presentation."

With the exception of "Eye for Eye" we do not consider any of the offerings at the two houses out of the usual for interest. But the music made the bills what they are, gave them the tone, imparted the whole-hearted enjoyment that was evident on the faces of everyone as they left the two theatres.

Years ago we heard Mr. Rothapfel advocate this musical presentation of pictures. We heard an audience of leading exhibitors laugh at him, comment that he was "crazy" on the subject. And now? If anyone does not appreciate the importance of the music they are—well, a mental expert will not pay a visit in vain.

This Small City Theatre Makes Displays That Rival Those of the Biggest Centers

CHANCES are ninety-nine out of a hundred that when you give these advertisements a first glance you will conclude that they are work of some leading theatre in one of the biggest cities of the country. And you would be right in coming to that conclusion, basing your opinion purely on the merit of the displays.

But they come from a city with 12,000 population—Medford, Oregon, where in the Rialto theatre there is an institution that deserves to rank with the best in the country because it has made itself so. It is under the management of H. L. Percy and A. J. Moran and you have already read in these pages many of the excellent things that house is doing.

These designs are first laid out by Mr. Percy, who then turns them over to a young woman who does the finished work. He comments that he feels that he is lucky to be able to get the services of such an artist in so small a city as Medford and he is quite correct in that, but the trouble is that most managers simply jump at the conclusion that they cannot get such work done and really make no efforts to learn what are the possibilities of their communities.

Two of the displays illustrated here are entirely hand drawn and the other is a combination, that is, half tone and line work. As it is reproduced the background shows in gray, but really this came out in white as it was used in the newspaper. The two line displays are absolutely original in their conception, while in the "Panthea" one a striking head of Norma Talmadge together with a scene picture from the Bill Parsons picture is employed with a smaller drawing between.

In connection with "Laughing Bill Hyde" Mr. Moran points out that he cut out the line recommended for use, "Drama of Redemption," and then asks: "Where do they get that stuff anyhow?" Which is a reflection of sentiment that we expressed in the November 30 issue in commenting on a display of the Republic theatre, Jacksonville, Fla. You may remember that we said at that time: "With all due regard to everyone who had anything to do with this, we believe that the line 'tremendous drama of redemption' means mighty little. The way that it is used here and with nothing more to it is likely to scare a lot of people away from the theatre. There are a lot of hoi polloi who will conclude that this is 'high brow' stuff and they will hie themselves to the next house down the street." But we would have used here the line "When in danger he always smiled."

In the case of "The Road to France" much of the teaser idea has been followed, there being nothing said about the character of the picture, the exhibitor preferring to let the idea of the transport prevail. And so with "Panthea" the main punch is put over with the picture of Miss Talmadge.

We want to call attention to one thing in all of these displays and that is nothing induces the Rialto to alter the name plate that it uses. Big or little, every theatre should follow that policy.

Yes, it does cost more to do advertising of the character that is employed by the Medford house. But that it pays in the long run in any live community is evidenced by the example of the Rialto, which makes itself stand out among the smaller city houses of the country by just such things as this. And you can be convinced that when a theatre stands out this way before the whole world that it must have a position in its own community that banishes any fear of possible competition.

Detroit Theatre Ties Up with Newspaper on Amateur Motion Pictures

AN exhibitor in a city where some firm is located that makes motion pictures—and that means practically all the large cities—may profit from the plan that was followed at the Washington theatre in Detroit last week.

The occasion was the showing of "The Mysterious Mr. Browning," a "made-in-Detroit" feature, produced by the Nelson company, with a cast that included Edna Mason, Paul Panzer and Walter Miller. This picture was made some months ago by the Nelson people but never released. The Nelson company, heretofore, had been doing commercial work.

To arouse local interest, A. L. Weeks, dramatic editor of the Detroit News, was induced to write a scenario for a two-reel comedy. All the exterior scenes were made in advance, but a few interiors were left to the last and these were filmed at the Washington during the week. Amateurs took all the roles in the piece. The week following the completed comedy was shown. As part of the comedy was staged in a newspaper office—the News—with editors and reporters "acting for nothing," it naturally brought forth a lot of publicity that otherwise would never have been secured.

Another plan was tried out at the Orpheum in Detroit several weeks ago. A few scenes in a short comedy were staged at each performance, the whole being put on as a vaudeville act. Hundreds of aspirants entered. At each performance the camera was pointed at the audience. It is said that the camera sometimes was minus film, but enough was used at some shows to provide a reel that was put on the second week.

Dignity with a Kick in It

By S. Barret McCormick
Managing Director, Circle Theatre,
Indianapolis

"DIGNITY," said the advertising man of the Mastodon as he erased the words "A virile story of the early west" from his layout sheet and substituted the line Silent Marley. He was hell with a 44 but he loved with a heart that was 22 karat. "Dignity is only valuable when we forget we've got it."

Every advertiser wants dignity in his copy but it takes more than a Prince Albert and a silk hat to make an imposing figure. A clothing dummy properly draped looks like a gentleman, but it takes red blood and eyes that see humanity and a soul that we don't see but feel to make us forget the clothes and want to grasp the hand of the distinguished one.

In amusement advertising what we need is DIGNITY—PLUS. The plus in the case being white gloves with a punch enclosed. Or dignity with a kick.

Of all the kinds of merchandise upon the market, none equals amusement merchandise for the diversity of methods required in its selling. Each subject is in itself a distinct sales problem, and as a result no matter how firmly established an advertising policy may be in each separate attraction it must carry some distinguishing mark whereby the public can see a new personality behind the shell of the word Entertainment.

One can look at a dinner menu all day and not feel a gastronomic pang, but when the waiter whispers, "That so and so is very delicious today, the favorite dish prepared by their famous chef, and oh la la it melts in your mouth," we most always undergo a change of interest. The menu has lost none of its dignity, it has simply been glorified by imagination and good salesmanship.

So in amusement advertising, it is the human touch that really counts. It's the thing that strikes our hearts, either on the most gentle note or plays on the strings of our cruder emotions that affects us. It is not undignified to refer to Abraham Lincoln as "Honest Abe," nor is it uncouth to say "Over the top and give 'em their name so far as the men who used them are concerned, and besides, it was a great deal more vivid to the reader.

Exaggeration is a vital factor in remembering things. An ash can full of dynamite is more picturesque than a depth bomb full of T N T. When we think of shooting irons, they are never as small as a revolver.

The theory in exploiting "Pecks Bad Girl" was that if one was to laugh at the picture why not begin with the advertising, at least begin to feel the personality of the play before one entered the theatre.

Fred Stone, in "The Goat," presented the usual problems of introducing a new player, and selling his individuality to the public at the same time. "Mr. and Mrs. Public meet Mr. Stone" might have been a very dignified manner of introducing him, but if "Jack o' Lantern" dropped down through the roof to the tune of Falling Dishes and tossed a lariat around the necks of his new acquaintances, he would probably be remembered better. So figuratively, that was the manner in which his first appearance on the Circle screen was made.

hell." We lose dignity in advertising only when we cease to be human in our printed characterizations.

The great war, so far as America was concerned, was won by advertising and sentiment. Every service flag was the symbol of sentiment, the same sentiment that makes people laugh or cry with other people whether their joys and sorrows be real or make believe, and no one can deny that the advertising lacked salesmanship.

Who could forget the poster with the blood smeared boots and the simple message "Keep these off the U. S. A."

Dignified, yes; dignity with a kick. Motion Picture News is reproducing with this several specimens of recent advertising of the Circle theatre which may prove interesting as examples of what was striven for in the pursuit of dignified advertising with the human note or selling punch left in.

In our "Under Four Flags" campaign the basis of dignity, even loftiness, was carried throughout, the foundation of which was laid in the opening advertisements with copy that strove to glorify the achievements of America and her Allies, but with the succeeding and intensive copy that followed a more vivid appeal to the imagination was used. Individual subjects in the picture were selected and made the attraction, each treated in the most picturesque manner. For instance, one of the advertisements picturing the pursuit of a submarine by the chasers was captioned "dropping ash cans on a Sub." Perhaps it was not dignified to call Uncle Sam's depth bombs "Ash Cans," but that was

"Danger" Signs Are Used by Los Angeles Theatre

In advance of his showing of the Universal Special feature, Mae Murray, in "Danger—Go Slow," Matthew Bridge, manager of the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, posted red and yellow signs all over the city, with the result that the general public got the impression that these had something to do with the influenza, and the health officials were kept busy answering telephone calls about them.

It was then that Manager Bridge came out and announced what they were all about.

San Francisco Paper Goes Further in Cooperating with Motion Pictures

ANOTHER step forward toward cooperation with the theatres has been taken by the San Francisco Chronicle, which was the first of the papers of that city to recognize the widespread interest in the motion picture.

In addition to the Sunday page, which includes an attractive layout giving scenes in productions at the first run houses, the Chronicle is now carrying signed reviews of the principal pictures in its Monday edition. There is another layout five columns wide carried on this, giving pictures of the stars.

This is unquestionably an important feature of a newspaper. The people of every city want to read real reviews of the photoplays, for they know, even if the majority of the newspapers have not yet realized the fact, that most high-class motion pictures of today are even more ambitious and more costly than stage productions, and have every right to as much attention.

We are sure, from our experience, that this policy is going to make new readers for the Chronicle; certainly it is going to prove one of the best circulation holders that can possibly be adopted. The public will soon find which paper is affording the real photoplay material, and we hope that the theatres will not fail to do their part in their programs, if not on the screens themselves, in calling attention to this excellent work of the Chronicle.

There is one improvement that we might suggest, and that is to carry the motion picture advertising on the same page as these reviews. If they were grouped there under such a heading as "Motion Picture Directory" it would be an added convenience to the public. That is only a matter of mechanics, and it ought to be easy enough to arrange it.

"Little Italy" Built for Caruso Presentation

The initial Caruso was given an elaborate presentation at Grauman's Theatre, Los Angeles, where a sixty-foot setting, three stories high, showing a portion of Little Italy in an American city was the background for a troop of forty singers, which included a sextette that sang selections from "Lucia."

Signor Carlos Bravo was the soloist, and the numbers included selections from "I Pagliacci."

Sid Grauman, who personally planned the operatic setting, saw to it that no details were lacking. Singers occupied fire-escape balconies on either side of the setting, and on one end of the mammoth set was a barber shop, while at the other was the sign of spaghetti. The overture consisted of excerpts from "I Pagliacci" by the forty-piece symphony orchestra under the direction of Max Weil, who recently came to Grauman's after a long engagement at the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis.

Miss Ferguson is an artist, as a rule, but she does not seem to me to be up to her usual standard in this picture. She has become a bit artificial and nasal in her work.

The music is unusually good. Orchestral music plays throughout the picture. The picture is a masterpiece of the kind of picture that is almost impossible to make, where a few artistic actors would do it.

HE RAISED, TOO George Carpenter Finds It a Good Time to Stabilize

AFTER having been closed for nine weeks on account of the influenza the theatres of Salt Lake City reopened on December 9. George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress, thought that this was a good time to raise the prices to the level required to show a profit and so when the house was ready to greet visitors again there was a scale upward.

But during the shut down the house had been redecorated, repainted and new seats installed while an addition to the musical possibilities was made with a big new unit orchestra organ. This is in addition to the regular orchestra of the house.

Managers, who have been closed for a long period and have taken advantage of the chance to improve their theatres, are not likely to have trouble in advancing admission fees slightly. The shut-down has increased the demand for motion pictures.

cents?" I heard a man ask a cashier at a prominent Broadway picture theatre.

"Can't you read the sign, gee whiz!" was the answer, and the cashier continued to chew a piece of Wrigley's.

The man very properly moved along, either through embarrassment or indignation.

Frequently the patron will leave change at the box office. It is good business to return such monies, if the cash balance shows any over money. It gives your theatre an enviable reputation for honesty. Do not tolerate any short-change artists. Make sure that honesty is the slogan in your box office, not only for the protection of yourself—but for your patron. A box office that needs watching is an unnecessary evil.

Telephone courtesy is an important branch of the box office. A courteous telephone reply is a big thing. Give each patron detail attention. A time schedule of the theatre should be on hand together with such information that is likely to be asked pertaining to the features. A lost and found bureau should be available. It shows the patron you are doing the right thing.

Courtesy is a lubricant that makes the wheels of trade go round. It is a big factor in giving your theatre a "personality."

Filming Murder Trial Scores Big Hit in Buffalo

How well it pays to use local events in the news weekly, especially where the exhibitor has the co-operation of a daily newspaper, has again been shown in Buffalo. Readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS are familiar with the story of the Strand theatre, Buffalo Evening News camera car, which covers all local events of importance.

One of the recent big sensations around Buffalo has been the trial (at Geneseo, a neighboring town) of Mrs. Gladys Webster, on the charge of killing her father-in-law. This case had attracted much attention in the Buffalo papers, and so Manager Earl L. Crabb, of the Strand, conceived the idea of "covering" the trial with motion pictures. He was able to get all of the principals.

Foyer of Shea's Hippodrome decorated for the holidays and Harold B. Franklin's special stage settings for the week with the Santa Claus spirit fully carried out

Franklin Gives Splendid Example of the Way To Celebrate the Holidays in a Picture House

How to put the "Christmassy" atmosphere into the theatre during the Yuletide season is strikingly illustrated at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, this week, where Manager Harold B. Franklin has put forth his best with the result that all Buffalo is talking about the decorations and the musical settings given the feature picture, which is "The Hell Cat," featuring Geraldine Farrar.

One senses the holiday atmosphere the moment he enters the Hippodrome doors and steps into the lobby of the theatre, for there on all sides and overhead he sees hanging in graceful clusters and strands, evergreens and holly wreaths, and just to the right at the bottom of the escalator, a large Christmas tree has been erected, brilliantly lighted with small incandescent bulbs and decorated with attractive Yuletide fittings.

The interior of the big house is also filled with the decorations appropriate to the season, holly wreaths and red poinsetta predominating, but in the stage setting one finds the biggest feature of the whole Yuletide theme, and this is undoubtedly the best of the timely and seasonal variety that Mr. Franklin has so far presented for the divertisement of his patrons. This setting is a huge Christmas card visualized, showing Santa Claus in life size dipping into his big bag for presents, while towering over him is a mammoth Christmas tree, illuminated with 200 small electric lights and the various decorations that usually go with the tree. Flying over the tree are cherubim. When lighted with the vari-colored lights thrown upon it from the sides and top of the stage the effect is a most striking one.

In the smaller openings of the stage Mr. Franklin has reproduced "home scenes," warm lights shining from the windows of the houses. But it is during the unveiling of these attractive settings that the big effect is launched, for just as the curtains are drawn aside, a "grand" chimes solo, accompanied by the full 30-piece Hippodrome orchestration blazes forth in a magnificent rendition of the hymn, "Come All Ye Faithful," which is ended in a climax of tremendous power, inspiring those with its simplicity and grandeur. It is the first time that the big orchestra has ever played anything of a "churchy" nature during the unveiling of a setting, but from the effect produced it is to be hoped that Mr. Franklin will try it again—perhaps at Easter tide or some other time when it would be appropriate. After the hymn was played the orchestra gave an admirable interpretation of the selection from the grand opera, "Mignon," by Thomas, which is also an ideal holiday number. As the bill is changed the last half of the week, and as Mr. Franklin was desirous of continuing the atmosphere, the orchestra at intermission played the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "The Messiah," and the selections from "Babes in Toyland," by Victor Herbert. The big Christmas tree proved a delight with the children and mothers who heard of the setting brought their children to see Santa Claus, and the tree and Mr. Franklin thus won many new friends—and patrons.

In discussing seasonal atmosphere in a theatre with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, Mr. Franklin said:

"There are many effective means at the command of every exhibitor to produce a timely atmosphere around his presentation and theatre during the various holidays of the year. First there is the front and the lobby which can always be attractively decorated appropriate to the occasion, and those theatres that use cut flowers can express easily by the selection of the blooms that go with the season or holiday, Thanksgiving, chrysanthemum; Easter, the lily; Christmas, poinsetta, holly, evergreen, etc.; McKinley's birthday, the carnation and so on. Posters and frames should also suggest the season. At Shea's Hippodrome, not only does the design suggest the season, but the colors are also an aid in the atmosphere desired.

"The advertising in the newspaper also helps in getting the atmosphere of the holiday or season, while in stage settings, exhibitors will find a wealth of material.

"Special trailers can effectively deliver the Christmas or other message and can be easily adapted for any occasion. On Lincoln's birthday, a photograph of the great Emancipator with his Gettysburg speech is not only timely but instructive. Washington's birthday can be picturized in a similar manner with the Father of his country Crossing the Delaware, reproduced as a theme for a stage setting, which was used last year at Shea's Hippodrome with excellent effect.

"The holiday spirit should prevail throughout the theatre. One of the most important branches of the Liberty loan publicity was the Features Bureau, one of whose functions was to create a carnival atmosphere. In New York thousands of flags created the Avenue of the Allies. If the Liberty loan committees deemed it necessary to create an atmosphere so as to reach the multitudes, it should be quite natural for the exhibitor to emulate this plan.

"At Easter time we have found it quite effective to use a large white cross illuminated with white frosted electric lights, lowered from the top of the stage into a setting of lillies. At Thanksgiving time we used a mammoth turkey, painted in vivid colors for the stage setting. For New Year's one could use old Father Time throwing away his uniform and arms and welcoming little 1919 into an era of peace and good will among mankind.

"There is really no end to the material available for putting atmosphere into the theatre at special occasions, and exhibitors will find it well worth while when they do put on special dress, that it is the best obtainable. Anything cheap spoils the effect. Do not overdress, however, the more simple the better. Many times an over-display has just the opposite effect from that desired.

"Patrons at Shea's Hippodrome expect us to do something special on the various holidays and we try not to disappoint them."

The old adage of "every man to his own taste" is all right enough for individuals, but you want to make your theatre suited to everyone's taste.

Some of the most striking stage settings are being used by Eugene H. Roth at his magnificent California theatre. This shows one that was used during the rendering of selections from "Oh, Look." This set, under subdued lighting effects, principally red, blue and amber, brings out detail that is lost in the above photo. The curtain rose with all stage lights, borders and foots in blue, with the help of eight fifteen hundred Watt flare-lamps with blue gelatines. The fountain was spotted from center stage, in amber, bringing out details and illuminating the water, which ensues from the base of statue and from six fish and frogs located on the sides. The entire fountain was made of plaster paris, and was in four sections on rollers, and is easily moved. The base of the fountain consists of very heavy water-proof canvas. The back transparent drop was illuminated with red and blue lamps, giving a sunset effect, and the entire set is flooded from the balcony front with red reflectors

Griffith Himself Stages Prologue for "Greatest Thing in Life" in Los Angeles

PREMIER of "The Greatest Thing in Life," Monday, December 16th, was a "first night" that may be described as Griffithesque. The ovation given the producer following the appearance of the subtitle, "The End," was as enthusiastic, if not more so, than any previous ones this producer has experienced in Los Angeles. For eight minutes the applause and calls continued from the audience of three thousand at Clune's Auditorium.

This presentation, the second of this picture in the country (this film having been first shown in Milwaukee), was personally supervised by Mr. Griffith and his studio staff. The film is preceded by an original prologue by Mr. Griffith, titled "Voices," which creates an atmosphere for the film.

The prologue opens with a dark stage, which is slowly brightened. Out of the hazy background comes a voice:

"The Greatest Thing in Life—what is the greatest thing in life?"

Second voice: "I haven't the slightest idea."

First voice: "The greatest thing in life is—is—is (soft music) wait—wait—wait, here come the singers and dancers, they know what life is. Light hearts of the world—music, dancing, wine, women, life itself—that is the greatest thing in life."

The singer of the street, tenor solo by Sheldon Balinger (three drums, soft music, black out stage). (Three drums, gradual lighting of stage, appearance of boy and girl).

First voice: "Ah, the search for love eternal—that is the greatest thing in life."

The followers of the modern dance: Miss Claire Seymour and Rudolfo de Valentina.

The followers of the ultra jazz music. Rhea Haines and Norman McNeil.

(Three drums; black out stage). (Three drums; four soldiers appear).

First voice: "Heroes from the battle field of Europe—England, France, Italy and these United States. Duty, heroism, sacrifice and brotherhood (soldiers have arms about each other), ah, that is the greatest thing in life."

(Three drums; black out stage; three drums, lights).

The dancers from the Land of Shadows. Six sprites, headed by Miss Carol Dempster.

First voice: "What are these that dance? They are the spirits of fancy from the land of nowhere. They are opening doors of dreams and the curtains of imagination (dancers advance). Now we shall come down the road to the land of the silver sheet (shadows), at the end of the road; yes, at the end of the road, there is the greatest thing in life." (Shadows.) "Hush—silence—there is not a sound in the land of the silver sheet (shadows), and the kind of shadows reigns in eternal silence." (Dark stage.)

"But our story, who shall tell our story—the shadows, shadows, shadows." (Main title of picture.)

In the presentation of "Voices," Mr. Griffith was assisted by George Fawcett as stage director; Adolphe Lestina and Louis Gottschalk. Musical score for "Voices," as well as the film, was arranged by Mr. Gottschalk.

Critics are divided with respect to whether or not a prologue so elaborate is needed for a Griffith picture. Some claim their first impression was that Mr. Griffith did not believe his picture sufficiently strong, and added the prologue to improve the picture, but after seeing the film felt it was a mistake to give the prologue even though the film itself runs but an hour and a half. The prologue required almost thirty minutes. It is the universal opinion that the prologue was a very pleasant feature of the presentation, and the enthusiastic manner in which it was received by the big audience of first nighters was proof of their appreciation. All believe the film would be a big success without the prologue.

The photographic effects of this film give it a distinctive feature. The close-ups, made by Mr. Griffith's new stereoscopic process, give to the screen pictures that have the appearance of paintings.

The color scheme for the theatre front and lobby brings to the public the studio violet rays. Purple lights are used.

Front and back of "The Heart of Humanity" lobby display at the Broadway

Putting Personality Into Lobby Displays Demonstrated by Kashin at the Broadway

AT the Broadway theatre this week Maurice A. Kashin is demonstrating the way to put personality—the human element—into a lobby display. The picture that is being shown is the big Alla Holubar special "Hearts of Humanity." The showing of this picture was started with Christmas week, and therefore the holiday spirit was combined in the display.

Looking at the entrance to the theatre from the street the main thing that caught the eye were the holiday-decorated announcements and the two wreaths of holly just above the columns, but the interior of the display was so striking that it literally dragged people in off the street to study the full details. That is one of the strong points about all of these displays that Kashin makes. Most designers of lobby displays seek to put over one big idea, to get the snap attention and to attempt to make that impress.

But if you have been following the displays at the Broadway you will have seen that the first object of Kashin is to get your idea, and then he starts in to put the selling argument of the picture over. A flash in the pan display will stop the people with the pure curiosity appeal, but it does not get them to buy tickets unless the personality is put into the display and the appeal is made distinctly human.

At the back of the lobby there was a striking painting representing a mother, with babe in her arms, and set in a huge heart, with children coming toward her from all sides across the poppy fields of France. This was surrounded by a gold mat set in a gold frame and topped by a rich red silk canopy that concealed the lights which flooded the picture. At the extreme right was the selling argument: "Story of a Love That Passeth All Understanding."

On one side of the lobby there was a large picture of Dorothy Phillips, the star, and another hand-painted design carrying out the love theme. These were both heavily draped with rich textures, while the Cupid idea was carried out in the frieze. On the opposite there was a similar arrangement, with the full programme given in the center, a scene from the picture at either side, all brought out strikingly. Now you will note just a little thing here in talking about personality—even in the poster giving the full programme a picture of Miss Phillips is used. Why? Because this is a picture with a strong woman appeal. It was necessary to get the woman into every portion of the display, for it is that which grips the heart.

Another thing that commends this display is the dignity of it. There is a reason aside from mere desire to attract attention why the air of magnificence was given to the whole exploitation—because the impression sought was that this was not one of the unusual productions, but a big thing out of the ordinary. There was no need to resort to anything of the sensational when once this impression was created. In this case the "freak" would have lessened the appeal.

There is personality in every picture, and that is the message that you want to carry in your displays. Kashin has certainly done it well in this case. There is heart appeal and there is class written through every portion of this work.

Omaha Theatres Try "Skip Row" Plan During Influenza

In order to give the fullest co-operation in the fight to prevent the spread of influenza a novel plan has been adopted by the theatres of Omaha, which have inaugurated the "ship row" plan. In other words, patrons are allowed to occupy only alternate rows, the others being kept vacant to prevent ill effects from coughing. One of the results has been that the houses have not been able to care for their patrons.

Managers of the Omaha theatres imposed this regulation on themselves. Des Moines, Iowa, is following the same plan.

Nazimova Forsakes The Stage

Star Will Devote All Time During New Year to the Screen—Six Scheduled by Rowland and Karger

MME. NAZIMOVA will devote all of her time during the new year to her work before the camera, she announced to the press this week. Her schedule for the coming year calls for six feature pictures, and it is announced complete arrangements for these six super-features to be completed by the star within the coming year have been made by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, who present the Nazimova productions. The star will co-operate with Messrs. Rowland and Karger in all her productions.

The pictures will be produced in California, where the star has gone, accompanied by her director, Albert Capellani, his staff of assistants, Henri Menessier, her art director, and her company of players and cameramen.

The first of Mme. Nazimova's new year productions will be "The Red Lantern," from the novel by Edith Wherry. The settings for this feature are mainly Chinese. To get absolute authenticity to the settings, costumes, racial customs and "atmosphere" in general, research work has been done in the libraries of New York and Los Angeles by M. Henri Menessier and his staff of artists. June Mathis, in collaboration with M. Capellani, made the adaptation from the novel.

With the beginning of Mme. Nazimova's newest picture, the cutting and assembling of her last production, "Ception Shoals," will have been completed. The star appears in the opening scenes in the character of Faith, the young mother of Eve. It presents a decided contrast to her role in "Eye For Eye," her latest picture.

In "Eye For Eye" she wears the colorful garb of the Orient. In "Revelation" she wore the costumes of a Paris grizette and the modern apparel of a fashionable woman, as well as boys' clothes. In "Toys of Fate" she was a gypsy. But in "Ception Shoals" her dresses are of quaint simplicity. The scenes were taken in and around the town of Gloucester, Mass.

Reports of the success attending the presentation of Nazimova's last picture to be released, "Eye For Eye," throughout the country continues to come to the offices of Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger. The reports, whether from the South, East, North or West, read "Eye For Eye" is a big box office attraction."

Fred Miller, president and general manager of the new California theatre in Los Angeles, booked it for his house for the week of December 30—New Year's week—and signed agreements for the two succeeding Nazimova productions, "Ception Shoals" and "The Red Lantern," which he will show as soon as they are released.

Another new big motion picture house to use "Eye For Eye" as an opening bill is Moore's theatre in Washington, D. C. In Philadelphia it played at the Stanley and Arcadia theatres, on Market street.

Among other large picture houses which have booked it for special runs are the Liberty, Kansas City; Merrill, Milwaukee; Clemmer, Seattle; Strand, San Francisco; Alhambra, Toledo; Isis, Richmond; Wizard, Baltimore; Parkway, Baltimore; Goodwin, Newark; Park, Boston; Dome, Youngstown; Madison, Detroit; Madison, Pittsburgh; Alhambra, Cleveland; Mall, Cleveland; Knickerbocker, Nashville; New Garrick, St. Paul; New Garrick, Minneapolis; and Liberty, Portland.

In Chicago "Eye For Eye" is scheduled to play over Asher Brothers' circuit of theatres.

Big Bookings Reported on Houdini Serial

Among the big contracts just made by B. A. Rolfe Productions, of Philadelphia, are for the first run of "The Master Mystery" at the Regent theatre, one of the finest picture houses in Philadelphia, and the Grand Opera House, one of Philadelphia's largest vaudeville houses.

The Regent will show its first serial picture in "The Master Mystery."

Vitagraph Releases Well Ahead of Schedule

With the first two Morey Star Series releases before the public, Vitagraph announces as ready the third Morey feature to be released February 3rd. The fourth and fifth Morey features have left the assembling rooms. This leaves the star three pictures ahead of the releasing schedule.

The "on time" reputation gained by Vitagraph with its releases of Star Series five-reel features has elicited congratulations from exhibitors throughout the country, according to Vitagraph executives. The other Star Series production featuring Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Gladys Leslie, Corinne Griffith and Bessie Love have been on time to the dot and in some instances ahead of schedule.

Prior to the opening of the present season, the Vitagraph Company announced year's releases in advance. An Earle Williams feature marked the beginning and then followed regularly the first release under the new plan of Gladys Leslie, Harry T. Morey, Alice Joyce, Corinne Griffith and Bessie Love. "Serials and comedies as well as features, are coming along well," said a Vitagraph executive, "the schedule we announced in September is an absolutely established fact and will be maintained."

"Service—Boys—Service"

M. J. Frisch, branch manager of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Des Moines, according to reports, has given splendid exhibition of what "service" means to the exhibitor. When Universal "The Surrender of the German Fleet" came out an exhibitor at Cedar Rapids hearing that Mr. Frisch would have prior of the one-reel on Dec. 16 decided after show hours that he wanted the film for the three days succeeding the arrival of the print at Des Moines. He telephoned but did not get an answer. The call was transferred to Manager Frisch's home and he went to the office, prepared the film, and had it in Cedar Rapids so that the exhibitor was able to show the film a day ahead of his competitors.

Paula Blackton Starts New Country Life Stories

In response to scores of requests said have been received from exhibitors and "fans" for more of the Paula Blackton Country Life stories, Mrs. Blackton decided to make a second series of the pictures.

"The Littlest Scout," starring Cha Stuart Blackton, is scheduled as the first of the new series.

Four New Serials Named by Pathe

Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager, Announces That Pathe Intends to Maintain Serial Record

NOT only to maintain, but to eclipse its previous serial record, is the declared intention of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., for the year 1919.

Since the appearance of its initial serial, "The Perils of Pauline," starring Pearl White, Pathe claims that it has led in the serial field, and announces that during the ensuing twelve months no less than four of the modern continued features will be released.

General Manager Paul Brunet asserts that it is no more than proper that Pearl White should also be the star in the Pathe serial which inaugurates the year 1919, and therefore the first episode of "The Lightning Raider" is scheduled for January 5.

With a record of producing twenty-four serials, Pathe officials feel that the name "Pathe" on a serial is a guarantee to the exhibitors and the public that there will be a real sustaining story, skillfully directed, and with regular serial stars supported by a capable and typical serial cast.

"The Lightning Raider"

Many exhibitors who have seen some of the episodes of "The Lightning Raider" pronounce it Pathe's best serial to date. Managers of the various exchanges throughout the country who have seen several of the episodes are also declared to be highly enthused and according to reports the advance bookings have assumed tremendous proportions.

When the script of "The Lightning Raider" was accepted for production it is stated that every executive of Pathe, and Astra, the producing company, has worked hard with the main idea of making it one of the very best serials ever produced.

Bertram Millhauser and George B. Seitz, the authors, are said to have conceived every action with the same thought in mind and it is said that Miss White and the members of her company have played their roles throughout with this same idea always before them.

After the serial was completed and the release date set, Pathe officials took another step forward in evidencing their supreme confidence in the new serial, by inaugurating a publicity and advertising plan which attempts to place serials upon a new basis in the public mind.

Big Advertising Campaign

They have evolved a constructive campaign calculated to educate the better class of picture patrons to the serial idea. It is said to have been exceedingly difficult because of a reported deep set opposition of many exhibitors against serials.

Serials have been tried in many of the best theatres and have not come up to expectations as a drawing card, according to report. Pathe takes the stand that some of these serials did not deserve any better fate but hold that the real serial with class will appeal to the better clientele anywhere anytime.

Consequently the Pathe organization has instituted the first publicity campaign, directed to the general public, ever undertaken on behalf of a serial.

The Saturday Evening Post with its two million circulation and ten million readers, is unquestionably the best high class advertising medium in America, and Pathe's campaign, embracing a number of double page displays, will cost many thousands of dollars.

"This expenditure is concrete proof that Pathe believes in 'The Lightning Raider's' power to create a vast new army of Serial fans of the better class of picture patrons. The first of these advertisements appeared Dec. 28th and will be followed by a similar display the following week, and others at frequent intervals."

Compson and Larkin

On February 2nd Pathe will release the initial Episode of an Eight Chapter Serial entitled "The Terror of the Range" and featuring Betty Compson and George Larkin. This Serial is also said to be the result of a preconceived, and well thought out plan on the part of Pathe executives who believe that the demand for "westerns" has never abated to a full degree, but rather moves in cycles. In other words, every so often there is a call for a good Western subject.

"The Terror of the Range" is a Western Serial, by W. A. S. Douglas and Lucien Hubbard. It was produced by Diando and directed by Stuart Paton. Its story, revolving around a famous western bandit, is located on the border line between Mexico and the United States. It is peopled with cowboys, Indians and Mexicans of the type dear, since the very first days of pictures, to the heart of the fans.

Ruth Roland, the second of the Pathe duo of serial stars, will also be prominent in the Pathe serial program for 1919. She is now at work at the Astra Studios at Glendale, Cal., on a fifteen episode serial tentatively called "The Long Arm." The authors are Arthur Reeves, the famous author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories, and Charles Logue.

Immediately at the conclusion of work on "The Lightning Raider" Pearl White will start work on a new serial by a famous author. This serial is as yet unnamed but it will be a typical Pearl White production.

Alma Rubens Will Head Her Own Company

Alma Rubens will head her own company, which was recently formed by Charles Greenberg and Franklyn Hutton, controllers of the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles.

The Robertson-Cole Company will control the world's rights of all Alma Rubens' pictures, and are to distribute these subjects in the United States and Canada through the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Miss Rubens will be remembered for the work she did in support of William S. Hart, as well as in "Reggie Mixes In," "Master of His Home" and "Gown of Destiny," in which she was featured.

Her first picture has already been chosen. It is "Diana of the Green Van," by Leona Dalyrimple. While Miss Rubens is already at work on this production, the release date has not been set, but it is believed it will be ready late in January.

"Cavell Case" Reported Big Hit in South

Information received from T. O. Tuttle, branch manager of Select Pictures' Atlanta Exchange, shows that Select's special, "The Cavell Case," is pulling strong in Southern territory. One message from Mr. Tuttle concerning business at the Criterion theatre in Atlanta said:

"The Cavell Case opened in Atlanta Monday, December 2, playing to splendid patronage at matinee and capacity business in evening. Tuesday capacity matinee and turn away business in evening. Receipts have increased daily, interest grows stronger and a record-breaking week is anticipated."

Practical Showmanship Gets 'Em

Circus and Road Show Stuff Applied to Publicizing Anita Stewart's First Mayer Production

MORE than two hundred exhibitors came to Milwaukee, and more than five hundred to Minneapolis, from adjoining sections of the respective States, as the result of practical showmanship methods of circus and roadshow advance-men, applied to the showing of the special feature attraction, "Virtuous Wives," Anita Stewart's first production, under the direction of Louis B. Mayer, and distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The plan fostered by Mr. Mayer, producer of "Virtuous Wives," consists of special campaign work, whose responsibility it is to co-operate with the local branch managers of First National exchanges to create interest among exhibitors in each territory and induce them to attend the trade showing at the exchange center. Following him comes a second Mayer representative, with the "show."

The first of thirty of these trade showings was held in Milwaukee on Friday, December 13. Despite the handicap of "Black" Friday, more than two hundred exhibitors were present, with umbrellas and rain coats for protection from a severe rain storm. William H. Leahy, director of publicity for Stewart productions, had succeeded by using real advance-man methods in arousing an unusual amount of interest.

The production was shown under the direction of Joseph Lee, sales manager for Anita Stewart Productions. After its presentation Mr. Lee told the exhibitors of the advertising possibilities for them in the story.

The second showing was held at the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, on Monday, December 16. More than five hundred exhibitors from the Minnesota territory gave an indication of their confidence in its box-office value. After this showing, E. R. Pierson, manager of the First National Exchange, in Minneapolis, sent the following wire to Mr. Mayer:

"Heartiest congratulations on 'Virtuous Wives.' You have indeed a triumph in delivering a masterpiece as your initial effort."

Leon J. Rubenstein and Rudie Cameron have already made arrangements for a special presentation of the production in Pittsburgh on December 29, and a showing in Philadelphia on January 6. The actual release dates in both these cities have been set back, so that the pre-release showings in each place can be carried out.

Mr. Mayer will return to his office Monday, and the eastern troupe will then continue its work.

Athletic Film Company Incorporated

The Athletic Feature Film Corporation, with offices in Chicago, has filed incorporation papers in the County Clerk's office, Springfield, Ill., and announce its intention of devoting its efforts toward the production of feature sport films, one reel to be released each month. All branches of the sport world, will be covered in these pictures, it is announced. The first release is announced as ready for the exhibitor and will be placed on the market in January.

John H. Herman, formerly connected with the Selig Polyscope Company and a prominent sportsman, William Froman, sports writer, hold the majority stock in the corporation. G. O. Ballin, is treasurer.

Miss Cassinelli Gives Place to Fashions

Dolores Cassinelli, co-starred with E. K. Lincoln in Leonce Perret's "Lafayette, We Come" and a feminine star in the same producer's "Stars of Glory," predicts that "fashions will play a predominating part in the coming year's film productions."

Universal Gets Two From Argosy Films

UNIVERSAL has obtained from the Argosy Films Company the negatives for "The Craving," featuring Francis Ford, and "After the War," starring Grace Cunard. According to the announcement both films will be released the second week of January—the Cunard film released as a Universal special attraction. The purchase and early release of these features will necessitate, it is announced, the postponing of the release dates on "The Light of Victory," featuring Monroe Salisbury, and "Roped," featuring Harry Carey. The latter is reviewed this week in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Francis Ford is the author and producer of "The Craving," as well as the star of the production. The story of the film relates the rivalry between two scientists, an American and a Hindu.

"After the War" tells a story of a woman's love and sacrifices during the invasion of France and Belgium. The picture contains no battle scenes.

Vitagraph Secures Bud Fisher Photoplay

Captain Bud Fisher has turned his imagination to the screen. The cartoonist of Mutt and Jeff has just completed his first photoplay, a comedy of errors, entitled "The Adventure Shop," for Vitagraph.

The comedy is issued as a Star Series release, with Corinne Griffith in the stellar role. Kenneth Webb directed the production.

"The Adventure Shop" is a story of an ennuied society girl's effort to derive a new thrill from life. She becomes obsessed with the idea that a lot of fun could be derived from inducting anyone in search of excitement into the mysteries of the underworld.

Of course, her underworld would be pseudo, and her compatriots in crime would be her social associates. A bevy of young men are constantly hanging about her, willing and anxious to do her every bidding.

In support of Miss Griffith is a cast, including Walter McGrail, Robert Gaillard, Warren Chandler, Priestley Morrison, Freeman Wood and Fred Smith.

Elsie Ferguson Commences New Artcraft

Elsie Ferguson has commenced work, under the direction of Emile Chautard, on a new Artcraft picture at the Fifty-sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, adapted from the story recently published in the Saturday Evening Post called "The Salt of the Earth," by George Weston. Eve Unsell did the scenario. It is announced that Miss Ferguson and her company will be taken far South for location work, probably to Savannah, Ga.

Miss Ferguson has had little rest between productions for the past several months, having completed "Under the Greenwood Tree," "His Parisian Wife," and "The Marriage Price," the last named of which has just been completed under the tentative title, "For Sale." All were directed by Mr. Chautard. Miss Ferguson's next picture in order of release is "His Parisian Wife," which is scheduled for January 19. This story is by Eve Unsell.

AN announcement of importance relative to distribution in foreign markets was made this week by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, organizers of the newly formed producing organization bearing the brand name "S-L Pictures," which presents E. K. Lincoln as its principal star.

Arrangements have been consummated between this organization and Sydney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., whereby the latter will have entire charge of the distribution in all countries exclusive of the United States and Canada for the series of Lincoln features, the first of which is now in course of production under the direction of Ralph Ince.

The contract was made only after the moving spirits of "S-L Pictures" had completed an exhaustive study of the various companies handling screen productions for export.

For what is said to be probably the first time in the history of film export, an individual and special series of ads will be designed to precede the introduction of "S-L Pictures" in countries outside of the United States and Canada.

Special publicity stories prepared for translation in various languages and written from the viewpoint of the different nationalities will be furnished the promotion department of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. Arrangements have also been made whereby the efforts of the publicity departments of Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin and Mr. Garrett will be co-ordinated at all times, always keeping in mind the foreign point of view.

Further than this, and at the personal request of Mr. Garrett, the series of pictures starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince, will be so made that the various scenes will hold a sustained interest to all audiences throughout the world. This is a particular point which is said to have been greatly overlooked by several producers who have neglected to bear in mind the requirements of the foreign market.

Arthur H. Sawyer, who is personally directing the activities of the large studio force working under Ralph Ince, is particularly gratified at the arrangements made with J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., for the handling of "S-L Pictures" abroad, and will endeavor to carry out to the fullest extent possible the various suggestions made by Mr. Garrett from time to time.

Department to Coast

The scenario department of the Robertson-Cole Company has been moved to the coast in order to effect a closer co-operation by this department with the producers. John M. Blackwood, for many years a newspaper man and for twelve years manager the Belasco theatre of Los Angeles, and more recently with the Thos. H. Ince scenario department, is in charge of this department.

Douglas Fairbanks in Bray Pictograph

Motion picture fans who have seen Douglas Fairbanks in action in his Artcraft pictures will see him in an entirely new light in the December 29 release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "The Magazine on the Screen."

The screen is utilized in this issue of the Pictograph to teach careless pedestrians a graphic and valuable lesson. The Bray Studios, Inc., have taken for illustration a number of those kinds of accidents which occur most frequently and have picturized them with the hope that they may serve to make people more careful and so save needless suffering and misery.

In this release also the history of the woman's skirt is said to be traced in a most amusing and interesting way. From the days when the ladies wore them with hoops in their folds they are seen to gradually diminish in circumference.

Leighton Budd presents a cartoon which endeavors to settle the problem of what is to be done with the Kaiser.

Fred Stone's Late Artcraft Circus Picture

According to advance notices from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, those who go "Under the Top," with Fred Stone in his latest Artcraft picture, scheduled for release January 12th, are going to witness a series of actionable episodes fully as peppery as those witnessed in the acrobatic comedian's "The Goat."

Many of the episodes in "Under the Top" are founded on Stone's early life, when he was an acrobatic clown in a circus. It introduces him as a village youth, with aspirations toward working under the "Big Top."

Spoor Process Employed for United Films

J. A. BERST, president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has just signed a long term contract with the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories to process all of his corporation's films by the new method, which calls for the processing of many hundreds of thousands of feet of film each week.

Mr. Berst, who was for many years vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is said to be one of the few film executives who have a thorough understanding and comprehensive knowledge of the laboratory end of the business. He is declared to have made a thorough and exhaustive study of the Spoor-Thompson process and examined with great care the result of the work under this new system.

Before entering into the contract Mr. Berst had to convince himself that under this processing method he could obtain a higher quality of positive prints, as well as more equable and uniform work throughout than under any of the old systems.

He also had to be convinced of the exceptional service to be obtained through distribution from a centralized point.

Through this new method of processing film, which is reported to have been so thoroughly tested and tried out that its results are declared to be absolutely certain, the entire length of the film is said to be uniformly developed with a high standard of quality and without the variance in quality resulting from the developing in short lengths.

By processing the film in one thousand-foot lengths, only two splices are necessary to the reel, thus greatly prolonging the life of the film. The developing process is controlled automatically for temperature and humidity, so regardless of weather, manufacture continues under the same conditions the year round, which fact makes each print a duplicate of the original.

Overprinting of sectional parts is said to be entirely impossible under this system, and they claim an absolute conformity in quality which renders the finished print a highly artistic product.

Educational's Director Summoned to Mexico

GEORGE D. WRIGHT, the Educational's director of Mexican Topicals, has been summoned to Mexico City and will go about the middle of January. While there he will present two pictures he made for the natives, "Aspects of Modern Mexico" and "The Virgin of Guadalupe."

In advance of his going, Mr. Wright requested executives of the American industry to get in touch with him and present in detail their idea of the proper protective legislation to safeguard the marketing of American films in Mexico. It is Mr. Wright's intention to submit to President Carranza the draft of a bill to prohibit duping.

Vice-President Mermons of the Educational is now said to be receiving from exhibitor circuits and individuals throughout the United States a large number of inquiries concerning the release date and terms of his six-part fiction spectacle, "The Key to Power," featuring Claire Adams and Hugh Thompson.

Following up the first of the new Bruce-Educational winter series, "The Wanderer and the Whozitt," the Educational Films Corporation presents the Western traveler's next scenic study entitled "The River Gray and the River Green."

Offered in New York pre-release early in January, it will be supplied to the regular Educational houses a little later in the month.

Robert C. Bruce offers an entirely different theme in "The River Gray and the River Green," it being in essence a poetic story of river personality. He has completed the laboratory assembly and titling of his new series of twenty pictures.

Pathe's four serial bets. At either end are Betty Compson and George Larkin, to appear in a new continued photoplay, "The Terror of the Range." Ruth Roland will next be seen in "The Long Arm," a Reeve-Logue serial now in production at the Astra Studio in Glendale, Cal., while Pearl White is already claiming new honors in "The Lightning Raider."

Sennett Beauty Plays Lead with Washburn

The Western studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that Mary Thurman, the Sennett-Comedy beauty, has been engaged to play a feminine lead in the forthcoming Paramount production, "Poor Boob," in which Bryant Washburn will be starred.

Miss Thurman recently left the Sennett studios, entering the dramatic field of the screen. Miss Thurman's first appearance on the screen was three years ago.

Wanda Hawley will again be leading woman for Bryant Washburn in this production.

The next Paramount picture in which Bryant Washburn will be seen is "The Way of a Man with a Maid," to be released December 29. The story was written by Ida M. Evans and was picturized by Edith Kennedy. The Evans stories have gained popularity in The Saturday Evening Post. Miss Kennedy has numerous Paramount successes to her credit, including "Jane Goes a Wooing," starring Vivian Martin, and "The Cruise of the Make Believes," Lila Lee's first Paramount picture. Donald Crisp directed the photoplay.

U. S. Series Opens Auspiciously

New Official Pictures Released in Two-Reel Subjects Every Two Weeks Gives Promise of Immediate Success

THE new Government series of pictures, with the general title "U. S. Series," each covering a single phase of the world war, with details of how America handled the stupendous task of bearing its part of the burden in the conflict, gives promise of meeting with immediate success, both with the exhibitors and the public, according to report.

The facts, figures and interesting scenes given in the pictures are said to be of a kind that meet the demand of the public at this time, giving information that has been withheld up to the present time on account of the exigencies of war.

It was to meet this demand of the public, to give full-pictured information on the marvelous achievements of the Nation in the war that the Government prepared the series.

The release of the first picture of the series "If Your Soldier's Hit" was on December 23.

"If Your Soldier's Hit" illustrates the efficiency of the Medical Detachment and the Field Hospital Corps by showing how the first-aid detail goes forward behind the fighting line, how wounded men are rescued and taken to advanced dressing stations by stretcher bearers, given first treatment, then passed on to the field hospital and finally to a place of safety.

The second picture of the series, "Wings of Victory," is set for release January 6. It is the story of the air programme of the United States; how it was prepared and how it was carried out. It shows America's achievements in building planes and training aviators for the gigantic effort of defeating the Huns; the story of motor, plane and coming ace, and how the three were aligned that America might fill the skies of France with swift fighters.

The two reels of the U. S. A. Series will be released at the rate of one every two weeks, allowing exhibitors ample time to book them for a showing in rotation. The third picture of the series, "Horses of War," shows how the horse still holds his place of honor on the field of battle.

"Making a Nation Fit" is the fourth release, giving views of how the Government proceeded to make fighting men out of men of sedentary habits, how they were hardened for battle and made fit.

Fox Announces Dates for Mix Re-Issues

The five Tom Mix two-reel comedies to be released as re-issues by William Fox have been completed, it is announced, and they will be released in conjunction with the Fox-Lehrman Comedies.

The first Tom Mix subject will be "Hearts and Saddles," which will be released January 12. This will be followed by a Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy, "Oh, What a Knight!" The second Tom Mix comedy will be "A Roman Cowboy," to be followed a week later by a Sunshine Comedy, "A Lady Bell Hop's Secret." The next will be "Six Cylinder Love," after which will come "His Musical Sneeze," another Henry Lehrman creation. Tom Mix in "A Soft Tenderfoot" will be followed by a Sunshine Comedy, and the fifth Tom Mix subject will be "Tom and Jerry Mix."

The Fox Film Corporation states that it has prepared new one and three-sheets and other publicity and advertising devices for these offerings.

Six Features for January Universal Program

Universal announces six features for release in January.

"The Wildcat of Paris," featuring Priscilla Dean, which had a pre-release showing ending December 21 at the Broadway theatre, is scheduled as the initial special attraction of the New Year. This will be followed by Violet Mersereau's latest feature, "The Nature Girl," written and directed by O. A. C. Lund. "The Craving," featuring Francis Ford, will follow "The Nature Girl" on the release schedule, and Harry Carey's "Roped," a special attraction, comes next. "Roped" was adapted for the screen from Eugene B. Lewis' original story "A Matrimonial Cleanup." Neva Gerber is his female lead.

Carmel Myers is featured in "Who Will Marry Me?" which follows "Roped." This film play is adapted from the story, "The Beautiful Mongrel." Thurston Hall is leading man.

Ruth Clifford in "The Game's Up," adapted from the story "Home James" is scheduled for release January 27. Elsie Jane Wilson directed.

It is expected that Jewel Productions, "The Heart of Humanity" will be released in January.

Coming Vitagraph Serial Is Half Finished

Word comes from the west that "The Man of Might," latest of Vitagraph serials, is making rapid progress. Already the half-way mark has been passed as regards actual filming of episodes, and the sixth episode has just come out of the finishing rooms.

Altogether there are fifteen episodes in this serial, which is promised to prove an epic of action, by William Duncan, the star. Like Vitagraph's preceding serials, "The Man of Might" is from the pens of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

"Democracy—The Silver Lining" in Six Reels

WITH story and direction by Sidney Morgan, Frank E. Spring presents what is announced as a six reel drama of our own times and entitled, "Democracy—The Silver Lining."

World rights are controlled by Progress Film Company, Ltd., of 101 Wardour Street, London, England. The cast includes Wyndham Guise, Alice De Winton, Frank Dane, Alice O'Brien, Jack Andrews, Mrs. Hubert Willis, Alice Russon and Bruce Gordon.

The story of "Democracy" is described as not so much of the great war as of those home influences and events which have so changed the aspect of Great Britain's life during the many years of her great trial.

The feature shows that before the world upheaval that country was apparently prosperous and happy, dealing justly with her neighbors, and, depending upon the valor of her soldiers and sailors, had slowly but surely drifted into a position of false security.

The film portrays how the great nation awoke when the blow fell and how rich and poor adapted themselves to the changed conditions. The story deals with the life of a country squire possessed of his old fashioned belief in "The sacred rights of property" and the relation of himself and family with some of the tenants of his estate.

"This property is mine and I can do what I want with it," declares the squire as he pulled down several cottages to improve the view from the north wing of his house.

"There is no room for us in the country," said the strong young man of the soil to his sister, and they went to London.

And then the war, which brought them both degradation and ruin. How the war influenced the various characters in the story, bringing together those so far apart, and how the necessities of the times moulded the life of the nation, is shown in a series of incidents which are said to have had their foundation in the living realities of the moment.

Frank E. Spring, managing director of Progress Films of London, announces that "Democracy—The Silver Lining" was produced in England and made for the entire world to see.

Blackton Starts Work on "A House Divided"

Having successfully launched "The Common Cause," his Vitagraph special, and "Life's Greatest Problem," the labor picture, which he has placed for booking by the Independent Sales' Corporation and distribution through the Film Clearing House, J. Stuart Blackton has begun his next superfeature, titled "A House Divided."

This is to be an elaborated picture version of Ruth Holt Boucicault's novel, titled "The Substance of His House."

Past Eighteen Months, Gratifying"—Ince

"The past eighteen months of photo-play production," said Thomas H. Ince, after giving his O. K. to a few final details for his new $250,000 picture studio at Culver City, are gratifying.

"The forty productions made under my supervision and released under the Paramount banner have received generous praise from theatre managers and critics throughout the country. Picture making during the period just passed has been handicapped in many ways. In working in an old studio and cramped quarters a great deal of energy has been consumed overcoming existing difficulties to bring productions up to the standard. In the new studios which will be occupied about January 1, we will have plenty of room and every modern equipment for efficiency and speed. Cleanliness, comfort and convenience will have the psychological effect of eliciting better work from every person connected with the making of pictures.

"However during the months to come the message from the Ince studios will be one of good cheer—every picture will have a story, one that will grip and hold the spectator, but they will leave him in a spirit of satisfaction, a realization that he has been entertained and feels better for the time he has spent before the screen."

Male Goose Joins Cast of Madge Kennedy

Rumplestilzen cannot be denied a prominent place in the cast of Madge Kennedy's west Goldwyn picture, "Day Dreams," Cosmo Hamilton.

Rumpie is only a goose, but in the play is a prince of the sea that a wicked fairy has transformed into the simple bird. The Goldwyn press agent declares that Rumpie does some wonderful things in "Day Dreams," and that is why Primrose (Madge Kennedy) is always at his side, tending and feeding him and always lending willing ear to his tales of woe.

Wanted—"Nothing But Truth"

Executive of Gaumont Company Tells of the Fairness and Unfairness of Some Publicity

AN executive of Gaumont Company gives an interesting statement in the following interview on the fairness and unfairness of publicity:

"The Gaumont Company," he said, "has never been guilty of exaggeration in its advertisements or in the publicity matter it sends to the newspapers and trade papers. Its publicity writers have instructions that no statement must ever be made which is not in every way authenticated by fact.

"That all film producing companies are not so careful that nothing but the truth shall appear in their press matter was evidenced in an article in a recent issue of a trade paper. One of the most important news events of the year was the surrender of the German High Seas Fleet on November 21. Motion pictures of this surrender were shipped from England on the steamship Adriatic. Naturally, exhibitors on this side of the water were anxious to show this great historical event, and rivalry between the news forces of the companies which specialize in such pictures was keen. The entire trade now knows that the Gaumont Company scored another big 'scoop' with its one-reel special, 'Driven From the Seas,' which was shown on Broadway, complete and fully titled, the night of the day the film arrived in the United States, fully a day ahead of others.

"The publicity article in question, however, which was evidently printed before the film actually arrived, told how the news editor of a competing company boarded the steamer at Quarantine on Monday night, two nights before the steamer arrived, and had the film ready for the customs inspectors before the boat docked the next day. There were many thousands of mail parcels on the steamer, and, aside from the fact that editing this picture on shipboard was a physical impossibility, every person in the United States of ordinary intelligence knows that Uncle Sam does not allow even such important personages as editors of news reels to meddle with his mail. Such press matter as this article does the industry infinitely more harm than good.

"The Gaumont Company did not charter a tug and send its news editor to board the Adriatic at the quarantine station. But it did have a hustling representative on hand when the ship docked Thursday morning. And as soon as the postal and customs authorities turned over the picture to the Gaumont representative, in a proper, legal and due-course sort of way, it was rushed to the laboratories at Flushing, and in a very short time finished prints were being appreciated by Broadway spectators.

"The first exhibition of the surrender of the German fleet in the United States and Canada is only one of many big news 'scoops' which the Gaumont Company has been able to pull, because of the fact that its news-gathering force is composed of experienced newspaper men. These 'scoops' include the Eastland disaster, the subway cave-in a few years ago, the Black Tom explosion and the Halifax horror, which was shown on Broadway several days before competitors received their negative."

Wide Variety in World's January Program

WORLD PICTURES announces a wide variety of both stars and pictures for its January program of releases. In the list is found the third Government war picture, "Under Four Flags," which had such successful runs at Rothapfel's Rivoli and Rialto theatres during their initial presentation in New York City. This number is scheduled for the week of January 6th.

First on the January program comes "What Love Forgives," starring Barbara Castleton and Johnny Hines, with Muriel Ostriche and John Bowers prominently casted. "We Have Met the Test"

A Crucial Year in Review

By Samuel Goldwyn

THREE major facts we have learned during the last year which indicate very clearly and, to my mind, conclusively that the cinema industry is entering on a new phase, a phase of greater prosperity than it has ever enjoyed before. Briefly, it means, first, better pictures, and secondly, bigger exhibitor profits.

The first important fact we have discovered is that the motion picture is not merely an amusement and a luxury but a necessity. Primarily we believed that the Government declared it one of the essential industries because of the power it contributed to keeping up the morale not only of the soldier at the front but of those he had left behind him to supply him with the sinews of war. (One day, for instance, the Secretary of War made an emergency demand upon the industry for no less than 2,500,000 feet of film for immediate shipment to France).

But subsequently we found out that the cinema's contribution to victory was much greater and more important than even we had any idea of. Incredible as it may sound, I believe I can show you that at one time—the darkest period in the whole war, when nothing but disasters crowded the front pages of the papers, when everybody felt pessimistic—it was American film that actually helped to save the day.

It was the American picture that gave the lie to Hun propaganda at the crucial time in Europe. They showed the English and French people, hundreds of thousands of soldiers in the camps drilling, munition factories turning out shells in unheard of quantities, gigantic shipyards covering miles of ground and launching a ship a day.

Now we come to the second important fact that the past year's events have established, for it grows out of the first. And that is: the industry is founded on rock bottom. Otherwise we never should have been able to weather the storm we have just passed through. The influenza epidemic coming, as it did in wartime, when we never dreamed that victory would happen so soon, when the whole country was geared up for the struggle, hit us the worst blow in the history of the cinema, the worst blow, I am confident, that we shall ever have to endure. We never could have come through the war, let alone the epidemic, if the motion picture had not proved its essentiality.

As I look back over the past few months I first of all wonder how on earth we ever came through it and then I realize how the very fact that we have come through it safely proves that our prospects are assured.

Indeed the ordeal we have had to undergo has strengthened us. Let me point to just one indication: did you ever before see everybody getting together as they did during the influenza crisis? We have learned that throat-cutting does not pay, that the policy of dog-eat-dog is just as fatal in the cinema industry as anywhere else. We have also learned that we can get together—a possibility that hitherto nobody believed in.

An Error Corrected

Due to a typographical error, the sale of the serial, "The Demon Shadow," being a re-issue revised from "The Twenty-Million-Dollar Mystery," was accredited to the Specialty Film Company of Dallas, Tex., for the Southeastern States.

"The Demon Shadow" was sold to the Sipe Film Company, Atlanta, Ga., for this territory.

Taylor Cites Co-operative Spirit in Nebraska

C. W. Taylor, branch manager of Select Pictures' Omaha exchange, brought to the attention of his home office an example of co-operation between tradesman and exhibitor that is worth passing along to other exhibitors who read this paper.

The point of co-operation in question concerns Constance Talmadge's recent picture, "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," which was billed at the Strand theatre in Omaha. Realizing the many possibilities of getting this attraction over to the public, Manager Stolte, of the Strand, got in touch with the proprietor of Omaha's most exclusive shoe shop and arranged a deal whereby the proprietor placed a pair of embroidered slippers in his show window, supplemented by pictures of Constance Talmadge, with sign reading: "These Are the Boots—See the Play at the Strand This Week."

Mme. Blache Has Difficulty with Title

Mme. Alice Blache, the French director, is experiencing misfortune in selecting a title for her production, starring Dolores Cassinelli with Albert Roscoe according to announcement made by her this week. She states that she has selected at least, twenty titles, all of which have been "already applied for" at the copy right bureau, Washington. Leonce Perret who supervised the production, has suggested a title and Mme. Blache is awaiting word from Washington, as to its originality. An announcement of title, personnel of cast and nature of story, will be made later, she says.

Desmond's First Ready January 12th

William Desmond's first starring vehicle, produced by Jesse D. Hampton, "Life's a Funny Proposition," for distribution through Exhibitors' Mutual, is announced for release January 12. Louis Lovely is leading lady to Mr. Desmond. J. Belasco, John Stepping, B. Du Vau, Vera Doris, Lillie Sylvester, Joe Franz and John McGregor are seen in the supporting cast.

Thomas N. Heffron directed the production. Mr. Heffron has to his credit such productions as "The Planter," starring Tyrone Power, "Mountain Dew" and others.

E. K. Lincoln Likes S-L Production Methods

E. K. Lincoln especially engaged as star of the newly formed organization bearing the brand name "S-L Pictures," declares that he is greatly delighted with the production methods pursued in the making of his initial starring vehicle, now under way at the Sawyer-Lubin Studios in New York.

"I have been particularly gratified with the expert knowledge of production matter and studio detail displayed during the making of the first S-L Picture by Ralph Ince and Arthur H. Sawyer," he said.

Blackton and Kelly Form Producing Team

J. Stuart Blackton and Anthony Paul Kelly, author of one of Broadway's biggest successes, "Three Faces East," and one of the screen's most gifted writers, have formed a permanent production team and will work together on Commodore Blackton's screen productions.

"A House Divided" is the third consecutive Blackton production coming from the pen of Mr. Kelly. It was Mr. Kelly who adapted for screen production the version of J. Hartley Manners' and Major Ian Hay Beith's "The Common Cause." "Life's Greatest Problem," first titled "Safe For Democracy," the first Blackton production, was an original work of Mr. Kelly.

"A House Divided," Commodore Blackton's latest work, now under production, was adapted for screen presentation by Mr. Kelly from Ruth Helt Boucicault's novel, "The Substance of His House."

Mr. Blackton states that his association with Mr. Kelly is in line with his policy to present the best available in story and script as well as in production, and Mr. Kelly's arrangement with the producer assures him a capable presentation of his stories and scenarios.

The five leading players in Commodore Blackton's "The Common Cause" have been selected again to interpret the leading roles in "A House Divided." They are Herbert Rawlinson, Sylvia Breamer, Lawrence Grossmith and Charles and Violet Blackton.

Mestayer, Author and Star, of Late Triangle

"Wife or Country," Triangle's release for the last week in December, has for its star Harry Mestayer, who is also accredited with the authorship. Gretchen Lederer is given the leading feminine role. Gloria Swanson and Jack Richardson are cast prominently. E. Mason Hopper directed and Clyde R. Cook did the camera work.

Mr. Mastayer's best known works as star and leading man on the Triangle program are incorporated in the screen versions of "The House of a Thousand Candles" and "Stop Thief." In "Wife or Country" he has the role of a successful attorney who falls a victim to drink and is redeemed by the woman he loves.

Harry Carey's "Roped" for January Release

Harry Carey's first release on Universal's 1919 program, special attractions, scheduled for release in January, is titled "Roped," and has just been completed at Universal City. "Roped" is an adaptation from Eugene B. Lewis's work, "A Matrimonial Lean-Up," and was produced under the direction of Jack Ford. Harry is the role of a cowpuncher who gets into all sorts of matrimonial entanglements. Neva Gerber has the principal feminine role. Others in the cast are J. Farrell MacDonald, Arthur Shirley and Lolly McConnell.

Exhibitors Firm Says Pettijohn

C. C. Pettijohn Declares That Confidence of Exhibitors Facing Economic Readjustment Is Most Encouraging Indication

"THE motion picture business is faced to face with an economic readjustment as radical as that which confronts every other American industry, and the best, the most interesting, and the most encouraging indication of impending changes is the confidence of the exhibitor in the business."

This is the statement of C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, who has just returned to New York from a trip to Chicago, Omaha, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Salt Lake City.

He interviewed exhibitors in all these important mid-west and far west centers and brought back a message of optimism and encouragement over the conditions he found and the expressions he heard.

"The exhibitor is looking for a new order of things," said Mr. Pettijohn. "He is expecting a reconstruction of the business in this coming era of industrial reconstruction, a reconstruction which will place the picture business on a sounder economic basis than it has ever been."

"In this period of expectancy within the industry the exhibitor, the owner of the big house, the owner of the circuit as well as what we call 'the little fellow,' is keenly interested in every move among distributors and producers. I never before saw so much enthusiasm and interest evidenced by the men who sell the product to the consumer."

"The 'big fellows' are as much interested as the 'little fellows,' for they are realizing, as they never realized before, the advantage to themselves through co-operation with the owners of smaller theatres.

"The exhibitor is through with the order of things which forced him to put into his theatre pictures he didn't want, pictures his audiences didn't want, in order that he might play the pictures that he wanted to play. They are determined as never before to buy their product on the sounder economic principle of buying what they want and what they can retail to advantage."

"The exhibitor is determined to come into his own, and he is so thoroughly determined that he will take matters into his own hands unless he can very quickly wipe out the conditions under which he has been, as he feels, oppressed in the past."

"Everywhere that the epidemic had been I found exhibitors had put in the period of suspension into the improvement of their theatres and to me this seemed one of the most hopeful signs of the times. The box office is the backbone of the business. When there is confidence there the industry has much reason to be hopeful, and there is, certainly and surely, confidence in the future of this business at the box office."

"Many theatres have emerged from the period of darkness completely renovated, many partially rebuilt, and nearly every one of them with new electric lights and a lot more electric lights than ever shone there before."

"Fundamentally the prosperity of this business is built on the confidence of the exhibitor in the business, and the exhibitor has confidence to-day, more than he ever had."

Mr. Pettijohn expects to remain at the New York offices until after the holidays, when he will make another extended trip into the field.

Katterjohn Producing Alaskan Drama

MONTE KATTERJOHN "comes across" with another story of the Alaskan country. "Hearts of the Stampede" is the title and he announces that it is now under production by his own company. The personnel of the cast is not announced but Mr. Katterjohn promises full details concerning story and production in an early issue.

The author is one of the screen's most popular writers of life in Alaska, his "Flame of the Yukon" having been pronounced by critics to be the best Alaskan story since Rex Beach's "The Spoilers" was shown. "The Flame" followed as another Alaskan drama to the credit of the author and then his "Carmen of the Klondike," all three of these depicting in a most virile manner, life in the Alaskan country. The last named is considered Mr. Katterjohn's best work.

Now comes his announcement that he has under production "Hearts of the Stampede," also an Alaskan picture, said to contain possibilities for screen presentation, that excel those offered by his past successes. This picture will be the first of the Katterjohn Film Productions, a producing organization formed to produce the works of the author.

The author has studied every detail of life in Alaska and is probably better fitted to write of the life there than any other author. Speaking of his venture, Mr. Katterjohn said:

"While I am setting rather a high goal, I am fully determined that 'Hearts of the Stampede' produced by my own company, must in every way eclipse my other two successes along these lines. Those of my associates who have already seen the new story have announced themselves as highly pleased with it, and all are impatient for the actual inauguration of production activities."

Farnum Commences Next Fox Production

William Farnum started this week on "The Lucky Charm," temporarily titled, at the William Fox studios in Fort Lee, under the direction of Richard Stanton. The story was written especially for Mr. Farnum by George V. Hobart, the playwright.

1918 Was Year of Achievement

J. Stuart Blackton Rounds Out Twenty-one Years of Film Producing and 1918 Was Banner Year

TWENTY-ONE years ago J. Stuart Blackton began his career as a film producer by making motion pictures on the roof of a building in New York. His success since those pioneer days, when he helped found the Vitagraph Company and did much to make the moving picture the artistic success it is today, is a part of the history of the industry itself.

It was in 1897 that Commodore Blackton directed his first motion picture, a "production" fifty feet in length, showing a Spanish flag fluttering in the breeze with the hand of the producer rising slowly into the picture, tearing down that flag and hauling up in its place the Stars and Stripes. At that time the Spanish-American War was on, and the little film is said to have aroused wild enthusiasm wherever shown.

A writer on the publicity staff of Blackton Productions declares that it is a significant fact, in view of this initial achievement, that to Commodore Blackton goes credit for the production of the first preparedness propaganda picture dealing with the more recent conflict.

"This was 'The Battle Cry of Liberty,'" he continued, "which was followed by his 'Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation,' one of the first military and industrial mobilization pictures made.

"It was but natural, then, that the list of his super-productions should also include a picture which is at once unusual screen entertainment and a pictorial record of incidents in the world war, of the work of every implement used in waging the battles.

"This is 'The Common Cause,' the war play with a laugh, a thrill and a throb," the outstanding Blackton achievement of the year 1918, a year which has been a banner one in his career, having recorded several of his greatest successes and established him as an independent producer, the president and director-general of Blackton Productions, Inc., with business offices in New York and personal studios in Brooklyn."

Early in the year Commodore Blackton, who was then affiliated with the Famous Players-Lasky company, having several months previous severed his active association as a Vitagraph producer, retaining his financial interest in the company, made his first production trip to California.

There he produced "Wild Youth" and "Missing," the last two of his series of Paramount pictures. He then returned to New York to acquire the screen rights of "The Common Cause," the play by J. Hartley Manners and Major Ian Hay Beith, which he was commissioned to film under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

The reception accorded "The Common Cause" by the trade press reviewers on its recent private showing at the Rialto theatre and its success as reported by Vitagraph exchanges distributing the picture are described as matters of current film history.

"The Common Cause" cast consists of Herbert Rawlinson, Sylvia Breamer, Lawrence Grossmith, Huntly Gordon, Mlle. Marcel and the Blackton "kiddies," while the allegorical prologue and epilogue introduce Julia Arthur, whose first work before the camera was said to be for this picture; Marjorie Rambeau, Irene Castle, Violet Heming and Effie Shannon.

Before its release Commodore Blackton presented "Safe For Democracy," which he produced from the labor question story written by Anthony P. Kelly. It was featured at the Rivoli during the week of November 3, and has been re-titled "Life's Greatest Problem," and with "The Littlest Scout," a new Paula Blackton Country Life story, it is being booked by the Independent Sales Corporation and distributed through the Film Clearing House.

"A House Divided" is the first Blackton production for 1919. It has just been started and will occupy the producer's time for some days after the New Year. Regarding the distribution destiny of this picture and the productions underlined to follow it, no announcement has been made, but those in the know state Commodore Blackton is formulating plans for yet another big special timely release to make his 1919 even more prosperous and gratifying than 1918.

"Educational Will Supplant Propaganda"

"The motion picture industry will in 1919 turn from the propaganda picture to educational films," says Leonce Perret, the French director. "I myself would not care to make any more film productions with a propaganda nature. 'Lafayette We Come' has been a very splendid propaganda feature, and I hope 'Stars of Glory,' the victory film which I have just completed, will meet with approval. But now the war is over and we need no further propaganda films. I feel sure the motion picture industry, very anxious to conquer new territories, will to a certain extent devote its energies to educational films during the new year. I should not at all be surprised if the Government took up the idea of educational motion pictures in schools seriously in the coming year."

Peggy Pearce Engaged for Sunshine Comedies

Peggy Pearce, who has been appearing in recent Mack Sennett comedies, has become a member of Henry Lehrman's Sunshine Comedies company.

Miss Pearce was one of the members of the L-Ko company at the time that Mr. Lehrman was at the head of it. She went with Sennett after Mr. Lehrman sold his interests and remained with that producer until she accepted an offer to return to the Lehrman fold.

She has just started work on her first Sunshine Comedy in which she appears in support of Jack Cooper and Leo White, who are working under the direction of Reggie Morris.

Brentwood Analyzes What Public Demands

In selecting the story of "The Turn in the Road" for feature production the Brentwood Film Corporation reasoned that the public demand in pictures has undergone a very marked change during recent months.

In place of unreal sex problems, sensationalism or spectacular effects, they feel that there is now a steadily increasing call for the real and true both in comedy and in drama.

"The Turn in the Road" is described as a picture of bright humor, deep heart interest and realism. It raises problems which are familiar to most American families and it is said to offer solutions which are sound, cheering and uplifting. The plot is laid in eastern cities and the story and direction are by King W. Vidor.

Chester Barnett Supporting Zena Keefe

Arden Photoplays, Inc., first production, "The Challenge Accepted," stars Zena Keefe, with Chester Barnett in the leading male role. Mr. Barnett has supported some of the screen's leading stars, among them Vivian Martin, Clara Kimball Young, Pearl White, Alice Brady, Norma Talmadge, Gladys Hulette and Bessie Love. With the exception of one instance he has played the part of the hero, the exception being the part of the villain in "The Rack," starring Alice Brady.

"The Challenge Accepted" was directed by Edwin L. Hollywood and is distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe.

Fairbanks Picture Opens New Theatre

"Arizona," Douglas Fairbanks latest Artcraft picture, was the opening attraction at Miller Theatre Company new house in Los Angeles, The California Theatre, last week. The California has a seating capacity of 2,500. Mr. Fairbanks presented the management with a cactus plant in place of the conventional floral piece.

It was a Fairbanks that opened the Rivoli and Rialto in New York, the Strand in New Orleans. An Artcraft production, Cecil B. DeMille's "The Woman God Forgot," starring Geraldine Farrar, that opened the Kinema, Los Angeles and a William S. Hart feature opened the Grauman.

Eddie Polo Makes Many Personal Appearances

Manager McAleer of the Universal exchange at Pittsburgh received the following telegram from Manager G. J. Schweitzer of the Century theatre, Pittsburgh, which tell partially of Eddie Polo's success there.

"The World's yours. Early arrival of Polo saved brass rails, chairs, doors. Stopped ticket sale at seven. Demonstration a duplicate of Victory Day. Appreciate your earnest endeavors to avoid disappointment."

Official War Pictures Are Booked Heavily

"America's Answer," the second official United States War Picture which was shown for the first time officially, in New York in July, after which official presentations were made in a number of the principal cities, has played in 1819 theatres and contracts are made for its exhibition in 3204 other theatres, it is announced by Division of Films. Contracts are now being made at the rate of 150 or 200 each week, the announcement reads.

"This booking record is positive proof of the equitable and profitable points of the Government proportionate plan of charges for the film," said one of the executives "and is also a sure indication of the desire of the public to witness this message of General Pershing, taken at the time that America was in the midst of war."

The great demand being voiced by both the public and exhibitors for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, indicates that it will immensely outplay "America's Answer" and it is expected by both the Division of Films and the World Film that the picture will be shown in over 4000 theatres. World Film are releasing these pictures.

May Allison Girl Sleuth in Newest Metro

May Allison learns sleuthing by correspondence in her newest Metro starring chicle, "Peggy Does Her Darndest," now in its third week of production at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Peggy becomes Sherlock Holmes in skirts after lessons by mail from the School of Detectivity.

Her new role in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," which follows "In for Thirty Days," and "The Testing of Mildred Vane," gives Miss Allison exceptional scope for a display of dazzling feminine attire.

Robert Ellis appears opposite Miss Allison in the role of a young Englishman who brings his family jewels to America. Rosemary Theby plays the older sister. Others in the cast, selected by Director General Maxwell Karger, are Wilton Taylor, Dick Fosson, Sylvia Ashton and Ernest Morrison, a little colored actor who has the part of "Snowball" Snow. The story, by Royal Brown, was scenarioized by George A. Baker, who is also directing the star.

War Review Shows Troops in Vladivostok

Official War Review No. 27, released through Pathe, December 30, will give the first scenes shown of the operations of the American army in Siberia.

Views are given of the great naval barracks at Vladivostok, where eight thousand American soldiers were quartered; the warehouses along the shore are shown to be crammed with war materials and munitions, saved by the Allies from falling into the hands of the Huns. Toughboys are seen guarding treasures of copper, wool, tin, rubber and wire.

A Dramatic Moment in Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Adventure Shop," Featuring Corinne Griffith

Screened Great Stage Success

Vitagraph Releases "The Lion and the Mouse," Charles Frohman's Stage Success, February 10

A GREAT stage success is transferred to the screen, a book which has proven unusually successful, especially with women readers, is converted into a cinema play, and four original scripts portrayed sums up Vitagraph's offerings for the last two weeks in January and for February in toto.

The first of these is "The Lion and the Mouse," the play that, in its stage version, was written by Charles Klein and presented by Charles Frohman.

The release schedule in full, just issued, is as follows: January 20, Earle Williams in "The Highest Trump"; January 27, Gladys Leslie in "Fortune's Child"; February 3, Harry T. Morey in "Silent Strength"; February 10, Alice Joyce in "The Lion and the Mouse"; February 17, Corinne Griffith in "The Girl Question"; February 24, Bessie Love in "The Wishing Ring Man."

Alice Joyce plays the role of Shirely Rossmore in "The Lion and the Mouse" and adds another characterization to her long galaxy. In her support are Conrad Nagel, Anders Randolph, Henry Hallam, W. T. Carlton, Mona Kingsley, Jane Jennings, Mary Carr and Templar Saxe.

The book play on the list is "The Wishing Ring Man," based on the book of that name by Margaret Widdemer, and is described as just the kind that Bessie Love knows so well how to act. David Smith is directing it.

Earle Williams figures not only as the star of "The Highest Trump" but is one of the authors as well. With H. H. Van Loan he constructed this play and the story is said to be most ingenious. Grace Darmond plays the heroine and James Young directs the picture.

Harry T. Morey stars in "Silent Strength." In one of the scenes Morey, in a dual role, is seen in a fist encounter with himself, is felled by his double and sprawls the length of the picture at the feet of the victorious double.

"Fortune's Child," gives Gladys Leslie grateful opportunities. Miriam Miles, Denton Vane, Kempton Greene and Stanley Walpole are among Miss Leslie's cast. The play was written by Lawrence McCloskey and directed by Joseph Gleason.

"The Girl Question" deals with the close-range psychological studies of woman on part of a young novelist, and stars Corinne Griffith.

Salvation Army Picture Is Well Under Way

"The Virginian" is a screen version of Owen Wister's celebrated novel of the same name. Mr. Farnum is supported in this production by Winifred Kingston, Billy Elmer, Frank Campeau, Monroe Salisbury, Anita King, Sydney Deane, Hosea Steelman, H. B. Carpenter, Dick La Reno and Jack Johnston.

Stoermer Sees a Bright Future

Author of "Honor System" Offers Own Production, "The Tidal Wave," on Open Market—Predicts Strong Demand

WILLIAM STOERMER, author of "The Honor System" and producer of "The Tidal Wave," which he is offering now on the independent market, speaks in the following interview most optimistically for the future in the states rights field. Here's what he has to say:

"Optimist that I am, I confess myself amazed at the extent, geographically and financially, that the states rights field holds at this moment in the picture market. My surprise follows the campaign I'm prosecuting at this moment to let the public know what my new picture, 'The Tidal Wave,' is about. The states rights field isn't new to me. But there's a new big jazz in the market, and it's the ringing down the curtain on the big tragedy abroad that's given the market its new drive.

"There's scarcely a states rights block on the map that isn't indicated several times in the answers my trade advertising have generated. And the prices that are suggested in some of the inquiries prove again that the film field is a by-path of Wall street for producers who can deliver the goods.

"'The Tidal Wave' is a big subject just now riding the crest of public interest. It is real artistic substance, and all the force of pictures of big effects that any large special production nowadays must possess to lift it out of the programme class. No expert who sees it will gainsay this.

"The story was inspired by Robert Louis Stevenson's observation."

"The play begins at about the moment of the Chateau Thierry impact. The war had kept the lovers separated four years. Involuntarily the girl becomes a factor of big import in the cataclysm. Secret agents of the Wilhelmstrasse environ her. The conspirators aiming at the new alignments of the map after the ambitions of Berlin become the girl's neighbors. The eruptions, upheavals in Berlin, Vienna, Moscow, Paris, New York, Rome, and the big, high spots of Russia, are all part of the drama and are all shown with the actual uprisings in those countries caught by the camera."

Edward Small Agent for Artic City Studio

IN the heart of the Adirondacks, at Port Henry, close to the shores of Lake Champlain, Artic City has been created and fashioned into one of the most complete and modern motion picture studios in the country, according to an announcement made, this week, by Edward Small, Inc., sole agents, for the rental of the studio.

Artic City has been erected primarily for the use of independent producers desiring to rent a studio surrounded by exterior scenes bringing before the camera the countries of the Yukon, the lumber camp, Siberian, Lapland, Russian, Eskimo and typical western scenes. The studio, it is said, has all the facilities of the Artic region and the region in which it is located has been termed Nature's Wonder Spot.

In addition to all this natural beauty,

Mr. Small announces that there is at the disposal of the producer a complete zoo of trained animals, including Russian bears, timber wolves, educated horses, police dogs, Eskimo dogs. Michael Schliesser, known for his work of this nature in motion pictures, has charge of the zoo.

The studio has a floor space of 80x190 feet and is equipped with all the modern improvements in lighting effects and scenery. It is eight hours from New York.

Lila Lee Starts Fifth Paramount Picture

Lila Lee, youngest of Paramount stars, left New York Sunday for Hollywood, Cal., after spending a vacation of more than two months with her guardians, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards. A three-day stop was made at Chicago, where the little star passed Christmas Day.

Upon her arrival in Hollywood Miss Lee will start work on her fifth Paramount picture, which will be an adaptation of Grace Miller White's popular and delightful story, "Judy of Rogue's Harbor." The director has not yet been chosen.

Prior to her coming East for her vacation Miss Lee had completed four pictures without a week's rest. Two of these yet remain to be released, "The Secret Garden" and "Puppy Love." The first named of these, an adaptation of the popular novel by Frances Hodgson Burnett, will be released January 12. Miss Lee is considered an ideal type of girl for a story by this noted authoress, who created "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario. G. Butler Clonough directed and Henry Kotani was photographer. Lou Howland assisted in the direction.

Farnum to Florida for Next Fox Picture

Richard Stanton, directing William Farnum in the Fox production temporarily titled "Lucky Charm," will take the company to Florida after Christmas for the filming of exterior scenes. Edward Sedgwick, Mr. Stanton's assistant, has gone to Miami to find locations, and he will be followed by Edward Bach, chief carpenter of the William Fox forces. A Hindu city is to be built and many of the scenes will be filmed in and around the Everglades. Work has been begun on a set representing a Hindu temple. Mr. Stanton will have about 1,000 persons working for him in Florida. He intends to take at least 100 extras from New York.

In addition to a company of 1,000 persons, Mr. Stanton will use a large number of animals of the jungle, as the story has its setting in the wilds of India.

Three scenes from "Ruling Passions," the picture purchased by Select, which will be released as a Special production

Select Gets "Ruling Passions"

Abraham S. Schomer's Production to Be Handled as Special Attraction by Select Pictures Corporation

SELLECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces the acquisition of Abraham S. Schomer's latest photoplay, "Ruling Passions." The picture will be released exclusively through the twenty-one Select exchanges in the United States, and will be handled as a Select special attraction.

"Ruling Passions" is the latest work of the man who gave to the public "The Yellow Passport," "Today" and "The Inner Man." It is declared that the genius of Mr. Schomer encompasses the ability to write and produce plays upon the speaking stage and write and produce photoplays upon the screen as well.

In this manner "The Yellow Passport," first presented by him upon the Yiddish stage, was afterwards made a successful photoplay. "Today," which Mr. Schomer wrote for the speaking stage, made a hit on Broadway when presented with Emily Stevens in the role of the woman who could not stand the sting of poverty, and this also was later presented on the screen, with Florence Reed as its star.

"The Inner Man" Mr. Schomer also presented first on the speaking stage, it having been one of the Broadway presentations of a season or two ago.

The photoplay "Ruling Passions" presents an original story which has been both written and directed personally by Abraham S. Schomer. It is described as a story which is characterized throughout by good feeling and good fellowship.

There is said to be nothing morbid or disagreeable about this picture. It portrays a man who is embittered with life, and the audience can understand why he is embittered.

The late Edwin Arden is co-featured in "Ruling Passions" with Julia Dean. Both do work before the camera which is said to be impressive for its sincerity. And the others in the cast are as satisfactory in their respective roles.

"Ruling Passions" comes as a refreshing note in this day of turgid and passionate dramas," said a Select official. "Exhibitors can recommend the picture to their patrons with the feeling that there is much to praise in it and nothing at which the most captious can carp."

W. W. Hodkinson Denies Current Rumor

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that Kerrigan features are released in the United States by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and not by Robertson-Cole Company, and will be so released for the next eighteen months.

W. H. Seely, of Robertson-Cole Company, in a letter to Hodkinson Corporation, wrote: "We regret exceedingly that such an impression should have gone abroad and caused you any embarrassment. We hasten to assure you, however, that we have no part in this matter whatever; that we have even refrained from advertising the Kerrigan pictures in the foreign territory which we control since we entered into our contract with the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. A careful perusal of our publicity and announcement of our releases will verify our statement that there has been no announcement emanating from us which could have been misconstrued in the manner indicated in your letter."

"In disclaiming any responsibility for this impression we are obliged to say that we do it regretfully, for we like the Kerrigan pictures and would be glad if we had them."

Good Reports on Blackton's "Common Cause"

"The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's late production, releasing as a Vitagraph special, is "hitting on all six cylinders," according to exhibitor reports to Vitagraph. At the Park theatre, in Boston, the picture met with every success, and in Des Moines, Iowa, the same result was had, according to wires received at the Vitagraph offices from these points.

From Portland, Ore., points in Florida, Canada, Chicago, where it opened at the new Riviera theatre; in the South, at the Rialto in Nashville, and the Walnut in Louisville—all report favorably.

Herbert Rawlinson has the leading male part, Sylvia Breamer is prominently cast, and Julia Arthur, Marjorie Rambeau, Effie Shannon, Violet Heming, Irene Castle, Huntley Gordon, Lawrence Grossmith, Charles and Violet Blackton, Mlle. Marcel and Philip Van Loan are seen.

"Cheating Cheaters" in the Cutting Room

All the scenes for Clara Kimball Young's latest picture, "Cheating Cheaters," have been taken and the film is now in the hands of the cutter and titler, according to an announcement by Select Pictures' Corporation. The December release of Miss Young's Select Star Series, "The Road Through the Dark," is now before the public in the first-run houses.

It is announced that this is the first time that the star has been ahead of her schedule since the organization of the Select Pictures' Corporation.

Goldwyn Eulogizes Ford Educational Weekly

One of the chief advantages from the exhibitors' standpoint of the Ford Educational Weekly, it is pointed out by Goldwyn, is its comprehensive "covering" of the feature angle of the news of the day, and they claim that it has the advantage over a film news weekly of being able to devote an entire reel to a single subject, much as a Sunday newspaper could expand an interesting topic for its weekly magazine in a manner which lack of space in the daily issue would forbid.

What Goldwyn terms as two remarkable instances of this are offered in the first few issues of the Ford Educational Weekly to be released by Goldwyn. While the first pages of the nation's newspapers are featuring the report of the investigation of shipbuilding at Hog Island, the world's largest shipbuilding plant, the weekly offers "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas," an interesting, up-to-the-minute exposition of Hog Island activities.

In this the fabricating of a great merchant ship is followed from the laying of the keel through the launching and finishing. "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas" is declared to be the first comprehensive cinema-portrayal of a work that did much to help the United States and the Allies win the war.

"The Truth About the Liberty Motor" is another case in point. In the last few days the newspapers have published bits of the interesting story of how this wonderful airplane engine was conceived and how quantity production was attained with a speed which amazed Allied engineers.

Maxwell Karger Receives Greatest Gift

Maxwell Karger already can see outward and visible signs of his Christmas gift. The three big stages of the new Metro studios on Romaine street, Hollywood, are finished to the extent that four companies are at work on them.

Stars' dressing rooms have been whipped into shape to shelter those particular and discerning luminaries of the screen, and the dressing rooms of the lesser lights are also habitable.

The administration building is said to have been going up like a mushroom—almost overnight—and it was promised for occupancy by Christmas Eve.

Joseph W. Engel, Metro treasurer, now in the West, is in direct charge of the studio construction. His immediate aides are Clifford P. Butler, studio auditor, and Ralph C. Godfrey, of the technical staff.

Universal Changes Title of Clifford Feature

The title of Ruth Clifford's latest picture on the Universal program has been announced as changed from "Home, James" to "The Game's Up." Elsie Jane Wilson directed. The adaptation was made from a story by Gladys Johnson. Al Ray, brother of Charles Ray, has the leading male role.

Roosevelt Picture Is Finished

First National Exhibitors' Circuit Will Distribute Roosevelt Picture, According to F. L. Collins of McClure

THE first official announcement in regard to the Roosevelt picture comes this week from the office of Frederick L. Collins, head of the McClure motion picture and publishing interests, and personal representative of Colonel Roosevelt in motion picture matters.

His statement declares that the picture is finished and will be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

William Nigh, who made "My Four Years in Germany," with Ambassador Gerard, was in personal charge of the large directing and producing staff that completed the Roosevelt picture.

"It was not an easy thing," states Mr. Collins, "to select just the right director for the Roosevelt picture, for the story of the production contains almost every element to tax the skill of a producer, including kid-stuff, western scenes, fist fights, cowboy stunts, behind-the-scenes, Washington effects, the atmosphere of the White House and Sagamore Hill, and right-down-to-the-minute war pictures embodying the experiences of Colonel Roosevelt's heroic sons.

"The man who could successfully visualize a scene in which T. R. knocks out a bad man in a wild-west saloon might not be able to do justice to the German Ambassador's stormy interview with President Roosevelt in the White House, or the intimate scenes of extreme delicacy surrounding the work of the Roosevelt boys at the front.

"And I had to have a man who was acceptable to the Colonel and who could work with him. It takes a good man to 'direct' Colonel Roosevelt!

"William Nigh appealed to me most strongly, not alone because of his varied experiences and his success with Ambassador Gerard, but because he seems to be one of the few men who have discovered the secret of making distinguished men and important public characters seem real on the screen.

"William Nigh is a student of detail and a master of make-up. He spent hours in seeing that his characters look the part, and has surrounded his distinguished principal with authoritative portraits of the men who have been making history in this republic.

"Colonel Roosevelt has given Mr. Nigh unusual opportunities to study the family life of the Roosevelts at Oyster Bay, and, as promised in his earlier statement, is co-operating with me in every way to make this picture a great success."

Colonel Roosevelt is not making this picture for personal profit, but has distinctly stated that all the royalties received by him are to be devoted to the Red Cross and other war charities, and it is for this purpose that he commissioned Mr. Collins to present a picture version of his life and works.

The picture portrays the experiences of Colonel Roosevelt at various stages of his career, but it is said to be in no sense a dry autobiographical or historical picture. It is said that the authors have steered clear of all controversial or political subjects, so that this picture will have entertainment value for the movie patrons.

Joyce Completing Klein's Famous Drama

"THE LION AND THE MOUSE," a screen version of Charles Klein's successful stage drama of a few years ago, is nearing completion at the Vitagraph studio, according to announcement by the Vitagraph Company. Alice Joyce is the star and the production is being made under the direction of Tom Terriss. Vitagraph announces it for release on February 10th. "The Lion and the Mouse" is considered by critics and the public at large to be the late Charles Klein's best work for the American stage.

The star feminine role, that of Shirley Rossmore, is interpreted by Miss Joyce, and word comes from the Vitagraph studio from those who have seen flashes of the screen version that the star has never had a more sympathetic role or one that emphasizes her rare dramatic qualities as that of Shirley Rossmore.

Conrad Nagel, who has done some clever work for the silent drama, has the role of Jefferson Ryder. Anders Randolph, known for his cleverly interpreted villainous and straight dramatic roles, has the role of John Burkett Ryder.

Henry Hallam impersonates Judge Rossmore, T. W. Carlton is given the role of Senator Roberts, Mona Kingsley has the part of Kate Roberts, Jane Jennings appears as Mrs. Ryder, and Mary Carr, William H. Burton and Templar Saxe appear in the other principal roles. Those who have seen Miss Joyce's work in the role of Shirley Rossmore, express the opinion that she surpasses her triumphal interpretation of Mary Turner in Vitagraph's production of "Within the Law."

"Made in America" Presents Strong Cast

"Made in America," the Ashley Miller, W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's new patriotic series of pictures, in eight episodes, presents Richard Turner in the leading male role of John Evers, who wins distinction for bravery in the war. Lillian Lawrence has the role of Mrs. Evers. Miss Lawrence is favorably known on the speaking stage, having appeared in "Along Came Ruth," "His Majesty, Bunker Bean" and "Nothing But the Truth"—Broadway successes. Edward Burns has the part of Jimmy Evers. Mr. Burns is one of the screen's youngest actors and was seen lately with Elsie Ferguson in her late picture "Under the Greenwood Tree." "Made in America" was produced under the direction of Mr. Miller.

How Simplex Met Lens Shortage

A Human Interest Story of Industrial Achievement During the World War of Nations

PRIOR to the entry of our country into the war the majority of the supply of lenses used on motion picture projectors was distributed between three of the leading optical concerns in the country. With the declaration of war there began an immediate checking up by the Government of all manufacturers who were engaged in the producing of things essential to the Government.

One of the industries that received particular attention was the optical business. The sudden Government demand for high-grade binoculars for army, navy and aeroplane use proved an overwhelming load on the manufacturers.

One of the first steps taken by the Government was to assure itself priority rights to the major portion of the output of these plants—leaving very little to be distributed through the commercial trade, of which the projection lens was only a small part. So great was the Government demand for optical glasses that "four-minute speakers" all over the country urged their theatre audiences to loan whatever glasses they might have to Uncle Sam. Newspapers and posters were also used as mediums for the same purpose.

This sudden and wholly unlooked-for demand had a telling effect upon the motion picture industry. The manufacturer of projectors was specially hard hit—to send out new equipments without lenses would be impractical causing untold inconvenience, and in many cases would require the exhibitor opening a new house to use a different-size picture from that for which his screen and stage had been designed for.

This shortage forced many exhibitors to change their screen size at once rather than waiting till later, thus adding another weight to the overburdened lens business.

Machine manufacturers scoured the country through their various distributors for all available lenses. Notices were issued to conserve the dealers' supply of projection lenses by only selling in cases of utmost necessity. At the Government's request the manufacturers of projectors agreed to restrict the purchasing of lenses with equipment to three sizes—four, five, and six inches on projectors and sixteen, twenty and twenty-four inches on stereopticon lenses.

One of the optical concerns, who were under contract to supply the Precision Machine Company with lenses, had a good portion of their output taken over by the Government. They were free, however, to supply the projection lenses according to their contract, but with little thought of the machine man and the exhibitor they suddenly stopped making projection lenses entirely and left the Simplex high and dry—and here is where the proverbial far-sightedness and characteristic ability to handle big situations stood Mr. Edwin S. Porter, vice-president of the Precision Machine Company, in good stead.

He decided to manufacture his own lenses.

The manufacture of lenses is a business entirely apart from that of machine manufacture. Many to whom Mr. Porter confided his plans tried to dissuade him from taking this step. They pointed out the unfamiliar channels, the intricacies to be encountered and numerous other things, all of which would have discouraged a less determined man.

His first step was to secure the services of the best optical expert available. A $25,000 plant was equipped at Morris Park, L. I. The very latest machines used in lens-making were installed. Several special machines containing exclusive features were especially built by the Precision Machine Company and the finest brains of the lens industry were engaged, with instructions to turn out lenses which carried with them the same high quality that has brought the Simplex machine to the front.

It had been customary, in receiving the regular supply of commercial lenses at the Simplex factory, to subject them to certain tests in order to maintain the Simplex standard before including them in the equipment. This testing process resulted in a remarkable number of rejections. With this in mind, the Simplex lens factory turned over for examination the first dozen lenses some weeks ago and, upon being tested out and examined by optical experts, were declared to be superior to the commercial lenses now in use, each of them measuring up to the standard.

There was apparent greater focal depth, brighter illumination and a universal definition distributed evenly over the field, proving that by combining skill with utmost care regular uniformity of perfection can be carried out in the making of projection lenses.

The Precision Machine Company is to be congratulated on their progressiveness and they are pleased to announce that they will, as soon as the production warrants, offer the new lens to the trade, including their competitors in the machine-building line.

Kerrigan's First Picture for the New Year

"The Drifters," J. Warren Kerrigan's newest J. D. Hampton feature, will be the first picture to be released on the Hodgkinson programme for the new year. It was written by Kenneth B. Clarke, produced under direction of J. D. Hampton. Following this, the star will appear in "Come Again, Smith," a modern-day comedy, written by John H. Blackwood.

Brady's "Stolen Orders" Pronounced Magnet

William A. Brady's "Stolen Orders," which was an opening attraction at Loew's new two million dollar Metropolitan theatre in Brooklyn, has duplicated its success in the other theatres of the Loew Circuit, it is declared.

It is described as an exceptionally well executed melodrama, with a story that thrills and holds.

Select's "Police" Picture "Cops" Approval

Select's Thomas H. Ince special production, "The Midnight Patrol," has received the stamp of approval from the police forces in all centres where the picture has been shown, according to letters received from these sections by Select Pictures.

T. O. Tuttle, branch manager of Select's Atlanta Exchange, writes:

"The Midnight Patrol" is a picture in which the policeman is an important figure, and it is believed by general sales manager Woody that the exhibitor's strongest advertising point is in interesting the police of his town. In Nashville, Tennessee, the police department became so enthusiastic over this benefit proposition that they bought the picture themselves and arranged for its exhibition through W. H. Wassman, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, having Mr. Wassman guarantee the rental price of the picture.

"In no instance where we have been able to discuss the matter with the officials of the Police Department and have them see the picture, have we failed to secure their co-operation and assistance."

Smith Designs Help for Lip-Readers

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph Company, has designed a method whereby the motion picture and the talking machine will be so combined as to make possible the teaching of "lip reading" by means of the screen. Mr. Smith believes that this will be valuable in illustrating the problems of the teachers now depending on personal illustration in demonstrating the position of the mouth in sounding vowels and consonants.

Norma Talmadge's Latest an Indian Picture

Norma Talmadge's latest, "The Heart of Wetona," adapted to the screen from David Belasco's Broadway success, will be Miss Talmadge's first New Year's offering to the public.

"The Heart of Wetona" is a story of the Great Northwest and has for its heroine an Indian girl, the daughter of an Indian chief. Wetona becomes the wife of an Indian agent. It presents a typical story of the West, with cowboys and Indians predominating the cast.

Director Sid Franklin was in charge of production and it is said that he has turned out an Indian drama that surpasses anything ever done along this line for the screen. Miss Talmadge as the half-breed Indian girl does some of her best acting, it is said by those who have seen flashes of the picture. It has not been announced when the picture will be released, but in all probability it will be given to the exhibitor some time in January.

Viola Dana Starts Work on "Diana Ardway"

Viola Dana has started work at the Metro studios in Hollywood in a modern screen comedy drama, "Diana Ardway," the little star's first picture to be made on the West Coast after her return there from the East.

"Diana Ardway" affords Miss Dana another of those piquant roles in which she is so much at home. It is a screen version of the novel by Van Zo Post and was scenarized by John H. Collins.

Milton Sills, featured player in "The Honor System" and numerous other screen productions, plays opposite Miss Dana in the leading male role of Paul Warden, the dramatist. Herbert Blache is directing, and the entire production is under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

John Arnold, who photographed the dainty star in all of her recent Metro pictures, is again her camera man.

Arbuckle Starts Work in His New Studio

Peggy Pearce, Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedies

WILLIAM FOX announces a wide variety of features in the list of releases of the January programme. All but one of the William Fox brands will be represented in the list of sixteen pictures for the first month of the new year.

Under the Standard Pictures' group two pictures will be released; "The Light," staged by J. Gordon Edwards, and telling the story of "the wickedest woman in Paris," and "Woman, Woman!" starring Evelyn Nesbit. This picture is an adaptation of a novel, "On Desert Altars," written by Norma Lorimer, and was staged by Kenean Buel.

A Tom Mix subject and a Gladys Brockwell subject will be released under the Victory Pictures' group. The Tom Mix picture is "Treat 'Em Rough," which won commendation from the trade. This picture was directed by Lynn F. Reynolds and was made on a ranch at Prescott, Ariz. One of the scenes shows Tom Mix "bull-dogging" the leading steer in a stampede of cattle.

"The Call of the Soul" is the title of Miss Brockwell's January release. It was directed by Edward J. LeSaint. Mother-love is said to be the dominant theme.

The two Excel pictures to be released are "Smiles," featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, and "The Girl With No Regrets," in which Peggy Hyland is starred. "Smiles" was written by Ralph H. Spence and Albert Glassmire, and was directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom, who directed the Lee children in two of their most recent pictures, "Swat the Spy!" and "Tell It to the Marines."

In "The Girl With No Regrets" Miss Hyland will appear in the role of a young girl who, through no fault of her own, becomes entangled with a band of crooks. Harry Millarde directed.

Four of the William Fox Great Nine, a group of former successes that have been revised and retitled, will be released in January. These are "The Serpent," featuring Theda Bara; "Regeneration," "The Broken Law," starring William Far-num, and another Theda Bara super-production, "Under Two Flags."

January will see the inauguration of the former Tom Mix two-reel comedy successes. Five of these successes, in re-edited and revised form, will be issued every other week, beginning January 12, so that the January releases in this group will be "Hearts and Saddles," and "A Roman Cowboy."

One Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy will be issued—"Oh, What a Knight!" Four Mutt and Jeff animated Cartoons will be released in January. They are "The Lion Tamers," "Here and There," "The Hula Cabaret" and "Dog-gone Tough Luck."

Little Sambo is the able assistant of "Little Mary Sunshine," and there is a cast comprising Jack Connolly, Bob Gray, Bert Wilson and Howard McKenzie.

"Wolves of Kultur," the patriotic serial, featuring Leah Baird, presents a characteristic episode in No. 12, called "The Tower of Tears." A drop into the waters of Au Sable Chasm is one of the several happenings in this instalment.

Harold Lloyd, assisted by Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, goes through some funny adventures in the Rolin Comedy, "She Loves Me Not."

Post Travel Series, No. 25, gives many instructive views of unusual locations and life in Japan.

Official War Review, No. 27, shows in a comprehensive fashion the activities of the armies of England, France, Italy and America just before the cessation of hostilities, and is said to create the same amount of tense interest.

"Out of the Shadow" Is Next Frederick

A Paramount release of January 5 which is expected to prove of more than passing interest to exhibitors and motion picture fans is "Out of the Shadow," in which Pauline Frederick plays the stellar role.

This is an adaptation of "The Shadow of the Rope," a novel by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles."

Wyndham Standing appears in the leading male role. In the role of Severino is Syn. de Conde. Others in the supporting cast are Ronald Byram, Jack W. Johnson, William Gross, Emma Campbell, Nancy Hathaway, Agnes Wakefield, Henry Heaton, William T. Hayes, Catherine Thomas, W. Harcourt and Harry Kosher.

"Hearts of Humanity" Opens

Jewel's Late Offering, Starring Dorothy Phillips, Opens to Big Houses at Broadway—Praised by Critics

"HEARTS OF HUMANITY," Jewel's latest production starring Dorothy Phillips, was given its initial presentation at the Broadway theatre last Sunday. Friday night at 11.30 a trade showing was given. The production was given three exhibitions on the opening day and evening, and each performance found the Broadway house crowded.

At the evening performances, the star, Miss Phillips, and her husband, Allen Holubar, who directed "Hearts of Humanity," were present and were presented in person to the audiences. This marked Miss Phillips' first personal appearance before a Broadway audience, and she was received with applause. The Broadway orchestra furnished the music, and it is said that this presentation was the most enthusiastically received of any production that has played the Broadway house in a long, long time.

It is announced that the picture was eleven months in the course of production. It is said that another month will elapse before the advertising campaign which has been planned by Jewel Productions for this feature will have been completed. More than 300,000 feet of film were taken in the course of "shooting" this picture, it is announced.

Universal executives maintain that "The Heart of Humanity" is not only the biggest Universal production, but a drama with a more impressive, broader scope than any yet seen on the screen.

The scenario was prepared by Mr. Holubar and Olga Scholl and the entire production was photographed in California, near Universal City, by three cameramen, Fred Granville, Harold Janes and King Gray. Frank Lawrence and Viola Mallory edited and cut the negative. Sergeant Sidney Flowers of the Canadian Army assisted Director Holubar with the technical direction of the photo-drama.

The principal players featured are Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell, Mrs. Margaret Mann, Eric von Stroheim, Robert Anderson, who won fame as "M'sieu Cuckoo" in "Hearts of the World"; Lloyd Hughes and Frank Braidwood. Pat O'Malley is seen as Clancy, an Irish-American, and Walt Whitman is cast as Father Michael, prior of the Canadian woodland settlement.

New York press critics commented, in part, as follows:

New York Times—"There is no doubt of that. . . . Allen Holubar, who directed it, did his work with independent intelligence, care and skill that make 'The Heart of Humanity' a distinct achievement of motion picture operation. . . ."

New York Tribune—"Miss Phillips does as fine work right here as we have ever seen upon the screen."

New York World—"It is of utmost interest, with stirring action, vivid battle scenes, variety of incident, and the combination of humor and sentiment that is always sought after, whether on stage or screen."

Morning Telegraph—"The Heart of Humanity' scores as a production, deftly pictured, cleverly sub-titled and artistically conceived."

New York Mail—"Promises to have a long Broadway run. . . ."

New York Evening Sun—"Cast is competent, direction excellent and photography, particularly the nocturnal battle scenes, superb."

"Scarlet Trail" Opens to Crowded House

"The Scarlet Trail," a propaganda picture, depicting the evil sexual indiscretions, produced by B. S. Moss, had its premiere at the 39th Street Theatre, last week. The screen version was inspired by Charles Larned Robinson's document, "Don't Take A Chance" which was distributed throughout the ranks of the Army and Navy because of its value as a morality document, by the Y. M. C. A., and other welfare organizations. It is a plea to children and parents to avoid the indiscretions of the sexes. The American Defense Society (Social and Hygiene Dept.) has endorsed "The Scarlet Trail" as a worthy medium by which the public may be enlightened and prepared to defend its future as a race.

The story is a romantic episode concerning two young people who have led clean lives, are betrothed and because of a taint inherited by the boy from his father, are prevented from realizing the future they had planned. Beth Ivins and Vincent Coleman have the principal roles.

Arrangements for Handling Advance Deposits

The Exhibitors Mutual Film Corporation announces that it has completed banking arrangements for handling advance deposits made by exhibitors. The Robertson-Cole Company, bankers and importers, which has arranged with the Exhibitors Mutual organization to distribute all its film purchases, also, becomes the banker for the exhibitors. Accounts have been opened in each city containing an Exhibitors Mutual exchange, and as soon as the advance money is received, it is deposited to the credit of the Robertson-Cole Company, who become guarantors that service will be rendered or money refunded.

Keenan "The Midnight Express" January 12

INTEREST in the plans of Frank Keenan, already outlined, to become an independent producer, is expected to be deepened upon the presentation of "The Midnight Stage," an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, released by Pathe on January 12.

Mr. Keenan has declared that he will risk his professional reputation and the fortune which has been placed at his disposal to make the very best pictures from the best stories obtainable and cast by the best talent.

"The Midnight Stage," he says, may be regarded as a promise of what may be expected when he turns to the new enterprise. It is his last picture also in which he is merely the star, and he declares that so far it is the best of all the screen successes in which he has been starred, not even excepting "The Bells," pre-released at the Rialto theatre, New York.

Like "The Bells," "The Midnight Stage" was one of the plays that gave Henry Irving fame, and the over-full measure of interpretation and intimate quality that Mr. Keenan renders to it on the screen is declared to be due to the fact that much of his measure of fame as an actor is due to his stage portrayal of the star characters in these plays.

"The Midnight Stage" is an adaptation of the original French play, "The Lyons Mail," which has been considered a classic of dual character work, and was arranged for the screen by Jack Cunningham, who, instead of adhering to the French story and the 1776 period, transferred the plot and the locale to California in the sixties.

In this manner there has been retained, it is asserted, all of the splendid craftsmanship of the original, while the story comes forth as a truly American drama laid in the period of the most picturesque and romantic period of the great West.

Mr. Keenan plays the dual role of John Lynch, the upright, chivalrous Southerner, and Big Rivers, road agent.

He considers it one of his greatest roles, as the doubling gives him a splendid opportunity to show distinctive versatility.

The supporting cast consists of Mignon Anderson as Mary Lynch, and Maude George portrays Nita. Others in the cast are Charles Gunn, Joseph J. Dowling, Thomas Guise, Wadsworth Harris and Ernest C. Warde, the director.

Ohio Theatre Opens with General Program

The Cincinnati office of General Film Company sends word that the opening of the Clifford Theatre, in Urbana, O., on Christmas Day, represented a general program. The new house is conducted by Billy Clifford.

"Out Of The Night" starring Catherine Calvert, a Wm. L. Sherry Service, six-reel feature; "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris," an American Red Cross patriotic one-reeler; and "Nearly A Slacker," a Rainbow Comedy in one reel.

The Clifford Theatre is Urbana's newest house and has a seating capacity of 1200.

Shows Re-Making Faces

One of the new films released by the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures considered the most unique of the series prepared for theatre use, is called "New Faces for Old."

The whole reel is devoted to showing exactly how wounded soldiers of the Allies are receiving special treatment to enable them confidently to mingle again with friends and family after they have been badly disfigured.

James J. Corbett Will Star for Universal

Universal executives are elated over the signing of James J. Corbett to appear in future Universal productions.

They have been casting about for a male star for several weeks and in Mr. Corbett they claim to have the combination of a capable actor and a well-known character.

Mr. Corbett made his theatrical debut about twenty-four years ago when, under the management of William A. Brady he was featured in "Gentleman Jack," "The Naval Cadet" and "The Adventurer."

Later under the direction of Henry B. Harris he was featured in a George Bernard Shaw play, "Cashier Byron's Profession," and after a run of the Shaw vehicle he was featured in "Facing the Music," an English farce, "Pals," "The Burglar and the Lady," "Around New York in Eighty Minutes," a musical comedy.

At different times Mr. Corbett appeared on Broadway in vaudeville and stock, and he also toured the country for several seasons with a vaudeville sketch.

One Producer Represented Strongly on Broadway

For the second time in as many weeks, Paramount and Arcraft productions enjoyed presentation at three motion picture theatres on Broadway.

In addition the Rialto presented the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Hide and Seek, Detectives," with Ben Turpin, Charlie Lynn and Marie Prevost; James Montgomery Flagg was seen as the star in "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan," the newest Paramount-Flagg comedy, at the Strand, and the Rivoli was showing "The Greatest Gift," Hamish MacLaurin's Red Cross picture, produced at Famous Players-Lasky Studios.

MacIntyre Compiles Unique Record

Robert B. MacIntyre, casting director for World Pictures, announces the completion of a record of the career of all the principal screen actors. The purpose of this record is to furnish him at a moment's notice the names and capabilities of the actors that he thinks are the proper types for productions. The record embraces the names, addresses, telephone numbers and the line of parts for which they have shown themselves best fitted; what productions and under what management they have made their biggest success; a description of the range of their roles; how they photographed on exteriors as compared with interiors; the salaries they demand, and such other matters of valuable information as to afford the casting director all information that only can be secured by personal interview.

William Selig Library Bought

Robertson-Cole Company Purchases Four Hundred Plays and Stories from Comprehensive Collection of Col. Selig

OUR hundred books, plays and stories have been purchased by the Robertson-Cole Company from William Selig. This collection is known as the Selig library and is described as containing works by some of the biggest authors in this country and England.

Mr. Selig's first announcement that he had secured the picture rights on a great number of literary works by the best-known authors in the country, was many years ago.

This necessitated contracts with publishers of magazines, authors and playwrights, not only on their past works, but on some of the material they intended turning out.

In picking these books and plays they were chosen for their popularity and because their construction would readily lend itself to motion pictures.

Since then fiction works have been used extensively in pictures, and authors whose names were confined to books and plays now find their works prominently displayed on the screen.

The previous advertising a good book has had naturally gives the picturized version an added value. A list of popular works is considered one of the most valued assets a motion picture company can possess. The Robertson-Cole Company's acquisition of the Selig library is declared to have given them material such as no other company has had when starting in the film business.

Among the list is a story by S. Barrett McCormick, the well-known exhibitor of Indianapolis, Ind. Other authors whose names are familiar throughout the country are, Earl D. Biggers, Rupert Hughes, O'Henry, Montagu Glass, Porter Emerson Brown, C. G. D. Roberts, Henry Irving Dodge, Eugene Wood, Epes Winthrop Sargent, Freeman Tilden, Ray L. McCardell, Charles Belmont Davis, E. Phillips Oppenheim, William Anthony McGuire, Opie Reed, Louis Joseph Vane, Randall Parrish, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Will M. Hough, James Oliver Curwood, Sir Gilbert Parker and Eva Unsell.

Canada and East Sold on the Ford Serial

THE seventh episode of Francis Ford's latest independent serial production, "The Silent Mystery," is nearing completion, according to information received from the New York offices of the Silent Mystery Corporation. With this announcement comes the information that all of the Eastern territory has been sold to state rights' buyers, and that the foreign rights are under consideration. Canada, East and West, is also reported as being sold. Hiller and Wilk are handling the foreign territory. Louis Burston is the producer.

The list of the territory sold and the buyer follows: Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to the Merit Film Corporation, New York; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, Arrow Film Company, Philadelphia; Western and Eastern Canada, Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Toronto, Can.; Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia and North Carolina, Super-Films Attractions, Washington, D. C.; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Penn Film Service, Pittsburgh; Georgia, Florida, Alabama and South Carolina to first National Exhibitors' Circuit, Atlanta, Ga.; Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi, R. Dean Craver, Charlotte, No. C.; Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, Bee-Hive Exchange, Chicago, Ill.; Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, Silent Mystery Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Mae Gaston and Rosemary Theby have the principal feminine roles opposite Mr. Ford, who has the featured role of Phil Kelley.

Educational Distributes "Photoplay's" Films

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew, John Emerson, Anita Loos and other star players and writers will be among the star releases of the Educational Films Corporation beginning the second week in January. Obviously these folk aren't booked in feature productions, but in journalistic reports of their home and studio activities.

James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, is said to have caught 'em off their guard in unposed attitudes and self-directed personal doings and snapped 'em in the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement.

The Educational will distribute one Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement each month. Each one is described as a thousand-foot intimate portrayal of world-famous screen stars. A novel form of advertising will consist of sixty-foot trailers offered to exhibitors the week preceding the showings.

The trailer will have a flash of at least one of the stars to be picturized, reading a page of illustrations from Photoplay which when touched by a fairy's wand will come to life and show the figures in motion.

E. W. Hammons, Vice-President and General Manager of the Educational, closed the contract for this series just before the new year dawned and said that as long as his organization had successfully distributed Coal, Nature, Wild Animals, World Potentates, American Soldiers and Fighting Navy, that Douglas Fairbanks, the Drews, and other stars to appear in the new series would add honors to his list.

"The Specials Get the Money"

An Interview With Harry Garson

HARRY GARSON made a whirlwind trip to New York from Los Angeles and after a brief but exceedingly busy three-day stop was off again for the West Coast with only a short stop-over at Detroit, arranged for his return trip.

"Exhibitor-Distributor-Producer" properly describes Mr. Garson's many activities. He is still interested in two theatres in Detroit, and also a couple of film exchanges, but his main interest at this time is in piloting the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and the Blanche Sweet Productions.

The erection of a large modern studio in Los Angeles will be started within two weeks and Mr. Garson expects that it will be completed within a few months.

This trip back to New York was planned for November 1, but the influenza epidemic halted the producing of the final scenes in "The Unpardonable Sin," and Mr. Garson had to fairly move heaven and earth to secure the necessary permission from the health authorities in Los Angeles to enable him to complete the production.

"The Unpardonable Sin" stars Blanche Sweet, supported by Walter Beery and Matt Moore. Marshall Neilan directed the production which was originally intended for an eight-reel picture and then announced as a nine-reel production.

Mr. Garson informed a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that in spite of an immense amount of cutting the production now runs a full ten reels and is brimful of action in every foot of it.

When Marshall Neilan completes the directing of Mary Pickford in "Daddy Longlegs" he will again direct a special production in conjunction with Mr. Garson, but Mr. Garson does not desire to make public at this time just who the star will be nor will he announce the title of the story.

"The Unpardonable Sin" is not a war picture, and Mr. Garson goes on record as saying that the big so-called spectacular production, with hundreds of people, is a thing of the past, and that it does not present the appeal that a powerful story backed by a good star supported by a strong cast and capably directed, will bring to the screen.

"I believe that the motion picture patrons are absolutely tired and sick of the so-called big battle scenes portraying thousands of people. When we selected 'The Unpardonable Sin,' by Major Rupert Hughes, we knew that we had a powerful story. It ran serially through the Red Book and was widely read.

"Then Harper published it in book form and it received a tremendous circulation then and is still going strong," continued Mr. Garson. "Although Blanche Sweet has been away from pictures for eighteen months we wanted her for this particular dual part and we secured her. There was a good combination. An excellent story and a well-known star.

"To support a star you must have a good cast. Walter Beery and Matt Moore met the requirements and we augmented the efforts of these three by a well-balanced cast. Then of course everything was in our favor. We had the director, Marshall Neilan, who with myself happens to be the 'We' in this production.

"I am leaving New York tomorrow night and will be in Los Angeles to witness the premiere of 'The Unpardonable Sin' at Clune's Auditorium. I predict that it will be a big eye-opener and will demonstrate that it is one of the very few big feature productions of the year.

"Besides being a great believer in the open market idea for exhibitors in booking film I am also a great believer in the open market idea of producing film," he went on. "In other words I believe that when you have the ideal combination of story-star-director-cast, you can absolutely depend on producing a picture that is far away and above the ordinary program feature.

"While we are not disposing of territorial rights on 'The Unpardonable Sin' I still believe that many of the regular motion picture theatres about the country are beginning to realize that they can charge a bigger admission price on a superior production and that the public will gladly pay it.

"I know of several instances to prove this. There was an exhibitor on the outskirts of Detroit who paid a tremendous rental for a big special production and raised his price from the regular fifteen cents admission to fifty cents admission.

"He packed them in so thoroughly that he had to play two days return on this same production. The people will pay more for a special picture. In the days of the opera houses before the pictures secured such a stronghold on the public fancy, the opera house manager charged ten-twenty-three cents admissions for the repertoire shows and a dollar top for the one-night Stair and Haylin shows, and then managed to secure from two to three dollars top when a big Klaw and Erlanger show appeared.

"That's the answer and the quicker the motion picture exhibitors realize this the sooner will they encourage the producers to attempt the limit in high-class picture production."

Hale Hamilton Stars in "Johnny on the Spot"

Hale Hamilton, newest star in the Metro galaxy, is provided with another comedy drama in "Johnny on the Spot," by Shannon Fife, and scenarioized by June Mathis, which is now being filmed at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Louise Lovely has been engaged by Maxwell Karger, director general, as Hamilton's leading woman in the role of Anne Travers. Harry L. Franklin is directing the production, with the photography by Arthur Martinelli.

Pathe Claims "Infatuation" May Break All Records

Reports declared to be pouring into the Pathe home office from the various branch offices indicate that the Gaby Deslys feature "Infatuation" is in a fair way to break all records for feature bookings in the Pathe office.

The advertising value of a star like Gaby Deslys has been aptly demonstrated to the exhibitors who have announced the picture, according to Pathe officials.

Among the theatres reported to have booked "Infatuation" within the past week are the following:

Fox's Extravaganza Scoring Success

William Fox extravaganzas, "Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," are scoring big successes throughout the country, according to a statement from the Fox Film Corporation. These two pictures combine popular stories with settings of artistic beauty. They are the first extravaganzas to be issued in film form.

Bookings show that during the Christmas holidays "Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" will repeat their achievement of Thanksgiving week, when they played to crowded houses all over the country. Several theatres have arranged special children's matinees during the weeks when they show "Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba." In Boston, Harry E. Campbell, New England district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, made arrangements with the superintendent of schools whereby all the children in the Boston public school system were notified of the pictures' showing and special prices for children were advertised.

"A Kaiser There Was"

"A Kaiser There Was" is one of Universal's special comedy releases for the new year. It will be released about the first week in January. It is in two reels and features Billy Armstrong and Eva Novak.

Gaumont News to Issue West Coast Edition

The Gaumont Company announces that starting January 5, 1919, it will issue special Pacific Coast editions of its independent news reels, the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic. These will be edited by Mr. Eugene W. Castle, who has been associated with the Gaumont News Service for more than five years, and they consider Mr. Castle one of the best cinematographers that ever turned a crank, and also a newspaper man of long experience, which they feel will guarantee that these Pacific Coast editions will live up to the reputation of the Gaumont news reels in other parts of the world.

The Gaumont laboratories in the East have been noted for the quality of the negatives they turn out and for the rapidity with which they have prints of news events ready for the screen.

In the past, however, distance has prevented Pacific Coast theatres from screening these events as promptly as theatres in the East, but arrangements have now been perfected which will enable western theatres to screen events which have happened in the adjacent states before the negative could reach New York.

During the war Mr. Castle has been a sergeant and publicity promoter in the U. S. Marine Corps. His address in future will be care of the San Francisco Bulletin, California. A capable corps of cameramen, including many who have been connected with the Gaumont News Service in the past, will be maintained in every part of the West, and they will report directly to Mr. Castle.

Zion Films Starts First Production

Work on the first Sholem Aleichem picture by the Zion Films, Inc., of No. 1400 Broadway, will begin the first of the year. Sholem Aleichem is known as the Jewish Mark Twain. Because of the epidemic work was delayed for several weeks. For the first picture the company has selected "Eva," one of the best of all the writings of the Jewish humorist.

The Zion Films have also completed plans to produce a six-reel feature called "The Rebirth of a People," by Pinsky, the Yiddish dramatist. The picture will depict the realization of a 5000-year dream by the Jews of the re-establishment of their native land, Palestine.

The first Sholem Aleichem picture, "Eva," which will be in two reels, will be given a Broadway showing, it is announced. The cast for the first will be announced later.

Nathanson, managing director of Regal Films, Ltd., which controls the Canadian rights to "The Master Mystery," the fifteen-episode super-serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king, announces that the first showing of the serial in his territory will be held in Montreal on January 5th and in Toronto on January 6th.

The Independent Field

Osso Speaks "From Shoulder"

French Producer, Arrived Recently in This Country, Comments on Current Production

Adolphe Osso, a Recent Entry Into the Producing Field

ADOLPHE OSSO, the French producer, who arrived in this country some months ago, has a number of pertinent phrases to place before the motion picture public, which have merit. He says:

"Of the numerous films that were completed last week, I saw two, one of which was in every sense a 'War Film.' The other was a pictorial tribute to the heroes of the great Victory. At any rate, both, to my mind, seemed to be the kind of subjects concerning which there has been much said.

"Immediately after the signing of the armistice, I had my doubts as to the future of the 'war films.' The diverse predictions were confusing and so I decided to do a little of my own probing and investigating. With the affairs and management of three producing concerns to worry about, and the organization of a fourth now under way, it was vitally necessary for me to get the dope on the 'war film' straight in my own mind.

"A great, big question-mark loomed up before the exhibitor and hovered over the 'war films.' The only thing that could be done we did, and that was to tap the public pulse and determine its wants.

"A direct canvass of every book-publishing house was made to determine what their experience with war-books had brought to light. In every instance it was a book relating to the war that was the best seller.

"We solicited the newspaper syndicates furnishing the newspapers with feature stories and articles for publication; and in conjunction with one of the largest feature syndicates in the business wrote to the feature editors on the newspapers they served, and again we found that fiction based upon anecdotes avoiding a noticeable propaganda were eagerly devoured.

"In addition to the above we wrote to exhibitors in various parts of the country. The replies checked up with an idea back in my head. A good story, well acted, with good photography and properly produced, must be successful whether it be war or any other subject, and is bound to please an audience anywhere in the world.

"The two films referred to at the beginning of this article, Allan Holubar's 'Hearts of Humanity' and Leonce Perret's 'Stars of Glory,' two productions bearing on the war, yet each of a distinctly different type, are the two best films I have seen in a year.

"It is the best thing Leonce Perret has done. It is an after-the-war story which will please and is on the whole a glowing tribute to America's Stars of Glory."

Claim Ideal Press Sheet on "Wanted for Murder"

Frank Hall, of the Independent Sales Corporation, claims that their press sheet on "Wanted for Murder" is exactly what the exhibitors want and is designed to be of great practical use.

The lower half of the sheet is said to be devoted to press stories and reproductions of advertising accessories other than posters.

In addition to this are "Suggested Stunts," practical and novel ideas that can be used and which do not cost fortunes, it is said. Also the music cue sheet and "gag" lines that can be used as "teasers" or for the programme.

The cuts of the slides and posters also indicate that the Independent Sales Corporation has abolished the routine ideas.

Arrows' "After-the-War" Picture Completed

"The Profiteer," an "after-the-war" drama, Arrow Film Corporation's late independent production, starring Alma Hanlon and Jack Sherrill, is announced ready for the state rights' buyers. The production is in six reels and was produced under the direction of J. K. Holbrook. The story deals with certain phases of profiteering. The production was commended the day the Armistice was signed and completed in four weeks, Arrow announces.

An elaborate array of advertising matter has been prepared, consisting of 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 photo enlargements in sepia and in colors; two styles of one-sheets, two styles of three-sheets and one style six-sheet. Art slides, art drawings and a press book has been prepared also.

Houdini Serial in Majority of Territories

WITH the closing of contracts recently for the sale of the territory of Illinois and Indiana and the opening of the New York exchange the greater part of the country is now being covered by exchanges handling "The Master Mystery," B. A. Rolfe's fifteen episode super-serial produced for Octagon Films, Inc., in which Houdini, the handcuff king, makes his screen debut.

Loew Houses Will Play "Wanted for Murder" Solidly

Announcement come from the offices of the Independent Sales' Corporation, which recently acquired the Harry Rapi production "Wanted for Murder," after it had just completed a successful presentation at the Broadway theatre, that Marcus Loew has booked this picture for all of his theatres.

The importance and significance of this engagement at the Loew theatres to exhibitors is considered apparent, as the Independent Sales' Corporation officials figure that it means countless columns of advertising and publicity in all the Greater New York dailies and the biggest kind of a "splash" on the thousands of billboards used by the Loew theatres.

These are expected to be seen by people from every quarter of the globe who go to make up New York's great floating population, and with the eyes of all civilized peoples focused at this time on the peace proceedings in Europe.

James R. Sheehan with James Vincent

James Vincent, whose first production, "The Spirit of Lafayette," is soon to be given a public showing, brings with him into the film field James R. Sheehan.

Vincent and Sheehan have been "pals" for twenty years, in fact, since their boyhood days in Springfield, Mass. While Vincent has been identified with the picture industry for the past ten years, Mr. Sheehan has been associated with P. F. Shea in the management of his circuit of theatres as his general manager for the same period.

James Mott Hallowell, former Assistant Attorney General of Massachusetts and the author of "The Spirit of Lafayette," which is being picturized by James Vincent, made a flying trip to New York last week to view the taking of some of the important scenes in the production.

Ivan Abramson Busy on "Echo of Youth"

At the Biograph Studio, Ivan Abramson is at work on a new production for the Graphic Film Corporation, under the title of "The Echo of Youth."

The cast includes Charles Richman, Leah Baird, Pearl Shepard, Marie Shotwell, Jack McLean, William Bechtel, Peggy Shanor and Philip Van Loan, and the release date is scheduled for some time in January.

"The Hidden Truth" Due for Broadway Run

"The Hidden Truth," with Anna Case as the star, which was recently completed by the International Film Service Co., Inc., and to which the Select Picture Corporation have secured the distributing rights, is scheduled for a Broadway run some time in January, according to announcement.

Madge Kennedy Joins Coast Colony

Madge Kennedy has joined the group of Goldwyn stars at work in the big new studios of the company at Culver City, Cal. Tom Moore, Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand preceded her to the Coast in the order named, leaving only Geraldine Farrar and Pauline Frederick of the presently engaged stars to follow. Miss Frederick is at work in the old Biograph studio, the Bronx, on her first Goldwyn picture, and Miss Farrar is busy with her opera engagements. She will not go west until spring.

Madge Kennedy has never before had the pleasure of working in motion pictures in California. Her screen experience is limited to appearances in the old Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, where she began her cinema activities a little more than a year ago.

"Dolly's Vacation" Elicits Comment

The private showings of "Dolly's Vacation," starring Baby Marie Osborne, and which was released by Pathe on December 29, have elicited warm praise from literary critics, especially those interested in the study of child life.

Mary Edith Butler, author of "The Rose Behind the Wall," calls it "a magically stimulating draught from the very fountain of youth."

George Arthur Gray, magazine writer and expert on child psychology, after having witnessed Baby at work in the Diando studio says that the little star is, in many ways, a remarkable youngster, combining all of the freshness and charm of youth with a certain touch of maturity, which is irresistible in its appeal.

United Officials Are Gratified

A Glance Over the Past Year Finds United Well Prepared, Says

Official of United Pictures

OFFICIALS of the United Pictures Theatres of America, Inc., attest by their statements to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, during the last week of the old year, that they have reasons to feel gratified because of the splendid results attained by their organization during the year 1918. As an executive of the organization puts it:

"With the passing of 1918 officials of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., survey with marked gratification the splendid results obtained during the comparatively short period that has elapsed since its foundation and incorporation; it has succeeded in achieving, in the brief space of a few months, such weighty and important measure of success as has not been duplicated by any other.

"United, which is an exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled organization, has for its essential and fundamental basis the securing through production or by direct purchase the best features obtainable. Such strides has United made in its progress towards its ultimate goal that the close of the year sees its first output ready for release with the new year. Dustin Farnum's first United vehicle, "The Light of Western Stars," has received trade showings in the large centres, such as New York, Pittsburgh, Chicago and other cities, and has elicited enthusiastic praise for its strength of story, swift action and the virile and convincing artistry of the star.

"A series of eight superpictures are set for production with Dustin Farnum, the first being the Zane Grey work, which is to be followed by Roger Pocock's "A Man in the Open," announced for release in February. Reports that have come in advance from the Pacific Coast promise splendidly for this picture. "Square Shootin' Dan" is the basis of the story for the third United Farnum production, which, like "A Man in the Open," is to come from the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, where it will receive the supervision of Robert Brunton in person.

"At the same studios Kitty Gordon's first United superfeature has been completed and is set for release January 26. This is "Adele," based on Adele Blaneau's romance, "The Nurse's Story," which has been made into screen form by Jack Cunningham, and directed by Wallace Worsley.

"Miss Gordon's second United vehicle is now well under way. This is as yet without definite title, but is known to be a drama of society life, with a certain underworld flavor as contrast. The story is based on a play by William Anthony McGuire.

"The close of the year has seen the completion of another United Star's first screen play, namely Florence Reed's. This comes from the studios of Tribune Productions, Inc. The title of the piece is not announced as yet.

"United's outlook for 1919 is thus replete with confidence. With more than a score of releases forthcoming from the stars already announced there are indications that before another year has elapsed the ultimate aim of fifty-two releases per annum will be an accomplished fact."

Rapf Emphasizes Music Value to Picture

HARRY RAPF, who has produced a great many excellent pictures and before entering the film industry was responsible for many high class vaudeville acts, considers the music one of the essentials to any successful production, whether it be a vaudeville act or a motion picture.

Repeating a question put to him by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Rapf, whose latest production, "Wanted For Murder," has just completed a successful run at the Broadway theatre in New York, and is now being distributed by the Film Clearing House, said:

"Does the exhibitor realize the importance of the musical score to a picture? The comparisons are just the same in reference to a libretto of a play. If a libretto of a play was presented without the musical score, the charm and the swing and the pep would not be there.

"The same holds good with a picture. How often do we go into a theatre and hear the musical accompaniment which is not in keeping with the picture, and makes it seem draggy?

"Unfortunately, it is only in the big houses that really a picture is presented with the proper company, and after that the pictures are played any old way. I have gone to a great deal of pains and trouble to have a musical score arranged by Mr. Bradford for the production of "Wanted For Murder."

"This is one of the best scores that I have had the privilege of hearing. It is light, melodious and in itself an entertainment to the public.

"Music is as important to a picture as the right projection, and it is up to the exhibitor to encourage the producer to give as much time to a correct musical score as he does to producing the picture; but producers feel that the exhibitor does not, as a rule, give the musical accompaniment to a picture any attention whatsoever.

"I hope that the exhibitors throughout the country who book this production will take advantage of using this score. In my opinion, the entertainment is such a treat that the public will appreciate it in the same manner that I do."

"The Belle of New York" Ready for Showing

With the titling completed, "The Belle of New York," Marion Davies' next Select release, is ready for showing and makes its appearance on the screens of the country about the sixth of January. This picture is conceded to be the young star's most pretentious effort.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Fox Studio Doings

Tom Mix this week finished production on his latest Western screen effort, entitled "Fakin' for God." Kathleen Connors is his leading lady and Edward Le-Saint is the director. It is a unique story where Mix appears in the difficult role of a minister in a Western frontier. His latest picture, "Fame and Fortune," only recently released, is this week playing at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles. Mix made a personal appearance at the theatre Tuesday night.

Frank Lloyd, who has been directing William Farnum productions for William Fox, will next week start production on a picture in which Gladys Brockwell will be the star. The subject has not been titled.

Jane and Katherine Lee resumed work this week on their newest picture, "Smiles," which has been held up because of the illness of Katherine. It is a semi-war story. Avid Gillstrom is the director. It is expected now that the picture will be finished next week.

About Metro Players

Hale Hamilton was awarded the distinction of appearing in the first scenes photographed this week on the new open stage at the Metro plant at Romaine, Calhauenga and Cole avenues. The event occurred at exactly 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, December 17. The title of his picture is "Johnny on the Spot," and is being directed by Harry S. Franklin.

Production work on Viola Dana's new picture, "Diana Ardway," continued this week. The picture is about half finished. Because of the part Miss Dana plays in the picture she has been dubbed the "baby vampire of the studio." Milton Sills is her leading man and Herbert Blache is her director.

May Allison this week finished production on "Peggy Does Her Darnedest," a comedy drama filmed under the direction of George D. Baker. Robert Ellis plays the male lead. It is said to be one of the funniest plays in which Miss Allison has appeared. Active preparations have begun on her next picture, which, it is believed, may be called "The Isle of Intrigue."

Bert Lytell, who recently returned from an army training camp in Texas, will start production next Monday on a play titled "The Blind Man's Eyes." John Ince will be the director. It will be a story of the old melodrama type, it is understood,

THE WEEK IN REVIEW

PRODUCTION on a very generous scale continued at the principal studios this week. Perhaps the Metro plant is one of the busiest places in Hollywood. Madame Nazimova is in the midst of her superproduction, "The Red Lantern," and a huge set, one of the largest ever constructed on the Metro lot, was placed at her disposal this week.

The Goldwyn companies at the Triangle studios at Culver City continue producing, and at the Ince plant in Los Angeles production work continues uninterruptedly.

Shirley Mason, Ethel Clayton, Bryant Washburn and other stars are busy with production work at the Famous Players-Lasky studios, and with the return of Cecil B. De Mille this week further activity is forecast for the future. The Lee children returned to work at the Fox studios, and Gladys Brockwell will next week begin a new picture under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

Charley Chaplin has decided to call his next picture "Sunnyside." It is now about half finished. Production continues at the Brunton studios, and Frank Keenan expects to begin work on his next picture, or the first production on his new contract with Pathe, within about ten days.

Activity on the Universal lot has not abated. Three recent completed productions were being cut and titled this week, while production continued on two feature dramas, one two-reel Western and a serial.

in which Mr. Lytell will be given every opportunity to demonstrate his dramatic ability.

Ray Smallwood, chief of the Metro photographic department, arrived in Los Angeles this week from New York. He immediately assumed command of the photographic activities at the Metro plant in Hollywood.

Paramount-Artcraft

Ethel Clayton, Paramount star, was the guest of Fort MacArthur, at San Pedro, this week during the filming of scenes in her new picture at the fort. Miss Clayton's latest screen effort is called "Private Pettigrew's Girl," and Monte Blue is her leading man. There are a number of army scenes in the picture. George Melford is the director. He expects to complete the production next week.

Wallace Reid will begin production soon on a new picture, with Ann Little and Theodore Roberts appearing in the supporting cast. The title of the subject has not been selected, but the theme will revolve around automobiles and how they figure in the daily life of the modern man and woman. James Cruz will be the director.

Bryant Washburn this week finished his newest Paramount picture, "The Poor Boob?" Wanda Hawley is his leading lady in the new production. Mary Thurman, who won fame in many Sennett comedies, has an important part in the picture, which is a comedy drama. Arrangements are being made to start production on a new picture at an early date.

Shirley Mason continued production this week on her new picture, which is being produced at the Morosco studios under the direction of Walter Edwards. Forest Stanley is her leading man. He gained national prominence when he played the lead in "The Bird of Paradise" on the legitimate stage. The picture is about half finished.

Vivian Martin left this week for Coronado, where she will spend the holidays with her mother. She expects to start work on a new picture shortly after Christmas.

Universal Newsettes

A new ten-reel production made under the direction of Allen J. Holubar, starring Dorothy Phillips, has been definitely titled "The Heart of Humanity." The supporting cast consists of Robert Anderson, who played "Monsieur Cuckoo" in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," William Stowell, Walt Whitman, Sergt. Sidney-R. Flowers.

Lee Moran, Universal comedian, is reported this week as having contracted the fashionable influenza malady. It is insisted that Moran's case is not serious. The press agent at Universal City says Moran contracted the disease after he had just finished a burlesque comedy on the influenza situation.

Production continues on Mary MacLaren's latest filmpay, "Whose Widow?" It is a six-reel special feature being produced under the direction of Ida May Park. Frank Mayo plays the male lead.

Work on the Universal play, "Cherries are Ripe," starring Edith Roberts, has been postponed because of the illness of Billy Mason, Miss Roberts' leading man. Mason has been ill with influenza. It is said that Universal considered the advisability of retaking the production with a new male

Edward H. Kemp, Pacific Coast Representative

San Francisco, California

November 27, 1918.

My dear Mr. Kemp:

On November first of this year was the first anniversary of the California Theatre. Unfortunately, the influenza epidemic found our theatres in San Francisco closed, but this gave us an opportunity of looking into the various departments of our theatre, and in this particular I feel it a duty to advise you, as the representative of the Motiograph Company, that the Motiograph you installed here at our opening has served us every day continuously operating thirteen hours daily without having had the slightest delay by reason of any faulty mechanism, the only expense that we have incurred for one year for the maintenance of same was the replacement of a couple of belts, the total amount of which was fifty cents.

I know that you will be proud of this record. During the year we have entertained a great number of visitors in our operating room, and not alone the laymen, but exhibitors and members of the moving picture industries of other branches, who were very much impressed—not alone in the classy lines of the Motiograph itself, but of the magnificent picture that was thrown on our screen, which throw is exactly one hundred and four feet, on a screen twenty feet and six inches by twenty-four feet and six inches. The simplicity of the mechanism of the Motiograph has never caused any of the extra operators called in from time to time on the relief shifts the slightest embarrassment in immediately mastering its operation.

After having used the Motiograph for eight years in our Portola Theatre, and after a year's use as described above in our California Theatre, it goes without saying that I feel that a great part of our success is due in a measure to the efficiency of the Projecting Department, and, as a result, I want you to know that to-day I can consistently endorse the Motiograph with the full knowledge that it is there 100%.

Very sincerely yours,

CALIFORNIA THEATRE,

EUGENE H. ROTH,

Managing Director.

What Do You Think?

THE letter which follows contains an expression of opinion which I have heard very often and one in which there is no little truth. Conditions in the projection rooms of many theatres could be improved, in fact made passable, without any expenditure whatsoever—it is a clear case with many of, "What's the use of taking care of that which does not belong to me? I'll get a job somewhere else when I get tired of this one."

We would like to have a broad expression of opinion on this subject. The more publicity is given to it the sooner the conditions will be improved.

One of the places where the greatest good can be done is at headquarters of the Locals. Here is where more of the boys gather than in any one place. What is being done?

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC & MANUFACTURING COMPANY

LOS ANGELES, CAL., December 14, 1918.

Mr. E. K. Gillett, Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

Although I am only interested indirectly in the Motion Picture Industry, being a salesman for the Westinghouse Electric Company, I am anxious to see what results you will obtain from your prize contest amongst the operators, or I presume your idea in starting such a contest was to stimulate interest and bring out some constructive ideas.

It has always seemed strange to me that operators, at least the majority of them, do not seem to realize that if their profession is going to compare favorably with some other technical professions, it will be necessary for each member of that profession to develop and maintain a high standard of ability.

You have lately inaugurated the term "projectionist" to be used instead of "operator." If you are going to use a new term, it seems to me you should have it understood that the term "projectionist" implies one who is a well-informed and capable man.

My observations for the past three years would lead me to believe that the difference between a "projectionist" and an "operator" could be illustrated as follows, and I feel certain that your observations over a wider range will confirm at least some of my opinions.

You have no doubt gone into many projection rooms where every piece of apparatus operated smoothly, quietly, and efficiently, there was a place for everything and everything was in its place, every precaution was taken to eliminate fire hazards, the man in charge was able to meet any emergency that might arise without calling for help, and would be willing and able to answer any intelligent question asked in good faith. Such man would in my estimation be a "projectionist."

Contrast such a case with many more that you and all of us have seen, where the apparatus is often cramped into entirely too small working space, wires hanging all over the walls and ceiling, the projection machines running noisily, the picture on the screen not what it should be because of lack of attention to many details, and if something did go wrong it would mean disaster. The man in charge of such projection room is not entitled to the same classification as mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

The projectionist is really interested in producing the very best possible results he can for his employer and has ability and backbone enough to be able to show Mr. Theatre Owner that it takes the best workmanship and apparatus to produce the best results. The operator lacks both ability and initiative and is willing to go along in the same old rut, and just so long as he is willing just so long will he stay there.

In discussing this viewpoint with several of the "boys" there are those who will immediately say, "It can't be done because the boss won't stand the expense." Now, if such were really the case, I would feel that the Motion Picture Industry would certainly retrograde, not progress, and I am sure that anyone would have a hard time convincing me that the theatre-going public is not becoming better educated each day and demanding the best projection as well as programs, and if the boss is not progressive enough to know that bettering these conditions will be a real asset for his theatre business he needs some education, and if such education cannot be acquired under reasonable circumstances the aspiring projectionist might better seek employment elsewhere, as he would never get out of the rut there.

It is neither necessary nor prudent for a projectionist to feel that he cannot make any improvements without spending a great deal of money. I distinctly remember a certain theatre where the average conditions largely prevailed. Then followed a change in operators. The new man started in during his spare moments to make little improvements here and there. All loose wires and unnecessary switches were removed from the walls, care was given to the optical system and other details, a better picture was produced with less current consumption, and the ventilation of the projection room was improved. Soon everything was neat, clean and quiet. Even the other "boys" around town commented favorably upon the im-

The Function of the Condenser in Projection Apparatus

By Dr. Herman Kellner

(A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Cleveland, O., November 20, 1918.)(Continued from last week)

IN the following two tables the losses by reflection absorption are given for a Fresnel lens, which is spherically corrected, has only 2 reflecting surfaces, less glass path, but higher angles of incidence in the outer zones. The average glass path is here the same for all zones and equals 10 mm.

Total Loss—12.2 per cent.

Absorption Coefficient 3.9% per cm.

37.1	9.0	4.3	(10.0) 3.6	16.9	5.8

Total Loss—14.5 per cent.

The loss of light on a concave silvered glass mirror as used behind the light source is caused

(a) by the reflection of the in and out going ray on the outside surface, which amounts to about 8 per cent.

(b) by reflection on the silver film, which varies considerably with the quality of silvering, 10 per cent. being an average figure, and

(c) by the absorption in the glass, which amounts to from 1 to 4 per cent. for a mirror of 5mm. thickness. These figures add up to a total loss of about 20 per cent. on the mirror. If photometric measurements show in general a greater loss up to 50 per cent. in commercial mirrors, the reason may be found in most cases in the poor silvering and bad condition of the surface.

In the case of a double condenser about 73 to 80 per cent. of the light contained in the angle 2 reaches the image of the source after having passed through the condenser. Of the 80 per cent. which in the most favorable case is reflected by a spherical mirror 20 to 27 per cent. is lost in traversing the condenser, so that the total amount which reaches the image of the source equals 80.64 per cent. in the best case, 1.44 times the amount contained in the angle. If the higher figure for the loss in the condenser is taken, the total is reduced to 73.58 per cent. or 1.31 times the amount contained in the angle 2.

In the case of a single condenser the corresponding figures will be 1.58 and 1.53.

The question may now be raised, what is the best result obtainable at the present state of the art and in what directions may improvements be made?

We found the following factors to be of influence upon the efficiency of the condenser system:

(1) Radiation from the source not collected by the optical system and, therefore, lost;

(2) Spherical aberration of the condenser;

(3) Chromatic aberration of the condenser;

(4) Diaphragming action (I) of the aperture-plate, on account of the rectangular shape of the opening;

(5) Diaphragming action (II) of the aperture-plate, depending upon its location when the light-source is not point shaped;

(6) Absorption and reflection.

Of these the influence of, (3) and (6) can be briefly dealt with. Chromatic aberration causes no loss of light in a properly designed system, while the loss by absorption and reflection, which amount to from 12 to 15 per cent. in single lens condenser and to 20 per cent. in doublets, is absolutely unavoidable.

The loss due to the rectangular shape of the stencil, diaphragming action (I), cannot be avoided even by employing an optically perfect condenser and a point-shaped source, and so there only remain for consideration the utilization of the radiation not intercepted by the condenser lens, the spherical aberration and the diaphragming action (II) of the aperture-plate when the source is not point shaped.

Attempts to utilize the radiation not collected by the condenser lens were made many years ago. About the year 1840 Prof. Petzval described a construction which I feel should be given the publicity it deserves, because it marks about the limit of what can be accomplished in this direction. I was not able to refer to Petzval's original description, and had to use a diagram published in Hugo Schroeder's "Elemente der Photographischen Optik." There is no explanation given of the diagram, and if the following should not do justice to the construction, I have to apologize to Prof. Petzval. In Fig. 12 is the source, placed in the center of curvature of a hemispherical mirror which throws all the light radiating in the direction away from the condenser back into the source. At its equator the hemispherical mirror is joined coaxially to a paraboloid, which collects the rays of the solid angle and sends them in a direction nearly parallel to the optical axis towards the condenser lens which forms an image of the source at . All the light radiation within the solid angle passes, after reflection by the mirror, through the condenser lens to the image point , while the light radiating in the remaining solid angle passes through the condenser lens directly forming another image of the source at . The drawback of the construction lies in the technical difficulty of producing a perfect paraboloid and joining the two mirrors so that no shadow is cast within the cone, as also in the fact that two images of the source are produced. A paraboloid with a badly formed surface, or a decentration of the two mirrors, is apt to cause uneven distribution of light in the cone.

Better Pictures for Less Money

PERFECT projection with alternating current as well as direct current can be obtained by using the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP for motion picture projection.

The light is absolutely steady, and produces a clear bright picture which is more pleasing to the eyes of the audience than the hard, chalky white glare of the arc light.

Furthermore, the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP may be operated on one-quarter to one-half the current required by an arc for equivalent results.

This lamp is the ideal light source for motion picture machines in the small and average theatre, and also in churches, schools, clubs and auditoriums.

Write for descriptive matter showing the many advantages of these lamps and explaining how they can be applied to your present equipment.

even when the stencil is located near the lens. This apparatus may work well when used for lantern-slide projection, but is hardly suitable for motion picture projection. Whether its efficiency is greatly superior to a good condenser made up of lenses in the usual way is somewhat doubtful, if we consider the loss by reflection on the parabolic mirror, and the fact that the greater part of the radiation is reflected by the hemisphere, and then reflected by the parabolic mirror, and therefore will suffer this reflection loss twice.

Because of its similarity to Petzval's construction, we may mention here another one, which was quite in vogue as an automobile headlight a few years ago, and which is almost identical with the proposal made by Mr. Jenkins at the Rochester meeting in April, 1918. It contains (Fig. 12) a small condenser in whose focal point the source is placed and the usual arrangement of the concave mirror. The angle taken in by the condenser, which is, at least doubled by the mirror, geometrically speaking, amounts to about 50 degrees. This is thrown forward by the condenser as a beam of parallel rays. A paraboloidal reflector is joined coaxially to the spherical mirror, so that its focal point coincides with the focal point of the lens and the center of curvature of the spherical mirror. This paraboloid intercepts the greater part of the radiation which is not used by the lens and spherical mirror, and, like the condenser lens, projects it forward as parallel beam. By adding a condenser lens of the diameter of the reflector, an image can be formed of the source not far from the condenser, and the combination be used for projection work. A similar effect can be produced by moving the source and the center of the spherical mirror outside of the paraboloid and the condenser. The shape of the reflector should, however, be ellipsoidal in this case, to prevent spherical aberration, which on account of the large angles of incidence near the margin of the reflector, may reach enormous amounts. The combination produces one image of the source, only when the focal points of the condenser and paraboloid coincide, and the efficiency of this construction, when used as a motion picture condenser, exists probably not even on paper. The spherical aberration can be partly avoided, although inspection of Mr. Jenkins' diagram shows uneven distribution in the light beam. The effect of the great angle intercepted by the paraboloid is mostly offset by the loss of light on account of the very unfavorable angles under which the light is reflected, especially in the outer parts of the reflector. The centering of such a combination upon a common optical axis is not at all an easy matter, and any lack of precise centering will cause a one-sided, uneven, distribution of light.

The spherical mirror behind the source is undoubtedly a valuable addition. It dates back to the early days of the magic lantern. I used it in 1908 in an apparatus for the projection of compass readings on ships, in combination with an incandescent lamp. The filaments in these lamps, which were made by the Westinghouse Electric Co., were of grid form, and resembled a very steep "M" with rounded corners over which the image superimposed itself like a "W," so that no screening of the image by the source took place except in one point at each bend. The device was patented.

In 1917 the General Electric Co. secured a patent on a modification of this arrangement, limiting it to a parallel coil grid filament, the area of the spaces between the coils being equal to the effective light-emitting area of the grid coils, which is the form now so frequently used.

As mentioned above the gain by the use of the mirror behind the source amounts to 50 to 80 per cent.

The influence of the spherical aberration can be offset by placing the stencil near the condenser, which is equivalent to a lantern slide arrangement in reduced size. While the condenser could be of the most common kind, it would be necessary to place the source nearer the condenser than has so far been feasible—at least with light-sources of considerable area, and there would, moreover, be no loss due to the diaphragming action (II) of the aperture-plate. The condenser could not, however, be of the Fresnel type, since in this case the circles separating the zones would be projected into the image as shadows.

A condenser without spherical aberration has the advantage that the stencil may be placed anywhere in the cone, excepting

SILVERTIP

FOR DIRECT CURRENT PROJECTION

THE COLUMBIA-SILVERTIP COMBINATION

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a light source that fills the bill in every particular. The Silvertip is a quality product that has been tried and tested by the experts of the motion picture industry. It has received the stamp of approval of the best operators in the country and is standard.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives:

1. High current carrying capacity. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.
2. A strong, flexible light. The arc can be varied at the will of the operator, according to the density of the film within a reasonable limit of the rated amperage of the combination used. No two films are of the same density, and therefore, true artistic presentation of a picture requires a flexible light source.

Phrasing

JUST as the intelligent reading of a literary composition depends chiefly upon two things, accentuation and punctuation, so does musical phrasing depend upon the relative strength of the sounds and upon their connection with or separation from each other. It is this close relationship of language to music which makes their union in vocal music possible and appropriate, and accordingly when music is allied to words it is necessary that the musical accents should coincide with those of the text, while the separation of the various phrases agrees with the division of the text into separate lines or sentences. In instrumental music, although the same principles underlie its construction, there is no such definite guide as that afforded by the sense of the words in a song, and the phrasing must therefore be the result of a just appreciation on the part of the performer of the general sense of the music and of the observance of certain marks which phrasing is indicated.

If we now consider more closely the causes and consequences of a variety in the strength of the notes of a phrase, we notice at the first place the necessity for an accent on the first note of every bar, and in certain rhythms on other parts of the bar so. There are certain irregular forms of accent occasionally required by phrasing which it is essential to notice.

In rapid passages, when there are many notes in a bar, it is often necessary to introduce more accents than the ordinary rhythm requires, and the number and frequency of the accents will depend upon the number of changes of harmony upon which the passage is founded. Thus, for example, the first bar of a composition may require seven accents while the first two bars may receive the ordinary rhythmic accent on the first note of each group, and the fourth bar may represent a different harmony, if it should not change again, accents may be altered.

A composition when written must be offered in recognized forms, but a composer's conception of how it should be played is clearly marked by the suggestions in musical terms. Unfortunately the average musician believes that he is better able to erase the work than the composer himself, resulting in a miscarriage of a genius' conception. Needless to state, it is always the conception which strongly proves the rule, and the only permissible exception for disregard of marked phrasing on a composition is wherein it is being performed in conjunction with a film and frequently this is essential.

Discretion, however, should be used not to take liberties with well-known composition, because a musical member of the audience might be acquainted with the work, and not realizing that it was for the benefit of the picture, would blame the musician for incompetency and negligence. As a matter of fact, although obviously we have advocated that license is permissible at times in changing the phrasing, the musician also must realize that there is such a wealth of material today offered in conjunction with the film that such latitude is unnecessary and it is really only a parsimonious leader who in the language of modern days is "getting away with things," because he loves the almighty dollar so much. This is the calibre of man who is more frequently phrasing, really not because of his musical ability, but merely sacrificing musical ideas for the benefit of his pocket book.

A New Xmas Cantata

A NEW Xmas cantata, entitled "The Dream of Mary," has just been published by H. W. Gray Co., of 2 West 45th Street, New York. It is a morality for solo voices, chorus, children's chorus, and congregation with organ or orchestra accompaniment. The words are by John Jay Chapman and the music by Horatio Parker.

The text is taken from a play by John Jay Chapman, entitled "Christmas Once More." The play can be given by children or adults, the cantata following, or the cantata can be performed as a separate work. Dr. Parker's church music is too well known to need any comment. "The Dream of Mary" is simple in style and can be performed by any average choir or chorus. It contains several choruses for the children and melodies in which the congregation can take part. The solos are all within the range of an average voice, but full of interest.

The latest innovation in the film palaces throughout the country is community singing, and as the holidays are approaching we considered it an opportune time to bring this cantata before the attention of our readers. It could be used most appropriately and effectively either at Christmas or Easter in the theatres where community singing has been introduced during the performance.

condenser of the Fresnel type with which the location of the stencil near the condenser has to be avoided, because of the shadows cast by the rings between the zones.

If the light source is point shaped, no diaphragming action (II) by the aperture-plate will occur wherever the latter may be placed, but diaphragming action (II), by the aperture-plate, will occur as soon as the light-source has an extended area, and as soon as the stencil is placed at some distance from the condenser.

A condenser with spherical aberration, combined as usual with an extended source, is the least efficient combination, because of the position of the stencil necessitated by the uneven illumination of the cone, and the resultant diaphragming action (II) of the aperture-plate.

Bearing in mind that the concave mirror renders the same service in all cases, that the condenser which is composed of the smallest number of elements is preferable, and that the stencil is located in the smallest section of the cone where it will be evenly illuminated, we sum up the different possibilities in the order of their efficiency.

(1) Small ordinary condenser, light-source not too large and located near the condenser, stencil near the condenser, large projection lens.

Practical difficulties: The light source. Faults none.

(2) Just as good: Large spherically corrected condenser, point-shaped source at usual distance from condenser, stencil located some distance away from condenser, small projection lens.

Practical difficulties: The light source—Faults: None.

(3) Spherically corrected condenser, stencil located some distance away from condenser, large projection lens.

Practical difficulties: None—Faults: loss by diaphragming action (II) of the aperture-plate.

(4) Large ordinary condenser, extended light-source at usual distance from condenser, stencil located some distance away from condenser, large projection lens.

Practical difficulties: None—Faults: loss by spherical aberration and diaphragming action (II) of the aperture-plate.

The nearer point shaped the light-source, the lower the quality of projection lens which may be used.

provements and I'll venture that all of these didn't cost the management $15. The manager appreciated the interest shown in his welfare and when this projectionist was able to convince the manager that the installation of a motor generator set would give them better D. C. voltage regulation as well as effect a saving of at least $25 a month, the set was installed, and no howl went up about the expense either, because his statements were vindicated. Incidentally the same projectionist now has what I believe to be the best-paying position in this city, his new projection room was properly equipped from the start and he produces results for the most exacting.

Such is my idea of constructive co-operation between the projectionist and the theatre owner, and I feel it is a field of big opportunity. Similar results can and eventually will be obtained in practically every theatre. I know of one city where they have established high standards in 90 per cent of the theatres, and they don't burn the curtain up doing it either. It is my opinion that the right kind of projectoists can bring about the desired results in 95 per cent of the theatres if they will all get vitally interested in producing them. Their success will be their own reward and I wish them well.

I have often wondered what some others might think of my views on this subject and I assure you I will appreciate receiving your comments.

Respectfully yours,

(Signed) H. T. O'BRIEN.

Examination of Organic Developing Agents

By H. T. Clarke

(A Communication from the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Co.)

FROM the time that the European war cut off the supply of foreign organic chemicals to this country two distinct activities have been apparent in the photographic developing agent trade; on the one hand, the efforts of manufacturing concerns to produce the most necessary substances, like hydroquinone and salt of p-aminophenol, and on the other the less commendable manipulations of the purveyors of bogus and adulterated developing agents. For the control of both these activities chemists are necessary—to check the purity of the genuine products and expose the composition of the false. Moreover, in many cases developing agents are submitted under fancy names, and it is necessary to identify the substances they contain.

The work of the analyst thus falls into three classes—the separation and identification of genuine developing agents, the quantitative determination of such substances, and the identification of the materials employed for adulteration or substitution.

The following scheme for the identification of the commoner developing agents is drawn up to meet the first; a few suggestions for quantitative work follow, but owing to the enormous number and variety of adulterants no attempt can be made to indicate all of the methods employed for their detection and estimation, which in any case are subject to the methods of routine analysis.

Qualitative Methods—Group Tests

I—Insoluble in 5 ccs. of cold water:

p-Hydroxyphenylglycine.

II—Soluble in ccs. of ether:

Hydroquinone

Chlorohydroquinone

Catechol

Pyrogallol

III—Soluble in 5 ccs. of alcohol:

p-Aminophenol base

p-Aminophenol hydrochloride

5-Amino-2-cresol hydrochloride

2,4-Diaminophenol hydrochloride

p-Dimethylaminophenol oxalate

IIIa—Insoluble in alcohol:

p-Aminophenol sulphate

5-Amino-2-cresol sulphate

p-Methylaminophenol sulphate p-Dimethylaminophenol sulphate

o-Methylaminophenol sulphate

p-Phenylenediamine hydrochloride

Qualitative Methods—Distinguishing Tests

A—Test aqueous solutions with litmus:

Neutral or only faintly acid, Group II, Groups III and IIIa give markedly acid solutions (with the exception of pure p-aminophenol base). Test aqueous solutions for chloride, sulphate, oxalate and other common anions.

B—Treat 0.1 gm. in cc. hot water, with one or two drops of 10 per cent. sodium carbonate solution; let mixture stand a few minutes to cool:

Group I—p. Hydroxyphenylglycine. Dissolve with effervescence; very little change on standing.

Group II—Hydroquinone, Chlorohydroquinone, and Catechol. No effervescence; solution darkens slowly on standing. Pyrogallol. No effervescence; solution darkens rapidly on standing.

Groups III and IIIa—All cause effervescence except pure p-aminophenol base.

Crystalline precipitates formed on cooling; salts of p-aminophenol, 5-amino, 2-cresol and o-methylaminophenol.

No precipitate on cooling; salts of 2,4-diaminophenol, p-methylaminophenol, p-dimethylaminophenol, and p-phenylenediamine.

C—To 0.1 gm. of sample in 2 cc. of water add a few drops of 10 per cent. ferric chloride solution:

Group I—p-Hydroxyphenylglycine gives no color reaction in the cold; odor of quinone on boiling.

Group II—Hydroquinone gives dark greenish precipitate of quinhydrone in the cold; strong odor of quinone on boiling.

Chlorohydroquinone gives reddish-brown coloration in the cold; odor resembling that of quinone on boiling.

Catechol gives a green coloration with one drop of ferric chloride; with excess, a nearly black precipitate is formed; no odor is produced on boiling.

Pyrogallol gives intense reddish-brown coloration in the cold; no odor on boiling.

Groups III and IIIa—Salts of p-aminophenol and 5-amino-2-cresol give purple colorations in the cold; odors of quinone on boiling, and the purple colors are not destroyed.

p-Methylaminophenol sulphate behaves similarly, except that the purple coloration is developed more slowly.

Salts of p-dimethylaminophenol gives no color in the cold; the solution darkens on boiling, with formation of quinone odor.

With 2,4-diaminophenol hydrochloride an intense red color is developed in the cold; no odor is produced on boiling.

With o-methylaminophenol sulphate a dark purple color is produced, turning to red-brown on standing, or more rapidly on warming; no odor is produced on boiling.

With p-phenylenediamine hydrochloride a deep green color is developed, followed immediately by a dull purple; on boiling the color changes to a dull reddish brown, and the odor of quinone is produced.

D—To 0.1 gm. of sample in 1 cc. of water add 2 ccs. of 5 per cent. silver nitrate solution:

Group I—p-Hydroxyphenylglycine in suspension causes a black deposit in the cold, which on boiling instantly becomes light brown, while the liquid rapidly acquires a purple color.

Group II—Hydroquinone gives a silky white precipitate in the cold, the odor of quinone is developed on boiling.

Chlorohydroquinone scarcely reduces silver nitrate in the cold, but rapidly on boiling.

Catechol slowly reduces the reagent in the cold; no characteristic color or odor developed on boiling.

Pyrogallol causes instant reduction in the cold, giving a brown precipitate; no odor produced on boiling.

Groups III and IIIa—Salts of p-aminophenol, p-methylaminophenol, and 5-amino-2-cresol give purple colorations, with quinone-like odors on boiling.

Salts of p-dimethylaminophenol give no color in the cold; on boiling a brownish red color and the odor of quinone are developed.

2,4-diaminophenol hydrochloride yields an intense red color; no odor on boiling.

o-Methylaminophenol sulphate gives a yellowish-brown color in the cold, becoming reddish brown on heating; no odor developed on boiling.

p-Phenylenediamine-hydrochloride yields in the cold a transitory pale green color, followed instantly by a deep purple; no color change and no odor on boiling.

Specific Tests

Two reactions which should be performed with every developing agent are acetylation and benzoxylation.

In acetylation the substance is mixed with about three times its

Color Films
for Use in Any Projector

This company is pleased to announce to the Motion Picture trade that, after many years of experimenting and constant application to laboratory tests and development by Mr. Arturo Hernandez-Mejia and many thousands of dollars spent by his associates, the art of making color films by the colorgraph process

IS NOW READY FOR THE PUBLIC

Natural color pictures with the color on the films, without any filters on the projector, by means of double-coated film, is here now, and the process is commercially practical and the cost is no more than black and white films. The many difficult problems of its early history have been solved by us—registration, satisfactory coloring and brilliancy are now simple laboratory inexpensive operations. Hernandez-Mejia first made films colored on both sides from color separation negatives in 1911, and he has been ever since constantly improving the process, applying it to all kinds of negatives, those of two-color, three-color, four-color and six-color separation, and he finds that, as he stated in his original patent application in 1912, any (two or more) separated image negative is suitable for his process. This simplifies the work materially, as no special camera is necessary so long as color screens are used in taking.

While imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, and while we appreciate the compliment paid us by imitators who, at this eleventh hour, try to come in and reap the benefit of our nine years of hard work and many thousands of dollars spent in experimental work, we cannot allow them to do so without asserting our rights, and therefore to the Motion Picture trade, distributors and exhibitors, that we are sole licensees under the Hernandez-Mejia patent No. 1,174,144, applied for in 1912 and granted and issued in 1916 as a divisional application, patent No. 1,282,829, and other patents allowed and pending. That we will institute legal proceedings in each case of infringement of our patented process, that is to say, taking negatives through color screens and printing them on films coated on both sides, in register, as per one patent, or out of register, as per the other, or any form of film coated on both sides and colored on both sides, which infringes.

After January first we will announce our weekly release, and the price to distributors, domestic and foreign, will be the same as black and white films, about weight of acetic anhydride, together, if the developing agent be a salt of a base with an equal weight of anhydrous sodium acetate, and the mixture gently boiled for a few instants over a flame. After the mass has cooled about ten volumes of water are added, and the separated solid filtered off and recrystallized from alcohol or similar solvent.

In benzylation (Schotten-Baumann process) the substance is mixed with about four times its weight of benzoyl chloride, and an excess of 10 per cent. caustic soda solution added, whereupon the mixture is vigorously shaken in a stoppered tube, cooling if necessary, and occasionally releasing any excess pressure by opening the stopper. Shaking must be continued until the irritating odor of the benzoyl chloride has disappeared. Care must be taken that an excess of alkali is present at the end of the reaction. The separated solid is then filtered off, washed with water, and recrystallized from acetone or other suitable solvent.

The derivatives thus produced possess characteristic melting points, so that an identification can be definitely established by their aid.

The following are specific properties of the developing substances and of their acetyl, benzoyl, and other derivatives:

Group I—p-Hydroxyphenylglycine dissolves readily in dilute sodium carbonate, sodium hydroxide, sodium sulphite, or ammonia; also in dilute mineral acids, but not in dilute acetic acid. When pure it crystallizes in colorless leaflets, melting indistinctly with decomposition above 200°.

Group II—The four substances described in this group all form bright yellow water-soluble compounds with sulphurous acid (or sodium bisulphite and dilute acid).

Hydroquinone crystallizes readily from water in colorless needles melting at 169 degs. It boils at 285 degs. The vapor is almost odorless. It is insoluble in benzene. Quinhydrone, precipitated by a cold acid solution of ferric chloride, or of potassium bichromate, melts at 171 degs. Quinone formed by the action of an excess of acid bichromate melts at 116 degs. The diacetyl derivative melts at 123 degs; the dibenzoyl derivative melts at 199 degs.

Chlorohydroquinone is too soluble in water to crystallize from aqueous solution. It dissolves readily in warm benzene. It melts at 106 degs. and boils at 263 degs. The vapor has a distinct phenolic odor. The diacetyl derivative melts at 99 degs. Chloroquinone produced by oxidizing with acid bichromate melts at 57 degs.

Catechol forms feathery needles which melt at 104 degs. and boil at 245 degs., and are extremely soluble in water. It is readily soluble in hot benzene, sparingly in cold. It possesses an odor resembling that of pyrogallol. On treatment with bromine in carbon tetrachloride solution, hydrogen bromide is evolved, and a tetrabromo derivative melting at 192 degs. is produced. The diacetyl derivative melts at 63 degs.; the dibenzoyl derivative melts at 84 degs.

Pyrogallol is extremely soluble in water. It is slightly soluble in hot benzene, almost insoluble in cold. It melts at 133 degs. and boils at 293 degs. It possesses a peculiar and characteristic odor. Its aqueous solution gives a blue precipitate with ferrous sulphate. The triacetyl derivative melts at 161 degs., the tribenzoyl derivative melts at 89 degs.

Groups III and IIIa—p-Aminophenol and its salts. The free base crystallizes from water in leaflets, melting with decomposition at 184 degs., soluble in about 100 parts of cold water. It is moderately soluble in hot alcohol, sparingly in ether. The hydrochloride crystallizes in prisms, and is sparingly soluble in concentrated hydrochloric acid. The sulphate, crystallizing in fine needles, is less soluble in cold water than the hydrochloride, but the hydrochloride is precipitated from an aqueous solution of the sulphate on adding concentrated hydrochloric acid. On adding to a cold slightly acid solution an excess of sodium acetate and then a few drops of benzaldehyde, the pale yellow benzylidene derivative is soon precipitated, which crystallizes from methyl alcohol in needles melting at 183 degs. The diacetyl derivative melts at 150 degs.; the dibenzoyl derivative melts at 234 degs.

5-Amino-2-cresol and its salts resemble p-aminophenol and its corresponding salts very closely in solubility and chemical behavior. The free base crystallizes from water in flat needles melting with decomposition at 176 degs. The hydrochloride crystallizes either in needles, or, less frequently, in leaflets. The sulphate crystallizes in fine needles. On oxidation with acid bichromate it yields toluquinone, melting at 68 degs. The benzylidene derivative is markedly less soluble than benzylidene-p-aminophenol in methyl alcohol, from which it crystallizes in leaflets melting at 208 degs. The diacetyl derivative melts at 103 degs.; on gentle hydrolysis with alkali it yields the monoacetyl derivative melting at 179 degs. The dibenzoyl derivative melts at 194 degs.

2,4-Diaminophenol is met with only as the hydrochloride. The free base is not precipitated from solution on addition of sodium carbonate; the neutralized solution darkens very rapidly in air. The hydrochloride is sparingly soluble in concentrated hydrochloric acid. Attempts to prepare a benzylidene derivative lead

p-Methylaminophenol is met with only as the sulphate which crystallizes in fine needles. The free base is fairly readily soluble in cold water, but can be obtained on neutralizing a cold saturated solution of the sulphate with sodium carbonate, it melts at 85 degs., and is extremely soluble in ether. On allowing a solution in an excess of sodium hydroxide to stand in air, a dark color rapidly develops, accompanied by a characteristic odor not unlike that of a trace of pyridine. On adding sodium nitrate solution in slight excess to a solution acidified with sulphuric acid, the sparingly soluble nitroso derivative separates in colorless needles melting at 135 degs. The perfectly pure monomethyl compound yields to benzylidene derivative on treatment with sodium acetate and benzaldehyde, but technical samples are rarely entirely free from salts of p-aminophenol, which is converted by benzaldehyde into the insoluble benzylidene p-aminophenol. A good technical sample should be completely soluble in three parts of concentrated hydrochloric acid. The diacetyl derivative is insoluble in cold water, and melts at 97 degs.; on gentle hydrolysis by warming with dilute alkali, this is converted in the mono-acetyl compound soluble in alkali and precipitated by acid, which melts at 240 degs. The dibenzoyl derivative melts at 173 degs.

p-Dimethylaminophenol.—The sulphate crystallizes in hexagonal tablets, which are extremely soluble in water. The oxalate is moderately soluble in water and alcohol; it melts at 187 to 191 degs. The free base is fairly readily soluble in cold water; it melts at 75 degs., and is extremely soluble in ether. On allowing a solution in sodium hydroxide to stand in air, the same dark color and pyridine-like odor are developed as with the monomethyl compound. On adding sodium nitrate to a solution in dilute acid, a reddish-brown coloration is formed, with evolution of gas. On adding a saturated solution of potassium ferrocyanide to a fairly concentrated solution in dilute sulphuric acid, a white crystalline precipitate of the acid ferrocyanide soon separates. It forms an acetyl derivative melting at 78 degs., and a benzoyl derivative (soluble in dilute acid) which melts at 158 degs.

o-Methylaminophenol.—The sulphate crystallizes in stout needles, which are extremely soluble in water; the free base, which is slightly soluble in cold water, but readily so in hot water, crystallizes in leaflets, melting at 96 degs. It dissolves in alkali, forming a solution, which slowly darkens to a dull green color on standing in air, giving a pyridine-like odor, but more slowly than the para compound. The free base and its sulphate are completely soluble in three parts of concentrated hydrochloric acid. On adding sodium nitrate to a solution in dilute acid, the nitrous compound is precipitated in colorless leaflets, which melt with decomposition about 130 degs. after darkening from 120 degs. onwards (the melting point is rather indistinct, and depends upon the rapidity with which the bath is heated). The derivative obtained on acetylation is a liquid which dissolves in cold water; on gentle hydrolysis, by warming with dilute alkali it yields the monoacetyl compound (soluble in alkali and precipitated by acids), which melts at 150 degs. The dibenzoyl derivative melts at 113 degs.

p-Phenylenediamine.—The hydrochloride crystallizes in leaflets, which are readily soluble in water. The free base, melting at 140 degs., is moderately soluble in cold water and sparingly in ether. On adding to a cold dilute solution an excess of sodium acetate, and then a few drops of benzaldehyde, the pale yellow dibenzylidene derivative is precipitated, this crystallizes from methyl alcohol, in which it forms a bright yellow solution, in thin leaflets melting at 138 degs. Both the diacetyl and dibenzoyl derivatives melt at temperature too high for convenient measurement.

(American—Five Reels—Released Jan. 19)

WILLIAM RUSSELL has never been seen in an offering in which the action is so rapid as it is in "When a Man Rides Alone." The first thing that attracts your attention is the magnificent rugged country that forms the background of the opening scene, which, with the picturesque hills and lofty mountains in the distance, forms a sight that is extremely enchanting. It actually looks like a painting, adding no little to the entertaining value of the story. Throughout the entire length of the photoplay the same artistic taste is shown in the selection of the locations.

The story deals with Mexican outlaws and the Texas Rangers, in which a love affair between the hero, the Chief of the Rangers, and a Spanish senorita, the proud daughter of proud ancestors, is logically interwoven. The humanitarian motives of the Americans, even when dealing with Mexican brigands, are adequately depicted, thus winning your sympathy for the hero and, eventually, the heroine.

With a little more care on the editing, a one hundred per cent picture would have been the result. The nature of the theme, of course, presupposes plenty of shooting and some killings, therefore it is better suitable for those audiences who like the western type of photoplays.—P. S. HARRISON.

"The Scarlet Trail"

(B. S. Moss—Directed by John S. Lawrence)

"THE SCARLET TRAIL," running at the 39th Street Theatre, is a social tragedy, in the nature of a propaganda picture, having for its pertinent message, the effects of indiscretions between the sexes. And its moral lesson is driven home without the slightest offensiveness, either in action or sub-title.

"The Scarlet Trail" is a G and L Features' production and was staged under the direction of John S. Lawrence, from a story written by himself, as inspired by the booklet, "Don't Take A Chance" written by Charles Larned Robinson. The picture has the approval of The American Defense Society, Social Hygiene Division, and other organizations of a like nature.

The chief point to be remembered about this offering is, that it has been produced clean, without the slightest tint of offensiveness, and withal, its message is carried without a chance for doubt as to its meaning. It brings out the fact, in its teaching on the screen, that "the sins of the parents are visited on the children." A boy and a girl, sweethearts from childhood, are taken as the chief characters. Arriving at the age of majority he proposes marriage. Prior to the wedding, he learns that he is not fit to become the husband of any woman because of a taint in his blood, inherited from his father whose younger days were spent in debauchery and indiscretion. Being refused by the army doctors, for enlistment, and receiving the information that there was no cure for his affliction, he commits suicide.

The fact that the boy was refused enlistment in the Army because of this affliction, is a bit farfetched to meet the demands of the scenarioist, for it is generally known that men were not refused on this or kindred grounds. The picture has been staged simply with no attempt at extravagance in production. The photography, in spots, is not of the best but in general, it runs with clearness. Some of the interior lightings were bad.

Beth Ivins, Vincent Coleman and Helen Chapman are seen in the principal roles. The picture is in five reels. It is offered on the open market and if well advertised, should make money. The exhibitor should bring out in the advertising the fact that it deals with the effects of sexual indiscretions and that it has been approved by American Defense Society. It is in five reels.—JOE L. KELLEY.

"Wife or Country"

(Triangle—Five Reels—Released Dec. 29)

THE principal thing this picture does is to bring the hero into a tight situation. He is obliged to decide between loyalty to his country or to his German wife who serves the land of her birth in the capacity of a spy.

Although his wife loves him sincerely, she does the bidding of the German spies under penalty of exposure. Eventually the husband finds her out, but, being under moral obligation to her, because her influence had pulled him out of the low level to which he had sunk through drink, he is at a loss what to do. She, however, relieves him of all difficulty by taking poison. The husband thus becomes free to marry the heroine, the girl he sincerely loves.

As a quality, this is just an average picture. The nucleus of the story is substantial, but its development into a plot is weak. Non-critical audiences perhaps, will derive a great deal of enjoyment out of it; the critical ones, on the contrary, may be inclined to pick it to pieces.—P. S. HARRISON.

"I WANT TO FORGET"—FOX

Second Nesbit Vehicle Is Ordinary Spy Melodrama

EVELYN NESBIT'S second Fox picture shows her as a dancer who aids the cause of the United States by spying on the country's enemies within. The structure is exceedingly simple, nor has it been enhanced by any subtlety of treatment or by any realistic characterization. It is a melodrama, pure and simple, so much the latter, in fact, that it is slightly disappointing.

It is somewhat of a surprise that a vehicle of more substance was not selected for the star. Miss Nesbit's name may, of course, be counted on to bring in the passerby.

In "I Want to Forget," Russell Thaw appears in two short scenes for purposes of billing, while Henry Clive and Alphonse Ethier give conventional though suitable interpretations of hero and heavy. Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 15.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Varda Deering.....Evelyn Nesbit
The Chauffeur's Little Son.....Russell Thaw
Lieutenant John Long.....Henry Clive
August Von Grossman.....Alphonse Ethier
Helgar.....William R. Dunn
Cordelia Deering.....Jane Jennings
Written and Directed by James Kirkwood.

THE STORY

Varda Deering creates a sensation in America with her dancing. She meets Lieutenant John Long of the United States Army who is soon captivated by her. But Long can not understand why Varda persists in receiving the attention of August Von Grossman, a man suspected by the Secret Service. Little does he know that Von Grossman had known Varda in Vienna where she had served the interests of the Austrian government previous to the world war. He now attempts to force her to again serve the interests of the enemy but Varda refuses. The United States is her nation! But this power that Von Grossman wields over Varda causes a breach between her and Long. He leaves her finally.

Varda is approached by an agent of the U. S. Secret Service who is aware of her loyalty and her acquaintance with Von Grossman. He proposes that she pretend to accept the spy's terms and so, in turn, spy on him. This hazardous game Varda undertakes with enthusiasm and before long she has installed herself in the spy's home and has discovered the combination of his safe. She discovers that the Austrian's chauffeur is also in the service of the United States and before long the Lieutenant, too, comes to her assistance.

In a climax of great power Varda and her aides break into the safe, procure the information sought and then escapes from the house in an automobile. The spies, pursuing in another machine, are killed by an express train. Then when Varda tells her story the American Lieutenant understands.

AD TALK

Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, will be the players to be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when "I Want to Forget," a Fox picture, is shown for the first time in this city. Miss Nesbit's second Fox picture proves to be a spy story of a most thrilling calibre in which a woman for the time being sacrifices her love that she may better serve the interests of the United States. Others in the cast assembled to support the star are Henry Clive as the hero, Alphonse Ethier as a German spy and William R. Dunn and Jane Jennings in prominent parts.

"I Want to Forget" was written and directed by James Kirkwood, one of the ablest men in his profession. He has taken a simple plot and has developed it with no small degree of ingenuity. In addition he has afforded Miss Nesbit many opportunities to display the emotional ability that is hers and besides has given her a role that permits the wearing of a number of gorgeous gowns.

We feel sure that patrons of the ——— theatre will not want to miss "I Want to Forget." Such a celebrated star in a play of such great dramatic intensity is worth going a long way to see.

"THE LIGHTNING RAIDER"—PATHE SERIAL

Pathe's Best Serial Bet—THE Best Serial Bet

"THE LIGHTNING RAIDER" was commented upon in full in a previous issue. It was acclaimed the best serial that Pathe had ever produced, the best in the entire field for that matter. Nor do second and third thoughts alter this opinion in the slightest.

Bertram Milhauser and George B. Seitz, respectively author and director, have utilized every single foot of film in each episode. Of wasted action there is none and the mental and physical fencing of the opposing factions in the story is of the most absorbing kind. Incidentally there is more of this mental conflict than there is usually to be found in a serial. As handled here it is just as thrilling as physical action.

Pearl White, the star, is seen to excellent advantage, while Warner Oland and Henry Gsell, the former well known as a serial villain, are most prominent among the supporting cast.—Length, 2 reels an episode.—Released weekly.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

The Lightning Raider..... Pearl White
Thomas Norton..... Henry Gsell
Wu Fang..... Warner Oland
Hop Sing..... Frank Redman
The Wasp..... William Burt
By Bertram Milhauser and George B. Seitz.
Scenarios by Mr. Milhauser.
Directed by Mr. Seitz.

SYNOPSIS

(First Episode)

"The Lightning Raider" (Pearl White), is discovered robbing a priceless vase from a museum. In escaping from the police she leaps into Thomas Norton's car. The gentleman is surprised, to say the least, but the Raider is so pretty that he doesn't object. Thrusting the vase in his hand and, without his notice, relieving him of his pocket book, she jumps from the car as it slows down and darts into an alley. The police are beaten.

The next morning Lightning comes for the vase and to restore the purse. As she enters the house she notices Hop Sing, an underworld habitue, leaving it. So when Norton attempts to lecture her for her crimes she retorts that he shouldn't associate with Hop Sing, the servant of Wu Fang. With a cry he goes to his safe and discovers that a precious ebony block is missing. He tells Lightning the story of how this block came into his father's possession despite the various inferences of Wu Fang.

Lightning resolves to get it for Norton, whom she likes. She visits Wu Fang and a clever battle of wits ensues. Lightning knows all his tricks and finally gains possession of the precious block, but as she starts to leave, two hands protrude through an aperture in the wall and seize her by the throat.

During the trade showing of the picture in New York critics and hardened members of the motion picture business were enthusiastic in their comment on this film. And we feel sure that patrons of the _____ theatre will enjoy it just as heartily. The story concerns the struggle of two opposing factions for an ebony block of great value. Pearl White is seen to stunning advantage as the Lightning Raider while Warner Oland, king of serial villains, and Henry Gsell, who seems destined to hold a similar position among serial heroes, are chief in her support. Following the exhibition of the three reel introductory two-reel episode will be shown each week thereafter.

She appears as a girl who robs for the love of it, replacing her booty when the game is played. The plot which concerns the struggle of Wu Fang (Warner Oland) and his henchmen on one side and Lightning and Norton (Henry Gsell) on the other, for possession of an ebony block is constantly thrilling.

Episode No. _____ of "The Lightning Raider" entitled _____ will be shown at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week in addition to the feature already announced. Further thrills arising from the struggle for the ebony block are promised while Pearl White continues a stunning figure in the principal role.

(Second Episode)

Escaping from Wu Fang's trap by a clever trick Lightning returns to Norton with the block. But as she is about to hand it to him the wily Chinaman again steps in and, at the point of a gun, demands it back. He then bows his way out and when on the street consigns the block to an aide. As Lightning and Norton dash after him he turns and smiles, excuses himself and says that he is week-ending at a party on the Hudson.

Lightning and Norton contrive to be there. Wu Fang gives the block to the host, Scarborough, believing it will be safe with him. But Lightning discovers him carrying on a clandestine affair with another of the guests and demands the block as the price for her silence. Because of his treachery Wu Fang murders Scarborough. The police arrive. A search for the block is made, but Lightning secretes it in the folds of Wu Fang's gown.

The next day at the police station when Wu Fang is trying to alibi himself an old drunken woman enters. After an argument with the police she is dismissed, but then they discover the block has vanished. They give pursuit, but Lightning (for the old woman was none other than she) eludes them once again.

(Third Episode)

Unless Lightning returns the block to him Wu Fang threatens to throw Norton to an octopus that thrives in the water beneath his den. Lightning attempts to outwit him by having a substitute made, but is unsuccessful. In the meantime the man to whom she entrusted the block has proved traitor and turned it over to "The Wasp," another underworld king. Lightning rushes to Wu Fang with this information—and followed by her gang of trusties. A hot fight ensues, in which one Chinaman at least is thrown through the trap door into the tentacles of the octopus. Just as they are about to overcome all the Chinaman's gang, one of them seizes Lightning and hurls her toward the open trap.

"THE HEART OF WETONA"—SELECT

"The Best Norma Talmadge Yet," Says Reviewer

THIS is the picture you have been waiting for. Barring the "Social Secretary," a picture entirely different in theme, produced in the old days, "The Heart of Wetona" surpasses anything Norma Talmadge has ever done.

The fundamental idea of the plot is of an extremely delicate nature—a young man wrongs an innocent Indian girl by false promises of marriage. It is that of the stage play, by George Scarborough, upon which the picture has been based, and which has made a great success. Although the screen has a different effect upon a person, as the picture has been handled carefully and in a most refined manner, it robs it of all offensiveness. Excepting those among you who have made it a rule to avoid any picture based on the sex question, you can't afford to overlook this attraction.—Length, 6,265 feet.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

CATCH LINES

Norma Talmadge in the most brilliant role of her career.

A picturization of the celebrated Belasco stage success which ran an entire year in New York.

How the love and trust of an Indian maiden was betrayed by a man of the white race—how her love and trust was restored by another man of the white race.

Wetona married Hardin without love in her heart—but in time she grew to know that he was a man worth loving.

It was not until Wetona saw that Tony meant to betray her husband's friendship that she lost her love for him—and found a true love.

Norma Talmadge's greatest success—a brilliant characterization—wonderful support—a thoroughly artistic production.

AD TALK

Norma Talmadge, the beautiful and talented star of Select pictures will be seen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in a picturization of the famous Belasco stage success, "The Heart of Wetona." In this production Miss Talmadge appears as the daughter of an Indian chieftain by a white mother and the drama of love and sacrifice that is unfolded makes one of the strongest in which Miss Talmadge has appeared in her long and brilliant career on the screen. It is interesting to note in passing that in her last picture, "The Forbidden City," Miss Talmadge appeared as a half-caste Chinese girl—and with more than moderate success as patrons of the _____ will readily testify. Now as an Indian maiden Miss Talmadge adds still further to her fame and reputation. There is apparently no role that is too difficult—either in acting demands or the intricate art of makeup—for Miss Talmadge to undertake and to undertake with success.

Followers of the theatre will remember that on the stage the role of Wetona was assumed by Lenore Ulrich, an actress who gave a notable performance. It must have taken not a little amount of courage for Miss Talmadge to follow in the illustrious footsteps of such an accomplished actress, but at any rate her rendition of the role is such that it calls for none but the highest praise. She makes of the Indian girl, whose simple idea of love brings a tragedy into her life, an appealing and human character, one that will long be remembered. In her support appear Thomas Meighan as Hardin, Gladden James as the weakling and Fred Huntley as Quannah, the Indian chieftain.

George Scarborough wrote the original play. It was done into scenario form by Mary Murillo and directed by S. A. Franklin, one of the few real artists of the producing business. His work shows in every scene. They are realistically handled and show an eye for artistry and dramatic effect that materially enhances the value of the screen story.

THE STORY

Wetona, the daughter of Quannah, chief of a tribe of the Comanches, is chosen to act as vestal virgin at a Corn Dance to be given in connection with some ancient rites that the tribe is contemplating holding. She refuses to accept the offer, saying that she is not fit to bring food to the Holy Spirit. She tells her father that no girl that has loved the way she has is worthy of such an honor. Her father is amazed. For the first time he realizes that his daughter is not the kind of a girl she ought to be. Wetona's mother was a white woman and in accordance with her dying wish Wetona has been brought up as a white girl. She tells her father that her lover is a white man but will not tell him his name. Quannah decides to find out who he is and then kill him. Wetona goes to John Hardin, agent of the reservation, to beg him to save the life of her lover.

While they are talking, Quannah enters and thinks that Hardin is his daughter's lover.

Hardin, who really loves Wetona but has never told her so, decides to marry her in order to save her. Later it is learned that Anthony Wells is the man that wronged Wetona. Wetona has since learned what kind of a man Tony really is and with her father's forgiveness and Hardin's love she is again made happy.

SUGGESTIONS

It takes little more than Norma Talmadge's name to establish her successfully in any picture but with the case of this, her latest picture, you have a wonderful title to work with as well. "The Heart of Wetona," as a play, is only a little over three years old. And it was such a great success that it is still fresh in the minds of the public. It was a real box office success. You won't be cheating when you tell your patrons this and if your patrons belong to the intelligent class they will immediately recall the stage success.

If you care to go further into the merits of the star you might mention the fact that in her last picture she appeared as a half-caste Chinese girl and that in this one she appears as an Indian half-breed. This will serve to accentuate the wide range of the actress and will attract additional attention. Look over the supporting cast. In it you will find a number of prominent names. The players may be popular particularly in your locality. If they are don't pass them up.

Some distinctive advertising could be gotten up by making the entire background of your ad a heart. On this in letters of white against the black background run your wording. The same style of advertisements might be gotten up for throw-aways, or for use in special signs or paintings in front of your house.

"THE CABARET GIRL"—BLUEBIRD

The Title Tells the Whole Story

SHE is a country girl, and when told she possesses a voice that, if properly cultivated, might make her a famous prima donna, she goes to the city to study. She obtains a job in a cabaret and meets the wealthy young man she once met in the woods back home. They renew friendship and become engaged; and although the father sides with him, the mother is opposed to her boy marrying a cabaret girl. By playing upon her emotions, the mother induces the heroine to break the engagement with her boy. From this point and on, you might just as well get up and go home, because you know how the story will end.

If there was anything else needed to crown a trite plot filled with inconsistencies, it would be the villain's attack of the heroine; and we are served with one. Of course, it is prearranged that the hero be there in time to save her.

No fault can be found with the direction. The locations are artistic. The title may help to draw in some houses.—Released Dec. 30.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET.

AD TALK

Ruth Clifford, star of "Midnight Madness," "Fires of Youth," and co-star in many Monroe Salisbury successes, comes to the theatre presenting "The Cabaret Girl," her latest Bluebird drama.

In her newest picture, Miss Clifford has one of the most vital roles of her career, that of a village singer whose ambition leads her to New York, whose love for a gilded youth of the smart set is so great she renounces her affection when the consideration of his happiness is brought up, and whose own happiness is secured when the youth she renounced returns to her and, assuring her of his undying love, marries her.

Both as the country wildflower, transplanted to fields where she has been told she might rise to unprecedented heights and as the worldly rose thorned with barbs of sophistication, Miss Clifford is wholly satisfying. The sincerity of her characterization of Ann Reid standing out from the capable histrionic ensemble as the central pearl in a chain of minor gems.

In Miss Clifford's support will be seen Ashton Dearholt, who plays Ted Vane, the cabaret girl's admirer; Harry V. Meter, as Balvini, the cafe vulture; Jack Nelson, as the country pastor dazzled by New York's "high life," and Carmen Phillips as the cigarette girl.

Ann Reid, soloist in a village choir, is convinced of her ability to become an opera singer by the laudations of the townsfolk. She takes her savings and goes to New York, but after several try-outs she finds herself unsuccessful. Her money gone, she sobs her very eyes out in the seclusion of her room. But she is overheard by Dolly, a cigarette girl, who lives in the adjoining room. Dolly holds a position at Balvini's cabaret and urges Ann to visit there the next day and see whether the manager can find a place for her. Ann takes this step as a last resort and secures a position.

Here she meets Ted Vane, son of aristocratic parents, who saw her once before in her home village. He falls in love with her, forgetting all about his previous flirtation with Dolly. Dolly, however, is not jealous, inasmuch as she is very fond of Ann and she helps the affair on. When Ted's mother hears of it she is horror struck. His father takes a saner view of the matter and visits Ann. Impressed with her refinement he asks her to attend a week-end party in the country. Mrs. Vane still rebels at the thought of accepting Ann as a daughter-in-law and tells her that if Ted marries her it will mean his undoing. As a result Ann distrusts Ted by assuming the part of a woman of the world.

Her actions are written up by a society reporter and Balvini exults in the publicity it brings his place. But after Ann has left Ted discovers the whole plot and straightway goes in search of the girl he loves. He finds her stalwartly resisting the attack of Balvini. He insists then that she come to him as his wife and Ann, seeing that Ted's love is real, accepts him.

SUGGESTIONS

Again has the Bluebird Company provided the exhibitor with a catchy title with this current production. It is a title which lends itself well to all sorts of advertising. It is to be hoped that the exhibitor takes advantage of these titles which the Bluebird people put on their productions. The majority of them attract and offer the exhibitor the opportunity to dress up his advertising in a distinctive way, in a way which carries out the idea suggested in the title and which pulls patronage.

To dwell on the various advertising that could be done in your newspapers with this title is rather futile. In the press sheet you will find illustrated a two-column ad cut which is well gotten up and will offer you additional ideas. In our opinion you should play up this title in your copy even above the name of the star. Print under it some sort of an argument to awaken interest in the story—if desired accentuate the unusualness of the story—its daring side. This dressed with a picture of the star, taken from a still or drawn by your artist, in some striking pose from the picture should awaken interest.

"The Cabaret Girl" also offers you opportunities to dress up your front with special paintings. Some snappy drawings bringing out the cabaret atmosphere of the picture would be appropriate.

"THE SPENDER"—METRO

Excellent Comedy Backed by Wholesome Philosophy

AS stated in the issue of December 28, "The Spender" is one of the cleanest comedy-dramas ever put upon the market. It is full of laughs that alternate with a batch of smiles and a few tears caused by the delightful philosophy that permeates the story. It tells of the manner in which a crabbed old business man was brought to a full realization of his unhappiness by the scathing denunciation of his nephew and how, under the chaperonage of the nephew, he found happiness in enjoying himself and in bringing happiness to others.

Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking "The Spender." Metro compares it with "Skinner's Dress Suit," a comparison that is quite justifiable. The writer in the advance review compared it with "Lightnin'" in character, a play which is a hit because of its rare combination of comedy and human characterization. The two successes with which it has been compared are real successes! So think about "The Spender."

Bert Lytell is the star and he performs well indeed. Thomas Jefferson as the man rejuvenated gives a notable characterization.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Jan. 6.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

It is seldom that the management of the theatre goes out of its way to specially recommend a feature. The use of superlatives is always dangerous, particularly in the theatrical business. But with the case of "The Spender," the Metro picture featuring Bert Lytell which comes to the on of week an exception must be made. "The Spender" is beyond a doubt one of the most human photographs ever produced. It ranks in the same class with "Skinner's Dress Suit," a picture which many patrons will remember as being one of the best of this type.

Based on the "Saturday Evening Post" story by Frederick Orrin Bartlett, its principal characters are an ancient factory owner, a man who has amassed a fortune through stint and oppression of his employees, and his nephew Dick, a young man with a heart. How Dick influences the older man to assume a different outlook on life, to move from a shabby hotel where he sees only the backyard of the city to a place where he views the trees in the parks, makes a picture full of sure comedy and a homely philosophy which everyone will recognize. The usual elements of the picture play are not to be found in "The Spender." It is no wild tale of a young man bucking big business, it is no crude melodrama—it is a human picture, properly presented and realistically enacted.

Bert Lytell appears as the young man and Thomas Jefferson as the old factory owner. Both these players give clever performances, the latter's being one of the best characterizations of his long career before the camera. Mary Anderson, William V. Mong, Clarence Burton and Rosemary Theby are seen in the supporting roles. Don't forget the dates, ————. "The Spender" is a picture you can't afford to miss.

T. W. Bisbee, millionaire factory owner, is known by his employees as "Tight Wad." He has earned this reputation through his stinginess, his perpetual frown—his one desire to gather riches unto himself. His nephew, Dick, who works as a clerk in the office, finally can't stand it any longer. He reads off a lecture to the old man, calls a spade a spade and T. W. a mercenary old wretch, then leaves the office in considerable anger. Stetson, the senior clerk, an old gentleman, living in daily fear of losing his job, invites him to live at his house until he finds work. And Dick accepts when he lays eyes on Stetson's daughter, Helen. That night while the three are enjoying a home dinner T. W. sits in his office and thinks.

In the morning he decides that his nephew was right—he decides to seek happiness because with all his money he does not possess it. He sends for Dick and hires him as his "chaperone." And Dick takes the job. First he moves T. W. from the musty old hotel in which he has long lived to a brand new one. Then he orders him new clothes, a shave and a hair-cut and a manicure. By the time he is through T. W. looks twenty years younger and feels it. Then they repair to dinner where, incidentally, the old gentleman sees his supposedly trusted manager Robbins, in company with a dark siren. He begins to feel uneasy about his safe.

And well he might, for soon after Robbins attempts to break into it with the idea of casting suspicion on Dick. He is apprehended, however, and duly thrashed by the young man himself. T. W. has learned all this time. He has watched Dick with Stetson and the girl and in time he finds just what true happiness means. On his birthday Stetson finds himself appointed manager of the concern and Dick is taken into partnership. And in payment of this T. W. demands a home dinner cooked by Helen.

CATCH LINES

T. W. Bisbee had millions, but could find no happiness in the safe deposit vaults. See "The Spender" and how happiness finally came to him.

Bisbee's initials were T. W. and he was known behind his back as Tight Wad. One day his nephew called him that to his face. T. W. started thinking and the manner in which he realized his thoughts is happily pictured in "The Spender."

One of those pictures that combines real comedy with a wholesome philosophy, an outlook on life that improves us all.

T. W. Bisbee lived in a hotel that was falling in from decay. He was rich, but didn't care to spend a cent—on himself or anyone else. But his nephew cured him in the most enjoyable way you can imagine.

The tale of a modern Scrooge—of a man who found happiness in bringing happiness into the lives of others. As real and as fascinating as Dickens' immortal tale of Christmas time.

SUGGESTIONS

In our opinion you cannot boost this picture too much. As has been stated in the review, the type of entertainment it orders has been tried and proven—but at the same time there is all too little of it on the screen or stage today. The story is one which lent itself admirably well to the screen and which was beautifully handled. In your advertising try to bring out the fact (Continued on page 159)

"THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE"—ARTCRAFT

Griffith Strikes Human Note Again—Characters All Real

EDWARD LIVINGSTON, American snob, finds himself trapped in a shell hole with a negro. For over two days they squat there and the negro finally gives his last drop of water to his "comrade." Edward begins to learn. They see their chance to escape, but a machine gun bullet strikes down the dark-skinned fellow. He falls in Edward's arms, dying, calling for a kiss from his mammy. Edward, his eyes dim with tears, presses his lips to the black cheek, that the dying man may have his moment's happiness.

This is an incident in Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life." It is only an incident, but it stands out as typifying the character of the whole production. The producer has taken a New York snob and made a man of him in the crucible of war.

Like all of Griffith's work, his latest is human. Edward Livingston is a man of flesh and blood and so are the other characters. They are real in character, real in action.

The love story the producer tells is marked by simplicity, again by a note of reality! It is pretty and beautiful, as all his stories are. Robert Harron as Livingston, Lillian Gish as the girl and David Butler as the Frenchman enact the three principal roles. Harron's performance is, as usual, a thing of the utmost pleasure.

Yes, there is the war stuff in "The Greatest Thing in Life"—very good it is, too. But don't shy clear of the picture because of this. The war is employed as an implement in the telling of the story, the story is not subordinated as is too often the case.

Production details are all excellent. Bitzer's photographic work is always to be commended. Settings and scenes are appropriate to the smallest detail. "The Greatest Thing in Life" is big simply because it is real.—Released in December.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

A D. W. Griffith picture is always a just cause for enthusiasm. And it is with no small measure of this emotion that the management of the theatre announces that his latest opus entitled "The Greatest Thing in Life" will be seen here on _____ next _____ for a run of _____ days. Like Mr. Griffith's preceding pictures, "The Greatest Thing in Life" is a war story—or to be more exact a story of the war. But Mr. Griffith employs the war in an entirely different manner than any other motion picture director. He does not chant a hymn of fate from reel No. 1 until "The End" is flashed across the screen. Nor does he paint the horrors in equally horrid colors. To him the war is but an implement in the advancement of a human story. As well might he take a huge forest fire, a titanic ocean disaster as the war. It is a means to an end. It is not the featured part of the film.

In "The Greatest Thing in Life" he has taken a New York snob and molded him into a man by passing him through the giant furnace of war. This, briefly is the theme: When Edward Livingston reaches the trenches he has fixed ideas as to class and as to race—he is a prude in his living—he doesn't like children and thinks that all women should be pleased to have him around. And when Edward Livingston comes out of the trenches he is a man.

Of course there is a love story told in the usual Griffith manner—the prettiest manner of the screen. The central figure of the romance is Lillian Gish—while the man, the snob, is Robert Harron. Don't forget the date of "The Greatest Thing in Life." To miss it is to miss one of the greatest entertainments ever set before the public.

Jeanette Peret is the daughter of a Frenchman who keeps a cigar store in Greenwich Village, New York. Every day to the store there comes Edward Livingston, a scion of wealth, who has fallen in love with Jeanette despite himself. He can't quite fathom the young lady, and one day calls her a "poor simp," which she doesn't like at all. Old Leo Peret longs for his native land,

France, and his state becomes so serious that the doctor advises a trip there. But lack of funds prevents. Edward overhears the story and anonymously provides the money. So the Perets establish themselves in a little village on the Marne and all is well until an accident sustained by the father makes his stay there indefinite.

Edward can't stand being separated for long from Jeanette and he follows. Again he can't fathom her. He can't understand why she looks with favor on a hulking French farmer who eats garlic—a very commonplace fellow, while he offers her love, poetry, everything, but a human being. Edward is far from human. He doesn't love children and he has no spirit of comradeship. And finally, after another quarrel, he goes back to America and leaves Jeanette with her farmer. And then the war breaks and for three whole years the farmer is a soldier.

Edward lands in the French trenches quite near the Marne village. He has learned much since the day he donned a uniform. And he keeps on learning. He knows what brotherhood means, between the high and the low, the white and the black. The village comes under fire and the farmer is wounded. Jeanette cares for him. Her father is hurt by a bursting shell and Jeanette is obliged to take up his duties as spy. Operating on a hidden phone she is astounded to find herself connected with Edward. And it is he who heads a detachment that comes to the rescue of the village at the last moment. The farmer, endeavoring to protect Jeanette, her father and aunt from the Germans, is mortally wounded. He dies in the girl's arms, saying that "it is better so." And Edward comes out of the fire a real man to claim Jeanette.

CATCH LINES

How a snob was made over into a man in the colossal furnace of war.

Robert Harron and Lillian Gish, Griffith's best players, in a human story laid against the background of the great war.

"The Greatest Thing in Life" is the most human and the sweetest story ever told on the silversheet.

What is the Greatest Thing in Life? You will find the answer in D. W. Griffith's latest picture at the _____ theatre. Is it Love? Is it Fellowship?

Jeanette thought the Greatest Thing in Life was her first love. Edward thought the Greatest Thing in Life himself—both found a broader outlook through the fires of war—and both found the Greatest Thing.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a picture that brings in the war—a picture that your public is pretty sure to like no matter how they have expressed themselves on other war pictures. And of course you know the answer—it is because it is human. And it is the human picture that always appeals, no matter what its subject matter. For that reason get the human note in your advertising on this

"EVERY MOTHER'S SON"—FOX

R. A. Walsh Strikes Sincere Human Note Even in War Picture

"EVERY MOTHER'S SON," an R. A. Walsh picture, has to do with the war, the draft, an American hero's adventure and romance inside the German lines, and lastly a mother's struggle with herself during the stressing times that her three sons are called to the colors. Mr. Walsh's drama is without doubt the most logical and human of war pictures, with the exception of Griffith's various ventures into this field. The director has dwelt on his characters—has made them human, he has confined his drama to situations that deal with his personalities. He has left out the Kaiser, his crew and the hymn of hate, atrocities and the like. These elements of propaganda, so amateurishly employed in nine cases out of ten, are absent. In their places are substituted the realities of true character.

As a result it is likely that "Every Mother's Son" will prove enjoyable. The exhibitor should put the soft pedal on the war stuff and try to find some original means of bringing out the human note that is sounded again and again throughout the picture's duration. He has ample material to work with in the sustained characterization of Charlotte Walker in the role of the mother and, in fact, in all the supporting performances.

"Every Mother's Son" is not R. A. Walsh's greatest picture, but the war, which has proved the nemesis of so many directors, has not clouded his reason and his ability to mirror human characters on the screen.—Length, 5 reels.—Released December.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

An American Mother.....Charlotte Walker
An American Father (45).....Percy Standing
Eldest Son (24).....Edwin Stanley
Second Son (21).....Ray Howard
Third Son (18).....Gareth Hughes
A Daughter of France.....Corone Paynter
Lieut. Von Sterbling.....Bernard Thornton
Directed by Raoul A. Walsh.

SUGGESTIONS

Drive home the "mother love" idea in connection with all advertising that you do on this picture. If you follow this course you will be striking a note that is universal and one that will carry an appeal to all who read your advertisements. If you think it advisable you can mention the fact that it is a story of the "18 to 45" draft law.

Charlotte Walker, who is seen in the role of the mother, is a well-known actress of the stage and is no stranger to followers of the screen. Feature the fact that it is she who is playing the mother—don't let them think that she is cast in the part of a young girl. This role awarded her in this picture is suited to her and she handles it excellently. Percy Standing, Edwin Stanley and Gareth Hughes are also well-known figures of the stage and screen.

AD TALK

The story of a mother's love is the basis of the film, "Every Mother's Son," which the management of the theatre will present on _____ of _____ week. This is said to be one of the most exquisite portrayals of mother character ever brought to the film and that it will prove of interest to all our patrons the management of the theatre feels absolutely certain. R. A. Walsh, who wrote and produced the picture for William Fox, who is releasing it, took as his central character a typical American mother—a mother blessed with three sons, the youngest seventeen years of age. Their happiness is complete—their income moderate—their home beautiful.

And then the war clouds gather and the eldest son is called to the colors of his country. Soon after the next goes and soon after this the mother receives word that her first-born is missing from his detachment and that her second has been seriously wounded in action. She has sent these sons away with a forced smile on her lips—she had hoped that they would return safe and sound. And then comes the draft law calling all men to register between the ages of eighteen and forty-five! Shall her third son go? Shall he, too, be sacrificed to the war god? So runs the mother mind. The manner in which she is brought to see the light, forms one of the most striking climaxes that ever capped a film story. It is a climax not to be missed.

And then the sons return—all of them—return to her on Christmas day! It is an ending that will bring tears of gladness to the eyes of all. Charlotte Walker is seen to splendid advantage as the mother, while Percy Standing as the father, Edwin Stanley, Ray Howard and Gareth Hughes as the sons, Corone Paynter as a French girl and Bernard Thornton as an enemy officer complete the cast.

The story concerns a typical American family—husband, wife and three sons. When the war breaks the eldest son unhesitatingly answers his country's call and is one of the first to reach foreign soil. The mother bids him goodbye with a smile, though her heart is breaking. And very soon afterwards the next son, Smiling Bill, gets his chance—and accepts it. The day of his departure the father receives word that the first son is reported missing. He keeps this from his wife until after Smiling Bill has gone. Then her heart breaks. She resolves that her youngest shall not be taken from her—and when she receives word that Smiling Bill has been seriously wounded in action—her resolve becomes a passionate conviction.

The first son, taken a prisoner, escapes by a ruse and is protected behind the German lines by a French girl, true daughter of her country. Smiling Bill recovers from his wounds in a base hospital. But the mother still clings to her youngest. When the eighteen-to-forty-five draft law goes into effect she hurries him off to their home by the sea. There the outraged father comes, bound that his son shall not prove a coward. In the midst of a heated argument refugees from a torpedoed ship come through the town. They are given a place of rest in the house—and then the mother sends her third son off with a smile. Intimate contact with suffering—this converts her.

And she is rewarded, for on Christmas day all her sons return. The eldest, promoted to the rank of Captain, brings home a wife—the French girl who saved him from the Germans. Smiling Bill returns safe and sound and the youngest gains a leave of absence from his ship.

CATCH LINES

A story of mother love—the greatest love in the world.

A picture that shows the mother's part in the war that is ended—the hardest part of all—the remaining in an empty home—waiting—waiting.

The drama that was enacted in every American home at the outbreak of the war.

The thrilling story of an American soldier's escape from a German prison camp and his break for liberty through the German lines.

None who remained at home were decorated for heroic conduct—but each and every mother of each and every soldier is decorated in the heart of the nation.

Charlotte Walker's portrayal of the American mother ranks with the best characterizations contributed to the screen.

A Human Little Story That Will Please

YOUR patrons will enjoy this offering, because it is based on a sympathy-winning theme, that of a daughter's great devotion to her father. There is nothing big about the story; it is just a page from the book of life; but the splendid portrayal of the heroine's role makes the picture entertaining. Dorothy Gish is "there."

The plot introduces the heroine as the daughter of a vaudeville artist. She works at a candy store as a waitress. The young son of the proprietor, who has a particular liking for pretty faces, becomes fascinated with her. She at first scorns him, making him understand he is in the wrong premises; but when he assures her of his sincerity, she becomes his wife. The family is shocked when informed that the son married an unknown girl, and at every instance they show her their displeasure. Angered by their continual insults and by an insinuation as to her character, she leaves and goes back to her father. The husband follows her there, expresses his regrets for ever doubting her, and they become reconciled. The hero's father appears shortly, shakes hands with the heroine's father and congratulates him for having a daughter who could make a man out of his son.

As the heroine's father, Mr. Fawcett is realistic and very pleasing. The direction also deserves good mention.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Dorothy Gish, the delightful little star whose first Paramount appearance was marked with great success in "The Little Disturber" and who rose to nation-wide prominence in Griffith's great picture, "Hearts of the World," will be the featured player at the theatre on — week in a picture entitled "The Hope Chest" and bearing the Paramount trade-mark. Miss Gish, in this picture, takes the role of a daughter of an old vaudeville actor who is obliged to seek her own living after her father comes home minus his job and minus any appreciable amount of the long green.

After being flatly turned down by a vaudeville manager because she gives the worst performance he has seen in years, Sheila, this being the young lady's name, seeks employment in a large candy store. She is accepted as a waitress and is getting along nicely until she meets the proprietor's son, just out of college and just out of his swaddling clothes when it comes to love. However, one at first sight proves stronger than good sense—and so they are married.

The young gentleman's parents complain loudly. Sheila is taken in by the family, but her husband is put out. Sheila's father-in-law introduces her as his ward. Things simply won't go right for her. Her own father always took another name and succeeded in passing her off as someone else's daughter and now her father-in-law won't recognize her! However, Sheila breaks out in time and gives everyone a piece of her mind, whereupon hubby wakes up and realizes that he has a wife that demands attention. He proceeds to find her and offer her this essential thing.

Sheila Moore is the daughter of an old vaudeville actor known in the profession as Lew Pam. One day, when the young lady returns to the flat, she discovers her father out of work and out of funds. But optimistically she sets out to an agency to secure work on the four-a-day. Unluckily for her, however, the booking manager tells her that her work is positively the worst he has ever seen. The vaudeville career is blasted before it ever got a chance to grow into its infancy.

Undaunted, Sheila tries again, this time in the candy store of one Ballantyne. The costume of the girls at work there attracts her. She applies for a job and gets it. And shortly afterwards romance makes a sudden entrance into her life in the good-looking person of Tom Ballantyne, Jr. Tom attempts to make an acquaintance, but finds himself sweetly rebuffed. Nothing daunted, he keeps on trying, and the upshot of his efforts is that Sheila ends by marrying him.

Mr. and Mrs. Ballantyne, Sr., have something to say on this subject. Tom meets with parental anger and ends by leaving home. Sheila remains behind and poses as the Ballantyne's ward. None whom she meets knows that she is a married woman. A clandestine visit to the hall where her father is putting on his act and an encounter with Lounsbury, Tom's friend, precipitates a climax. She is discovered visiting her father, and the Lounsbury fellow takes her in his arms to be discovered by Tom. Thereupon Sheila tells all the Ballantyne family what she thinks of them in language something akin to the luscious raspberry.

She returns home and then Tom wakes up to the fact that he has some wife. He gives pursuit and need it be said that he is finally successful in placating the fiery and somewhat Irish temper of Sheila.

CATCH LINES

Dorothy Gish, whose delightful performance in "Hearts of the World" is still a lingering memory in another Paramount photoplay supported by George Fawcett and Richard Barthelmess.

If it hadn't been for Sheila Moore's Irish probably her domestic venture would have ended in disaster. Wit saved her. See how in "The Hope Chest."

Sheila Moore married the candy manufacturer's son because he asked her. How she learned to love him—and he to love her—forms a delightful story. See it pictured in "The Hope Chest."

There were a good many longings in Sheila Moore's Hope Chest—but she never dared hope for the prize she drew.

SUGGESTIONS

Dorothy Gish is such a distinctive actress, possessed of such a fine personality, that she really deserves to have the word "star" written before her name—and after it, too. You cannot dwell too much on her performance in Griffith's "Hearts of the World." This should remain as sort of a standing line in your advertising of her pictures. For the older "Hearts of the World" gets the more popular Miss Gish becomes. In this and succeeding Paramount pictures starring

Miss Gish creates roles of a novel type and you should dwell on her unconventionality. In preparing your advertising copy try to get this novelty of her characterization into your pictures and your wording.

With respect to "The Hope Chest" you also have George Fawcett to mention. He too played an important role in "Hearts of the World" and has gained considerable popularity with motion picture goers throughout the country. Richard Barthelmess, the leading man, has been seen with Marguerite Clark and other well known stars.

Means matrimony, of course—"The Hope Chest." But don't think the marriage is the end. Not when the husband's family are rich snobs and the girl a common waitress! But she teaches them some lessons in democracy before she gets through. Come and see her do it.

"THE NATURE GIRL"—BLUEBIRD

THIS offering may be classed as just above the average. The plot is not out of the ordinary; but it has been so constructed as to unfold itself steadily, thus holding the interest of the spectator fairly tense to the end.

The story has some sympathetic appeal. The feeling it leaves in you is that of compassion for the heroine; also that of pity for her father, who becomes deranged on account of the death of his wife. He later recovers his reason and is joined by his now grown daughter.

Some of the situations are fairly thrilling. Some others could have been made such, had they been handled logically; for instance, it seems rather incredible that the hero could have so easily beaten the Mexicans, in their own country, and rescued the heroine and her father. As the picture, on the whole, is fairly entertaining, however, the critical spectator may be inclined to overlook such conflicts with logic.

Most of the scenes have been taken outdoors. The dense growth of blooming trees and the lakes form a picturesque background that is very enchanting. They add to the entertaining qualities of the picture.

It is a clean offering.—Released Jan. 6.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Violet Mersereau in the role of an unsophisticated girl of a little island in the southern Atlantic—a mystery story of the highest suspense—don't miss it!

As the Nature Girl Miss Mersereau adds a valuable characterization to her long list of notable achievements before the motion picture camera.

She was known as the daughter of the "mad American" by the natives of the little town of O'Compo. A dreadful fate hung over her until the appearance of Spencer Crosby! See the startling story told in Violet Mersereau's latest Bluebird, "The Nature Girl."

The heroine had never been in a city, never been in a country town, had never seen a show, or the movies, or had an ice-cream soda, or enjoyed the company of other young people. She is the oddest heroine that ever stepped across the screen—a Nature Girl. But you will have to admit that Violet Mersereau makes her one of the most adorable. See her in "The Nature Girl."

AD TALK

Violet Mersereau, who has so often made appearances on the screen of the theatre, will be seen in her latest picture, "The Nature Girl" at that house on _____ of _____ week. This is a Bluebird photoplay and offers Miss Mersereau the thoroughly congenial role of a girl, reared in ignorance of her parentage on a little island south of the equator. Many times does Dolores (Miss Mersereau) inquire of her guardian, Blanca, the reason for her seclusion there, but she never receives any satisfactory answer. The mystery that surrounds the unfinished house in which she lives and the infrequent visits of a "mad American" to the island is left unexplained.

Miss Mersereau appears to particularly appealing advantage in this role. She has grasped the character with a true understanding and appreciation and makes of Dolores an unsophisticated, sweet, young Nature Girl. How romance comes to her finally and how, through a series of thrilling events that almost result tragically, she discovers the identity of her parents and the cause of her seclusion on the far away island, are incidents which make "The Nature Girl" thoroughly worthy the attention of all. To miss this particularly novel picture is to miss one of the best pictures the management of the theatre has offered.

Miss Mersereau is supported by a competent cast that includes Donald Stuart, Senorita de Cordoba, Frank Wonderlee and others. The story and direction are the work of Oscar A. C. Lund, one of the oldest directors, in point of service, in the motion picture business.

THE STORY

On a little island south of the equator Dolores Winthrop, a girl in whose veins flows American blood, lives in care of Blanca De Castro, a woman of mystery. Many times Dolores asks why the house she lives in was never finished and why she must always remain on the island, but Blanca refuses to tell her. On the mainland only a short distance from the secluded island in the little village there, the house is known as the property of the "mad American." This man, Dolores' father, lives on the mainland and disappears occasionally, returning always with very valuable rough diamonds.

Don Pedro, an unscrupulous fellow, determines to learn the whereabouts of the diamond mine that he may become rich. He learns that he may find out the locality of the mine on the Winthrop island and he makes the journey there. But Don Pedro's plans do not run as smoothly as he anticipated. On the island also is Spencer Crosby, of New York, a fellow whose hobby is the hunting of bugs. He meets Dolores, and the two fall in love.

Pedro tells Blanca that the "mad American" is ill on the mainland and that he has sent him for the plans of the diamond mine. She refuses to believe him. The two fight and Blanca is fatally wounded. Foiled in one respect, Pedro determines to make off with Dolores, but Crosby comes to the rescue. As Blanca dies she reveals to the girl her parentage and tells her to seek her father on the mainland. Spencer goes with her to the town, where they find the old fellow. They manage to restore his reason by dwelling on past events of his life. Pedro is killed in a fight with Crosby.

SUGGESTIONS

You have Violet Mersereau in a distinctly novel character to advertise in this production. Try to drive home this character—its unusualness, its unconventionality. "THE GREAT VICTORY"—SCREEN CLASSICS

Fact and Fiction Combined in a Screen Classic's War History

EXTENSIVELY reviewed in last week's issue, "The Great Victory" presents a panorama of the war from the start to the finish, a panorama in which the fertile brain of a scenario writer never missed a chance to enhance a fact by taking a dramatic perspective on horror.

Included in the film are views concerning the sinking of the Lusitania, the execution of Edith Cavell and the deportation of Belgian citizens. As a piece of construction "The Great Victory" stands as one of the best war films brought forth by the various companies during the period when propaganda of this shape was a necessary and welcome thing. Today, in retrospect, it is rather harrowing—with its scenes of murder, crucifixion and attendant atrocities.

Henry Kolker's Kaiser is a bold study of the much despised Hohenzollern. Frederick Truesdell as President Wilson benefits by some similarity of feature and gives a sincere performance. How the public will accept him in the intimacy of his cabinet meetings and welcoming French envoys is something of a question.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Woodrow Wilson.....Frederick Truesdell
Kaiser Wilhelm.....Henry Kolker
General Von Bissing.....Joseph Kilgour
Edith Cavell.....Margaret McWade
Captain Ober.....Earl Schenck
And Members of President Wilson's Cabinet, of the Kaiser's court, German soldiers, Belgian

By Maxwell Karger.
Scenario by June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino.
Directed by Charles Miller.
Photographed by George Hollister.
Supervision of Maxwell Karger.

SUGGESTIONS

Of the three titles given for this production it would be most advantageous to lay greatest stress on the first, "The Great Victory." Either this or for second choice the last, "The Fall of the Hohenzollerns." These two give the idea that it is a picture that looks in retrospect on the war—that it is not a belated picture of the war. The truth is that the production is in the manner of a pictorial history of the war—a history amply enhanced by fiction to be sure—but a history nevertheless. This might seem to be your cue. Let the people know that it tells the story of the war from the beginning to the end—that it is not a drama of the war.

The picture shows the Cavell case, the sinking of the Lusitania and various atrocities. Whether or not to accentuate these incidents is a matter that the exhibitor himself should carefully consider. Indications are, however, that the public is attracted little by recount of such picture fare. So, to our notion, it will be best for you to play up either one of the titles suggested and tell them that it is a dramatic history of the war.

AD TALK

The management of the _____ theatre has secured an unusual picture for exhibition on _____ of _____ week. This is entitled "The Great Victory," and is, in a way, a pictorial history of the European war from the time that the first gun was fired until the abdication of the Kaiser. It is no usual war picture. "The Great Victory" presents no one piece of melodrama manufactured and laid against the war as a background. It is made up of historical data, amplified from time to time for dramatic purposes by bits of fiction, but generally adhering to the truth, truth that in many cases is stranger and more startling than fiction.

Pictured in "The Great Victory" are scenes concerning the trapping, the mock trial and the execution of Edith Cavell, the British nurse who heroically went to her death. Then there are scenes connected with the deportation of Belgian citizens, scenes concerning the various atrocities committed on the helpless citizens of Belgium by the relentless German military machine.

The picture ends with the abdication of the Kaiser and President Wilson's departure for France to attend the Peace Conference.

A remarkable cast was assembled to enact the various roles. Standing out from the rest is the portrayal of President Wilson rendered by Frederick Truesdell and the contrasting characterization of the Kaiser given by that sterling actor Henry Kolker. Both of these players give performances that fairly startle the observer. The picture was produced under the direction of Charles Miller, one of the ablest directors in the business of picture production. He has turned out a film that you cannot afford to miss.

THE STORY

The picture opens with scenes surrounding the birth of Woodrow Wilson. These are paralleled with those surrounding the birth of the ex-Kaiser. The difference between the ideals and customs of the democracy of the United States and the autocracy of Prussia is clearly brought out by these scenes.

The action then skips to the outbreak of the world war. The Kaiser is shown in all his arrogance calling upon his generals for action—for them to conquer the world that he may rule it. The assassination at Sarajevo furnished the spark to start the conflagration. Soon afterwards the Kaiser's gray hordes are passing through Belgium, leaving a pillaged trail behind them.

In rapid succession now come the trapping and the execution of Nurse Edith Cavell by the German military governor of Belgium, Von Bissing; the deportation of Belgian citizens to Germany, the rape of the country's women and the destruction of its property.

The commander of the submarine that sank the Lusitania is given a royal welcome at court, and so are the captains of other undersea craft who follow out the terrible orders of Von Tirpitz.

But the day of retribution is at hand. President Wilson, at the head of the United States, is no longer able to stand for atrocity after atrocity, and soon afterwards the German troops notice that they are facing a new, a fresh and a determined force in the field. They are defeated. The Kaiser is alarmed and, seeing all power slipping from his hands, seeks to place the blame for his various atrocious crimes on his military and naval advisers. He is forced to abdicate and to flee into Holland. And then comes President Wilson's departure from the United States on the transport George Washington to attend the Peace Conference.

CATCH LINES

A dramatic history of the war from the time the opening gun was fired until the abdication of the Kaiser.

The story of the greatest victory the world has ever known—the Victory of Democracy over Autocracy.

Including the most tragic episode of the war—the execution of Edith Cavell.

After you see "The Great Victory" you will understand exactly why the Kaiser writes a big X after his name now.

The story that tells why it's Wilson today and not the Kaiser.

The most amazing interpretation of the Kaiser ever seen given by Henry Kolker.

The circumstances under which Woodrow Wilson was born and reared established him as the ideal leader of humanity in its fight against autocracy. William Hohenzollern was brought up in a contrasting environment. That is why today he is a man without a country. See the dramatic narratives in "The Great Victory" that drive this fact home with a big punch.

"FAIR ENOUGH"—AMERICAN

This One Should Get Over with Non-Critical Audiences

AS a production as well as an entertainment, "Fair Enough" is equal to an average program offering. Apparently, the intention originally was to make the picture a light comedy-drama of the romantic type, but enough supposedly serious but really illogical element has been introduced in it to mar it.

The principal idea of the plot is the parents' desire that the heroine, their daughter, shall marry a society young man, irrespective of the fact that he is an idiot; but, in the end, she marries a policeman, who later turns out to be the son of a millionaire.

In some of the situations, the heroine is able to arouse some sympathy; for instance, those showing her taking a bunch of poor children to the beach, thus giving them an opportunity to enjoy themselves. But the scenes showing the heroine knocking down a little newsboy; a close up view of him with the blood smeared all over one side of his face; the hospital with the crippled children, are anything but entertaining. They are rather depressing, as hardly anybody derives any enjoyment in seeing such sights in real life, not to say in pictures.

This offering perhaps will give average satisfaction to non-critical audiences.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Ann Dickson was the daughter of a couple who had made their pile only after a hard struggle. Consequently when the money came to them, each pursued his or her own set course. With Pa Dickson it was watching the ball players cavort about the diamond, with Ma Dickson it was hunting up branches to tack on the family tree which she discovered was a necessary incumbrance if one was to do society in the right way. Both Pa and Ma wanted Ann to shape her career according to theirs. But neither "diamonds" nor "trees" appealing very strongly to the young lady. The majority of her time was spent in research work on modern slang. This was her passion even as baseball and social position were the respective vices of Pa and Ma.

The humorous complications that Ann's peculiar energies carved for her are all delightfully shown in "Fair Enough," the feature that will hold the screen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week and for _____ days thereafter. Margarita Fisher is seen as the star of this picture and there is no denying the fact that her performance here adds still further laurels to her already honor-crowded brow. Her performances in "Beauty to Let" and other late American comedy-dramas are still memories of the most pleasant sort and it is said that "Fair Enough" is a picture fitting indeed to match with these previous successes of hers.

The Dicksons acquire wealth but no social prestige. Mrs. Dickson searches about for a family tree with which to break into social circles, but receives small encouragement from her husband, who much prefers watching a baseball game to hunting twigs on a mythical tree. Ann, the daughter of the house, doesn't favor either one of her parents' pastimes. Her days are spent in research work on modern slang. It appeals to her more strongly than "trees" or "diamonds." Due to her study of this classic she heralds Freddie Pierson, her mother's selection for a son-in-law, as a "little structure with a misplaced eyebrow." However, she tolerates the fellow's presence, inasmuch as he offers diversion.

One day she takes him automobiling to show her the sights of the city and accidentally knocks down a little newsboy. While his injuries are slight, Ann inflicts a deep wound in the heart of Policeman Carey Phelan. About Carey there is a tale. He was formerly a newsboy himself, but later had grown to be a millionaire. In company with his pal "Happy" Flanigan, an ex-gunman, he had grown tired of wasting his time and money and had joined the force. So Carey Phelan was a millionaire policeman, a most extraordinary person.

In time he gains his opportunity to meet Ann, when she gives an outing for the newsboys. Her parents follow her to the beach and, not being able to find her, drive away in her car. Ann later takes another car for herself and lands in the station house as the result. Mother and father also wind up there, due to some mishap or another and the Chief of Police, a wise old fellow, proceeds to hold the outraged Dicksons in jail while the prize member of the force and Ann steal out to get married.

CATCH LINES

Pa liked baseball and Ma was ever on a search for a family tree that never existed. Ann, the daughter of the house, was an enthusiastic student of slang! Some combination! And then when the policeman-lover started to mix in things! Some romance!

Ann chucked the society lizard for a millionaire-policeman! Can you blame her? All policemen are delightful, but when one that is also a millionaire comes along—well.

When Ann was speeding along in her automobile she didn't notice an accident at all. But as she passed one corner—she left the broken, mangled heart of a traffic cop lying within his breast.

Freddie, a gentleman with a misplaced eyebrow, discovered that his rival in love was a policeman and he withdrew from the lists. The law was dead agin' him, so what could the poor fellow do?

SUGGESTIONS

The character of the past Margarita Fisher-American comedy-dramas should give you a good line on "Fair Enough." It is of the same light type, a type which the public seems in exactly the right frame of mind to accept. In fact all of the American pictures are taking a turn for the lighter these days. Are you popularizing this brand? Are you advertising it so that when a patron reads the name American he will instinctively think of light comedy? Such a course is by no means a bad one to follow and you have good material to work with for the productions of the three American stars, Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher are not productions to be ashamed of. Use a line such as "The American Brand Stands for the Best in Comedy Drama" on all your advertising. This is only one suggestion for you. Dig up a few more and go to it.

With respect to "Fair Enough" some original advertisements might be worded in slang. You have ample cause for this as the heroine is introduced as an ardent student of modern slang. If you could arrange a snappy, catchy announcement couched in such language you would have a piece of copy that would stand out from the rest of the page. Of course this is a method to be followed merely on this production. Here you have an excuse for using it and if you have been employing straight dignified phrasing in the past the change would attract attention.

"ROPED"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Harry Carey Should Please Every One in This Production

IF your patrons are acquainted with Harry Carey and his work you will have no trouble in drawing them in with this picture; if they are not, here is an opportunity for you to introduce him to them.

In "Roped," you have a picture that will come near pleasing every one of those who will see it, because the two elements that can always be counted upon to form the foundation of good story, pathos and clean, wholesome comedy, are blended intelligently in it in liberal quantities.

The pathos arises from the love of a father for his baby son; he is forbidden by his aristocratic mother-in-law to even have a glance at him, so he steals into the room unperceived at night in order to satisfy his loving heart; while the comedy is caused by the visiting cowboys to his home in New York.

The director deserves a great deal of credit for his ability to handle his characters realistically in such difficult roles as are demanded by the peculiar nature of the story. The star is convincing, at no time becoming unnatural.

Being a clean picture, it should appeal to all audiences.

Aileen.....Neva Gerber
Mrs. Judson-Brown.....Molly McConnell
Ferdie Van Duzen.....Arthur Shirley

Directed by Jack Ford.

THE STORY

Cheyenne Harry, owner of the Broken Bow ranch, lets his boys know that he needs a housekeeper to run the inside of the place. For a joke the fellows insert an advertisement in an eastern paper—asking for a wife for their boss. Aileen Judson-Brown, a society girl, is forced by her bankrupt mother to answer the advertisement. Romance is in the air and Harry departs eastward, meets Aileen, falls in love with her and marries her. The marriage puts Mrs. Judson-Brown's finances on a firm basis, but having no use for Harry as a society lion, she casts about for some means to bring on a divorce—and alimony. Ferdie Van Duzen, a man of repute, both high and ill, offers her the logical means.

After a year a child blesses the lives of the young people and all goes well until one day, the mother spirits the baby away and informs Harry that it is dead. She adds, also, that Aileen has no more love for him and then tells her daughter that her husband has grown tired of her. Harry departs for the West in sorrow. But the butler of the Judson-Brown establishment, having a heart and knowing the truth, wires Harry to come back and look around. Escorted by his cowboys Harry returns, locates the baby and hears the whole story from the lips of the nurse, bribed by Mrs. Judson-Brown to take charge of it.

Furthermore, Harry also finds that Aileen still loves him and he informs her that he still loves her—is crazy about her, in fact. Mrs. Judson-Brown meets defeat square in the face, for Harry and his wife and the baby leave for the West—and she has no one to plot about and with. Broken Bow Ranch finally gets its housekeeper.

AD TALK

Harry Carey, that genial portrayal of western roles, will return to the theatre on _____ of _____ week in his latest Universal special feature entitled "Roped." "Roped" brings the cowboy to the effete east on a marriage quest and the entanglement he finds himself in after his marriage into a society family, is at times humorous and at other times dramatic to an unusually high degree. As the owner of Broken Bow ranch Harry thinks he needs a housekeeper and lets this idea fall to some of his men. They decide that his need shall be granted, and in a spirit of fun place an advertisement in an eastern newspaper for, not only a housekeeper, but a wife!

Mrs. Judson-Brown, one of the best of society's leaders, to be sure, but quite financially embarrassed, reads this advertisement and forces her daughter, Aileen, to answer it, with the result that Harry comes east, meets the charming young lady, falls in love and marries her. This is all we are going to tell you regarding the plot of "Roped." From here on it takes such a number of original twists and turns that to enumerate them all would be to spoil the picture.

The star receives ample support from Neva Gerber as the girl, from Molly McConnell as Mrs. Judson-Brown and from Arthur Shirley and J. Farrell McDonald in other parts of importance. Jack Ford, responsible for all of Harry Carey's recent pictures, directed this one, while its author is Eugene B. Lewis, one of the ablest men writing pictures today.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been playing the Harry Carey pictures, your work on advertising "Roped" consists first of recalling a few of his past successes. From all reports Carey is quite a favorite and if your people like him make use of his past pictures in advertising this. "Roped" is a comedy-drama in which the westerner comes to the East. You can play this angle of the story up, too. Tell them how the man from the West entered New York society and taught it a thing or two. This is an angle that will appeal to most picture-goers, whether they be from the East or the West. Everyone seems to enjoy the story or the picture wherein the man from the West "shows" the East.

"LITTLE MISS HOOVER"—PARAMOUNT

Miss Clark's Charm in a Pleasing Setting

THE spirit of food propaganda, not in an educational, but in an entertaining form, prevails throughout this contribution.

Moved by the President's appeal to the country for more food products, the heroine decides to go chicken raising. At the farm she meets a man and they fall in love; but not knowing he is an incapacitated army officer, she scorns him as a slacker. Incidentally she saves him from being tarred and feathered by the farmers. In the end, she learns his real identity.

The most amusing part of this offering is at its beginning—in the scenes showing the heroine at the store bargaining for chickens. For instance, the heroine wants to buy ten egg-laying chickens but no rooster, because, as she says, as a rule, they are too troublesome. By insisting that it is customary to sell a rooster along with the chickens, however, the proprietor induces her to buy one; but she nearly faints when told the price is one thousand dollars, while that of the chickens, only five dollars per head.

The excellent entertaining qualities developed at the beginning of the picture are not maintained throughout. Had they been maintained, this attraction would have pushed even "Miss George Washington" to the background. The charms of Miss Clark, however, and the additional, though not as funny, chicken jokes, place this picture in the "a little above the average" class.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. AD TALK

Throughout the war, prominent society women of wealth and high social standing, did not disdain to do their bit to render the struggles of democracy against autocratic militarism successful. Among these was Nancy Craddock, a charming young woman of Washington, D. C., who adopted as her slogan the motto, "eggs will win the war" and who went on a farm and raised chickens in behalf of American troops in France.

In her new photoplay, "Little Miss Hoover," which will be shown at the theatre next , Marguerite Clark appears as Nancy, and it is said to be one of her most artistic creations. As stated, the story deals with a Washington society girl, who resolves to do her bit toward winning the war by enlisting in the army of the Food Administration. Accordingly, she buys a pedigreed White Leghorn rooster and six beautiful Leghorn hens and goes farming. In the course of her efforts she reunites her grandfather with her grand-uncle who had fought on opposite sides in the Civil War, changes a fading Maryland estate into a modern win-the-war farm, gets rid of a suitor to whom she has promised herself, annexes a gentleman whom she has grown to love and makes everybody happy.

John S. Robertson directed Miss Clark and they went to Washington for the first scenes, which have the streets of the Capital City and the White House for their background. The leading man is Eugene O'Brien, one of the most prominent screen players.

THE STORY

Nancy Craddock, a beautiful society girl of Washington, decides to enlist in the army of the Food Administration, and raise chickens on the theory that "eggs will win the war." She buys a rooster and several chickens and goes to the farm of her uncle at Riverfield, Md., against the protests of Matthew Berry whom she has agreed to marry on condition that he dons a khaki uniform. He is rejected by the examining board and decides to follow her to the country. Even Adam Baldwin, a gentleman farmer, is appointed Commissioner of Agriculture for the Harpeth District where Uncle Craddock's farm is located and he goes to that district incognito to study conditions there. Baldwin has seen Nancy in Washington and he admires her.

Baldwin leaves it by another. Both reach the same goal—Uncle Craddock's farm—and Baldwin recommends that it be purchased by the government for an experimental station. As a hired man on the farm he skillfully begins the work of reclaiming Harpeth Valley and Nancy is his enthusiastic assistant. Berry comes to the farm and urges Nancy to marry him, but she puts him off. Baldwin believes she loves Berry and placing a note in a chicken nest he leaves the farm.

Berry is finally accepted in the army whereupon Nancy agrees to wed him at an early date. Meanwhile Berry meets Polly and falls in love with her. Nancy loves Baldwin and one day when Berry and Polly are nearly drowned when the bridge over which they are driving in their automobile collapses, she sees Berry kiss Polly. Baldwin appears and when Berry announces his love for Polly, Nancy falls into Baldwin's arms and a double wedding follows.

SUGGESTIONS

"Marguerite Clark in a comedy of war time" should be your slogan for this picture. There are few producers who have recognized the comedy angle that the domestic situation at home offered during the conduct of the war. It is pretty brought out in "Little Miss Hoover" and you should make the most of it. In addition you have a good title to work with. It's a title that implies a comedy at the start and the prominent display of it will get people thinking. The fact that the paper and cuts will effect the observer in practically the same way is, perhaps, a help to the exhibitor. At first glance it seems as if the producers might have sought to bring out the character of the production in the advertising aids offered the exhibitor but since the title is one of those which will make people turn and look it may be that it is just as well that the paper and cuts carry out the same idea.

Miss Clark is a popular star and her leading man in this picture, Eugene O'Brien, through his year's association with Norma Talmadge and his recent appearance with Elsie Ferguson, has gained considerable popularity on his own account. It would be a good idea to mention his name in the billing of the production.

"THE POOR RICH MAN"—METRO

Bushman and Bayne in a Rather Sluggish Comedy-Drama

UNLESS admirers of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are admirers of their looks alone, they will be somewhat disappointed in "The Poor Rich Man," a current Metro feature starring this team. It presents the story of the rich young man making good when suddenly thrown on his own resources and his romance with a girl from the West.

The plot, it must be confessed, is rather obvious from start to finish. The spectator's mind, if it possesses the slightest agility, will ever keep in advance of the action as it is pictured on the screen. And the natural consequence of this is that real interest in the development of the story is lost.

There are evidences in the subtitles that the title writer attempted to bolster up the offering by words. These generally introduce slang and show an effort to be funny, an effort which is more often futile than successful. The leads perform in their usual style and receive support from Stuart Holmes as the villain and Jules Cowles in a comedy part—a part that, considering the ability of the actor, should have been brought into greater prominence.—Length 5 reels.—Released Dec. 23.—Peter Milne.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the first picture since their marriage.

A comedy of high society that would make an aching tooth feel mean.

Vantyne Carter didn't know whether he was a poor rich man or a rich poor man—rather a quandary to be in with a few millions in the bank, isn't it? The answer is revealed in "The Poor Rich Man," now at the theatre.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, unequaled in romantic drama, with Stuart Holmes, the heaviest of all villains.

Vantyne Carter had his name and soft hands to handicap him in the world of finance—also a villainous cousin. But he made a game play for success. You will enjoy watching him in "The Poor Rich Man."

AD TALK

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will make their first appearance on the screen of the theatre since their marriage when "The Poor Rich Man" is shown for the first time in this city on of week. "The Poor Rich Man" is a comedy and one which we feel sure our patrons will enjoy. It is one of those light society comedies that the Bushmans have proven themselves adept in the past. The co-stars appear to brilliant advantage in a series of amusing and beautiful scenes. The picture has been tastefully staged and its comedy covers a wide range of novel events and incidents.

"The Poor Rich Man" is a fellow so named because his father—anxious over the whereabouts of his son's brain, decides to play dead for a while and see whether the young man can get along on his own resources. Consequently he has his obituary scattered broadcast and instructs his lawyer to instruct his son that he will have to make money out of a run down country estate else forfeit his title to the fortune. And to make the idea even more intricate the fortune will revert to a nephew, providing the son doesn't make good.

Well, Vantyne, the fellow's name it is, turns the ramshackled estate into a summer resort on the order of a circus. Society, always eager for something different, comes in droves and Vantyne balances up a nice bank account with each succeeding day. But the nephew, having considerable interest in the fortune himself, gets busy with the villainy. How he all but spoils Vantyne's mad career in the financial world makes thoroughly interesting comedy—sprinkled with drama. Stuart Holmes villainizes perfectly, but not as well as Vantyne heroizes.

SUGGESTIONS

Advertise this is the first picture that Bushman and Bayne have appeared in since their marriage. You will create new interest in the stars if you pursue this course. You might print your advertisements in the form of a wedding announcement with an "at home" line at the bottom, giving the name of your theatre, dates of exhibition and hours of performances. This form of advertising could also be used for circularization of your regular patrons.

The picture is a romantic comedy-drama, with the accent all on the comedy. Play it up as a comedy of high society. Outside of your stars you have Stuart Holmes, probably the best known villain of the screen to advertise.

Vantyne Carter is the indigent son of a very rich father. He rises at noon, does a bit of boxing with his pet trainer, for little reason other than to amuse himself and enters upon the social swing until sunrise, otherwise known as bed time. Ted Carter, his cousin, leads (on the surface) a perfectly respectable life in order to gain the favor of Vantyne's father—James Carter. The senior Carter is very much disturbed particularly when Vantyne knocks the library ceiling down his neck when throwing the valet over his shoulder in the room above. He decides to play a little trick on son and nephew together, to determine whether they are made of jelly or grit. He departs on a hunting trip with his lawyer and then—a few days later—sends the lawyer back with news of his death.

There comes the will. The whole fortune is to go to Vantyne, providing he can take the old Carter country place and make money out of it. If he fails the gold goes to Teddy. So Vantyne looks the country place over. It is rather a dilapidated affair in charge of one Hobo, who sleeps with the chickens and the ducks and the cattle. But inspired by Arizona Brown (we forgot to mention her, foolishly, for she happens to be the heroine of the story and from the West) he turns the place into a freak hotel and attracts a large gathering of social hangers-on. Business looks bright, but Teddy, he receiving his inspiration from a conniving actress, comes out and raises havoc.

He succeeds in pulling a jewel robbery and causing the kitchen help to go on strike—or at least the actress succeeds in so doing. So, at the end of the allotted time, Vantyne's venture is a failure. But the lawyer has been looking on—old Carter returns from the dead to praise his son and see his nephew thrown in the river.

Popular Alice Joyce in an Average Story

I WOULDN'T say that your patrons will go wild over this feature, but as most of them like to see Alice Joyce, it may be safely said that they will be satisfied with "The Captain's Captain."

The story runs along a smooth course, without causing any undue excitement. Miss Joyce pleases, but let us hope that she will get more opportunities to show such sterling ability as she did in "Everybody's Girl."

Released January 6th.—Length, 5 reels.

THE CAST

Louise Grayling.....Alice Joyce
Lawford Tapp.....Maurice Costello
Abram Silt.....Arthur Donaldson
Betty Gallup.....Eulalie Jensen
Joab.....Percy Standing
Aunt Euphenia.....Julia Swayne Gordon
By James A. Cooper.
Directed by Tom Terriss.

THE STORY

Captain Abe of a little fishing village, is a lazy, old fraud. He keeps the general store there and is regarded as nil by the townsfolk. The old gentleman chafes considerably under his reputation and, to win the center of the stage, tells wild tales about an imaginary brother for whom he claims the title of pirate. Nightly he regales his listeners with stories of Cap'n Am'zon adventures on the high seas, and nightly the gullible fisher folk drink in his wild yarns. Am'zon grows into a reality in their minds.

Louise Grayling, Cap'n Abe's niece who has run away from a straight-laced aunt in the city to take refuge with him, hears all these stories and is convinced that they contain not one iota of truth. She confronts her uncle with the accusation that all his yarns are false. Unprepared, his defense breaks completely down and he is forced to admit that the story of Am'zon are creatures of his long restful imagination. In jest, Louise suggests that Cap'n Abe make good his stories by disappearing for a while and then returning as Am'zon.

She is amazed and amused when he proceeds to follow out her plan. The ruse works fairly well with the assistance of Louise. It is she who bolsters up all his alibis and makes him live up to his role. All goes well until some wrecked East Indians arrive in the village. They hear tales of the pirate chief and become convinced that he is the same one who robbed and desecrated their temple years before. They vow that he must die.

The situation thus suddenly grown serious it remains for Louise to extricate Uncle Abe from danger which menaces him. And this she does with the assistance of a stranger, one Lawford Tapp, and thereupon hangs a romance.

AD TALK

Alice Joyce will appear in "The Captain's Captain" at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week in her latest Vitagraph picture. Special interest is attached to her appearance in this picture inasmuch as it marks her debut as a comedienne. In the past Miss Joyce has appeared largely in heavy dramatic roles. Here, however, she is seen as a young society girl who comes to live with her old uncle, a store keeper in a fishing village. The old gentleman, Uncle Abe, making a final bid for fame among the townsfolk has long regaled them with stories of an imaginary pirate brother whom he calls Am'zon and who, he tells them, has for many years sailed the seven seas plundering and pilaging.

When Louise Grayling (Miss Joyce) hears these wild tales of her uncle's she immediately puts the right construction on them and calls the old fellow's bluff. He is unable to hold out a defense before her and admits the falsehood of the whole story. In a spirit of fun Louise insists that he must go away for a while and then reappear as his "brother" and, to her surprise, Cap'n Abe falls in with this plan. How the joke almost ended in a tragedy and how Louise, with the assistance of the man she loves, manages to extricate the old man from his dangerous position forms a concluding series of episodes that are highly sustaining.

Miss Joyce gives a delightful performance in her new role. It is also interesting to note that Maurice Costello reappears on the screen after quite an absence in the part opposite hers. Arthur Donaldson, as Uncle Abe, contributes a rare characterization while other important parts are taken by Percy Standing, Eulalie Jensen and Julia Swayne Gordon.

CATCH LINES

Alice Joyce in the first comedy role of her career with Vitagraph.

In which an old store-keeper plays pirate with results almost fatal to his own well being.

In which a society girl seeks to reclaim Cape Cod uncle by making a pirate of him.

She fell in love with a fisherman and he turned out to be a millionaire.

Marks Maurice Costello's return to the screen.

The Captain had boasted of his pirate brother so much that he had to make good by assuming the role himself. The results were humorous at first but they took a near-tragic turn.

SUGGESTIONS

Alice Joyce has usually been associated with dramatic roles. In "The Captain's Captain" she takes a light role. Bring out this in your advertising. Followers of the star will be eager to see her in a different type of role.

Also bring out the fact that the picture is an adaptation of a story by James A. Cooper entitled "Cap'n Abe—Storekeeper."

Another point you might make, providing you cater to those who are familiar with screen history, is that Maurice Costello, formerly one of the leading stars in the picture business, returns to the screen after a long absence, as Miss Joyce's leading man.

"WHAT LOVE FORGIVES"—WORLD

Interesting with Good Comedy Titles, But Not Well Balanced

A RATHER confused mind is left after the imprint of "What Love Forgives." A subtitle, "That's a girl whom I once wronged," a few companions of a like tone, a story presenting a good underlying theme that is developed at times with skill and at other times quite baldly, some exceptional comedy by Johnny Hines and some exceedingly funny subtitles, subtitles that are funny because of their exact appropriateness; these things stand out.

Briefly, it is an interesting picture, but not well balanced. The director could have been a little more subtle and his picture would have registered to better advantage in every scene. Even as the subject stands it manages to hold the interest and, if it does pull a few unintentional laughs, they don't mar the entertainment irreparably.

AD TALK

"What Love Forgives," a World picture starring Barbara Castleton with an exceptional cast including John Bowers, Johnny Hines and Mauriel Ostriche, will be seen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week. This is said to be one of the strongest of recent World pictures dealing with the eternal triangle problem in a new and startling manner. Miss Castleton is seen in the role of a young woman of culture and refinement who is possessed of a good singing voice. She meets David Knox Endicott, a man who in college, had written a number of successful songs. Owing to the fact that her father's fortune has been swept away Helen accepts David's proposition to get up a musical act and go on Chautauqua with him.

David is a man of honesty and straightforwardness and in time the musical team becomes man and wife. But the clouds gather. When the act plays at the old college town, Dorothy Deal, a musical comedy actress confronts Dave with the threat that she will expose his affair with her unless he pay her to keep silent. And Helen overhears this threat. She is astounded. Her first impulse is to blame her husband for the whole affair but when she sees the other woman her eyes are opened. In a climax of great power she denounces the actress and forgives her husband.

To miss "What Love Forgives" is to miss one of the few real treats of the season. World pictures has given us a number of powerful dramas in the past but it may safely be said that "What Love Forgives" is one of the strongest that has come from its studio. The leading players give performances of exceptional worth.

THE STORY

David Knox Endicott is musically inclined and when he enters college he has two songs to his credit, one entitled "What Love Forgives" and another, "Holding Hands With Helen," that is very popular with the boys. When a musical show comes to town headed by Dorothy Deal, Hall, Dave's room mate plans a little surprise for his pal. The boys attend in a body and soon after the show starts it is announced that Dorothy Deal will sing "Holding Hands with Helen," accompanied by David. He is loathe to do so but is forced to by his friends. Afterwards the management believes that if David can be persuaded to do the same thing every night the show will be a big hit in the town. He arranges a party and Dorothy is elected to persuade David to accept the proposition. David drinks a little too much and hardly knows what he is doing.

The next morning he receives his watch from Dorothy with a supposedly tearful note explaining that she has gone away to drown the shame and sorrow he caused. Dave is horror-struck. Dorothy, in reality, goes away to marry Arthur Haynes, an old gentleman much infatuated with her. He takes her home and introduces her to his daughter, Helen, but there is not much domestic happiness in evidence. In the meantime Dave has met Helen and together they get up a musical act and go on Chautauqua. Dave, however, is constantly worried over Dorothy. He believes himself terribly to blame. Back in the college town Dorothy finds him and attempts black-mail. Helen, now Dave's wife, learns the whole story and is inclined to blame Dave for it all until she sees Dorothy and then she blames her and forgives her husband.

SUGGESTIONS

A good title has been provided in this film and one which has more than ordinary advertising possibilities. As regards the stars in the picture a peculiar trick of Fate has decreed that the named stars, Barbara Castleton and Johnny Hines, should be relegated to second positions while John Bowers and Muriel Ostriche appear the most prominently. It is left for the exhibitor to decide which of the teams he must feature.

You might use the poem which inspired the author, as part of your advertising. Here it is:

"Tis not what I give you dear heart,
Not what you give to me.
That proves our love a thing apart
From other loves we see:
It's not by sacrificing all
You prove that your love lives,
But, when I flinch, or fail or fall,
It's—what your love forgives."

"THE SPENDER"

that it is a picture in which real, honest-to-goodness, enjoyable philosophy is mingled with comedy that will surely get the laughs. It is needless to warn against advertising it as a lurid story. Bring out its reality, its closeness to life and you will get the right people into your house.

"The Spender" is based on a "Saturday Evening Post" story by Frederick Orrin Bartlett, one which registered a distinct success on the printed page. While to advertise it as a "Saturday Evening Post" story will distinguish it none at all from many other features on the market today at first glance, there may be many who will recall the human quality of this particular piece of fiction. If you care to you might use in your advertising some particular part of the story that has an appeal all its own. This often makes the best advertising.

Your star here is Bert Lytell, a rising player and a likable one. You also have Thomas Jefferson to play up. He gives one of the best characterizations of his long career.

"CROWN JEWELS"—TRIANGLE

Critics May Find Fault with Direction of This

JEWEL robberies, attempted or accomplished, in the past, have furnished the foundation for some strong pictures. It is a theme that, provided the idea is somewhat original and the structure complicated but clear, can always be depended upon to hold the attention and entertain. This is true on one condition—it must be directed so convincingly that no improbabilities may jar the spectator. In this one respect, "Crown Jewels" suffers, as some of the situations are so impossible that it robs the critical picturegoer of the entertainment he is entitled to. The non-critical will no doubt find a great deal of enjoyment in it, as the picture contains quite a few thrilling scenes; his interest also will be held fairly well.

The chief plot of the story is a fictitious kingdom. Having been impoverished, its head sends the crown jewels to America to be sold, so that the hard times may be tided over. In America, an attempt made to steal the jewels is frustrated by the daughter of the messenger, a nobleman. A love affair results between the heroine and the son of a banker who helped her.

Barring the name, nothing else of the kingdom nor any of its people are shown. Thus the feature of costumes, which in the past has proved so detrimental to the drawing qualities of pictures, is avoided.

The picture is clean.—Released Dec. 15.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE STORY

The Royal head of one of the small European kingdoms which face revolution arranges to secretly transport, by means of a trusted agent, the most valuable of the crown jewels to America. Through Baron Strickland, Madame Levine keeps trace of the jewels and, with a crooked organization, awaits their arrival.

Madame Levine persuades Diana De Lille, a French refugee, to pose as her daughter, playing upon Diana's sympathies and sentiments. The two soon become additions to society at the Ritz Carlton Hotel.

Young Kenneth Grey, son of the wealthy banker, Maxwell Grey, whose friendship Madame Levine cultivates, falls in love with Diana and the latter confides her suspicions to him.

Kenneth meets the boat bringing the crown jewels and is followed by Madame Levine's agents. Diana discovers the workings of Madame Levine's plot and is made a prisoner by her. Diana is released and makes for the rendezvous of the criminals but is pleasantly surprised to find that the king's messenger has outwitted the criminals through Kenneth Grey's activity.

AD TALK

Her popularity thoroughly established by her appearances in such Triangle features as "The Price of Applause," "The Mask," and "The Gray Parasol," a host of her admirers will no doubt turn out to see Claire Anderson in her latest Triangle production, "Crown Jewels."

This dainty and vivacious little lady of the screen is given boundless opportunity to make full use of all her talents in this thrilling drama. The theme is a departure from so many of the recent productions viewed by picture fans and should be a welcome novelty.

As Diana De Lille, a French refugee, who has escaped to this country from the clutches of the Germans, Claire Anderson finds herself in the employ of an unscrupulous society woman, Madame Levine, who, together with two criminal associates, is playing a big game. The game is nothing less than a plan to obtain possession of the crown jewels of a European monarch. The latter has his weather-eye open to the political changes in his country and foresees the time when he will be deposed and be forced to fall back on what resources come to hand.

How Diana De Lille outwits her cunning and crafty employer; how a beautiful romance springs from her association with Madame Levine, and how the crown jewels are brought safely to their destination make a beautiful and thrilling romance which all will want to see on nights at the theatre.

CATCH LINES

Madame Levine played society to obtain possession of a monarch's crown jewels, but her path was blocked by the quick wit and daring of a French girl.

A story that has all the romantic glamour of a novel by McCutcheon or McGrath.

A dramatic struggle for possession of the jewels belonging to one of Europe's crowned heads.

lead, Mason was so ill at one time. But as he is improving, production has merely been postponed, and in the meantime Miss Roberts is doing her holiday shopping.

Allan Watt, until recently a captain in the United States army and husband of the late Myrtle Gonzales, the film star, has resumed work at Universal as assistant director with Douglas Gerrard. He has been aiding in the production of "Sealed Orders," the new Fritzi Brunette feature.

Production work on "Raggedy Ann," Priscilla Dean's next photoplay at the Universal plant, will begin probably next week. It is a story by Charles Tyler, which appeared in Detective Stories and has been purchased by Universal. The scenario was prepared by Harvey Gates. Ted Browning will direct Miss Dean in the play.

"The Wild Girl," Carmel Myers' latest screen production, was finished this week under the direction of Paul Powell. Miss Myers' next starring vehicle has not yet been selected.

Harry Carey this week resumed work at the Universal lot, his newest play being "The Outcast of Poker Flat." He had been on a month's vacation. The new vehicle for Mr. Carey was originally adapted from Bret Harte's story, "The Luck of Roaring Camp." The scenario was written by H. Tipton Steck. Jack Ford is the director.

Three recently completed productions at the Universal plant are being cut and titled this week. Scenes are being shot for two six-reel dramas, one two-reel Western and a serial. Production has also been temporarily delayed by the illness of a leading man on another five-reel subject. Two comedies were completed by the Lyons-Moran Comedy Company. The three plays in process of editing are "The Gutter Rose," starring Priscilla Dean and produced by Ted Browning; "Pirate Gold,"

Anna C. Nilsson, appearing opposite Bryant Washburn in the Paramount production, "Venus in the East" with Monroe Salisbury, and directed by Rupert Julian, and "The Wild Girl," with Carmel Myers, made under the direction of Paul Powell. "Brass Knucks" and "The Would-Be-Goods" are the two Lyons-Moran comedies finished. J. P. MacGowan is shooting on the second episode of "The Fifth Ace," the new Universal serial starring Marie Walcamp.

"Hoot" Gibson, husband of Helen Gibson, the star of "Captured Alive," is expected to return to Los Angeles next week, as he expects to be honorably discharged from the army at Camp Dix, N. J., this week. He left a position in stock at Universal to enlist in the tank corps, and it is expected he will again take up acting in Western subjects at the Universal lot.

Yorska Expected Back

Madame Yorska, who recently went to New York, is expected to return to Los Angeles before January 1, it was announced at the Brunton studios this week. It is understood that she will begin production on a new play immediately after the first of the year.

Frank Keenan this week selected a story for his first vehicle for Pathe, under the new contract recently concluded by him with that company, and Jack Cunningham is preparing the continuity. He will begin production within about two weeks. Ernest Warde will be his director. The play will be a highly dramatic selection.

J. A. Berst, president of the United Pictures Corporation, will arrive in Los Angeles the latter part of this week. Production by two United companies that have been idle for some time will begin immediately upon his arrival on the West Coast. It is understood that Mr. Berst will remain on the Pacific Coast indefinitely.

Dustin Farnum is back at the Brunton studios this week after a 320-mile trip into Old Mexico. According to the press agent, Farnum went to Southern California points in search of the elusive duck, and the duck moving on into Mexico, Farnum went to Mexico also. It is not known how many ducks were bagged by the star.

Chaplin's Latest

Charlie Chaplin's latest screen effort, production on which is now in progress, has been titled "Sunnyside." There is no special reason for the title, it was announced at the studio this week, and the nature of the comedy will not be known until the picture is completed. The picture is about half finished.

Charlie Chaplin this week announced that he has engaged Albert Austin, who formerly played with the comedian in vaudeville in England and France, to appear in important parts in future Chaplin productions. He will also assist Chaplin in production.

Loyal Underwood, who played the German officer in Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," has been ill this week with influenza. He did not suffer a very severe attack.

New Billie Rhodes

Production work was started this week on the fourth Billie Rhodes de luxe feature at the National studios. The scenario was prepared from the original play by Mrs. George Ingleton. It has not been titled. It will be produced under the direction of Francis J. Grandon, who recently arrived in Los Angeles from New York. Melbourne McDowell, who played the Black Jack role in "The Flame of the Yukon," together with Cullen Landis, will appear in the play. Landis has been playing the male lead with Miss Rhodes for about one year.

Beginning work three weeks ago, the new 175-foot stage and office building at the National studios were this week nearing completion. The new improvements are being erected on what was once the beautiful gardens surrounding the home of Senator Cole. The former executive offices will become the headquarters of the directors and scenario staff.

Carmel Myers in Universal's "Who Will Marry Me?"

News of Metro

Madame Nazimova continues to hold the center of interest at the Metro studios. Production on her massive screen interpretation of "The Red Lantern," a Chinese play of the Boxer uprising, continued this week on a huge scale. The picture is being produced for Nazimova Productions under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. The novel was written by Edith Wherry and was scenarioized by June Mathis and Albert Capellani, and is being filmed under Mr. Capellani's direction. The Chinese set in which she has been working this week consists of eight rooms. It represents a Mission School in Peking at the time of the Boxer trouble. There is a school room, a chapel and organ and other suites in keeping with the general plot of the story. It is said to be the largest set ever erected on the Metro lot. Madame Nazimova plays the role of Mahlee, a Chinese girl. In fact, she appears in a dual role, the daughter of an English father and Chinese mother, and as Blanche Sackville, daughter of a British army officer. Others taking important parts in the production with her are Frank Currier, Darrell Foss and Noah Beery. Among other sets to be erected on the lot will be a reproduction of the Chinese wall, a gigantic Chinese street scene, a 22-foot statue of Buddah. It is expected that five weeks will be required in which to finish the production.

Hart Finishes One

William S. Hart, after several weeks of production, this week finished his latest

Western, "Breed of Men." Seena Owen plays the opposite lead. The picture was directed by Mr. Hart. The story of the play briefly centers in Arizona, where Hart plays the part of a sheriff who had originally been elected to be the tool of a wealthy rancher, who was also a rustler of sheep and cattle. Hart, however, refuses to be a tool, and when the wealthy rancher goes to Chicago to market his cattle, Hart, as the sheriff, follows the man to the Illinois metropolis. After visiting in the stockyards he goes to the rancher's Chicago mansion, and there in his own home in the heart of a great city, ropes the man for whom he was expected to be a tool, and takes him back to Arizona to face the wrath of outraged ranchers. Hart is said to give one of his best interpretations in this picture. He is now working on a new story, but production on it will be deferred until after the holidays.

Miss Talmadge Ill

Constance Talmadge, Select star who was planning to begin production on a new picture next week, was stricken with influenza Sunday, and on Monday she had the distinction of being the first well-known star to be quarantined under the new health regulations now in effect in Los Angeles. According to the new city ordinance influenza victims must remain in quarantine for a period of seven days after the patient has been pronounced out of danger by the attending physician. Miss Talmadge does not now expect to start production until after the holidays.

Exhibitors Plan Organized Campaign to Legalize Sunday Shows in Indiana

THE first steps in the fight to legalize Sunday shows in Indiana was taken Monday, December 23rd, at a meeting of prominent State exhibitors with C. C. Pettijohn of New York City and Frank Rembush of Shelbyville, at the headquarters of the Indiana Exhibitors' League in the Lyric Building, in Indianapolis.

Plans for the raising of a fund with which to carry on lobbying activities in the State House when the new Legislature convenes was the principal matter under discussion. During the last Legislature an attempt was made to pass a bill legalizing Sunday shows in Indiana, which got as far as Governor Goodrich for his signature, when it was found that the bill had been tampered with during its progress from the Legislature to the Governor's office, and it failed to get the Governor's signature.

Governor Goodrich is known to favor the legalizing of Sunday shows and it is felt that the main body of both branches of the Legislature are in sympathy with the theatre men, and for this reason it is felt the time is opportune to put the same bill, shorn of its objectionable features, through.

However, there promises to be a battle royal over the bill in Indianapolis where the Church Federation and the W. C. T. U. have already taken steps to voice their protest against any move on the part of the theatres to satisfy the craving of the public for amusement on Sunday.

Then, too, the situation promises to be further fogged by the two largest legitimate houses in the capital city, who have announced their intention of opening with Sunday shows December 29th, just a week before the Legislature convenes.

For the past year picture and vaudeville theatres have operated Sunday shows without interference from city or state authorities, it being the idea of the governing bodies that certain forms of amusement were needed to satisfy the patrons of these houses, who generally are of the class that does not patronize the more expensive theatres.

Competition, however, for Sunday business has become so keen that a number of the picture theatres have begun their programs as early as 8:00 Sunday morning, and run wide open throughout the day. This tendency has alarmed the church people, who appointed a committee to wait on Mayor Charles W. Jewett, of Indianapolis, in an attempt to curtail the number of shows and at the same time to forestall any attempt on the part of the legitimate houses to open.

In response to their request, Mayor Jewett has promised to stop the performances at both the Murat and English's.

Just what the ultimate result of the December 23rd meeting will be remains to be seen.

Des Moines Capital Organizes Concern to Produce on West Coast

A $40,000 moving picture company called the New Art Film Corporation, has been formed in Des Moines, with George D. Watters as general manager.

Organized to produce motion pictures, the concern will also lease, buy or sell theatres, or buy, lease or distribute film.

The board of directors includes E. H. Hoyt, state treasurer; Senator Leslie Francis; Ford Howell, secretary-treasurer of the Midland Lyceum Bureau; A. J. Starr, president of the Central Auto Supply Company, and E. F. Bailey, president of the Glasgow Woolen Mills.

Work on the first picture will begin the latter part of January. All production will be in a Los Angeles studio leased by the company, which recently housed the Clara Kimball Young forces during the filming of two features.

Mr. Watters has been manager and publicity representative for Elbert & Getchell, local theatre men who operate the Princess Stock Company, the Empress (vaudeville), the Berchel (road house), and the Unique (moving picture house).

He has directed a number of musical shows, including the season of musical stock which starred Roger Gray and Louise Allen.

"We have a new thing," said Mr. Watters, "and one that we feel must be a sure success, but we don't want to say too much till we've made good."

"There is a great future for the successful independent producer. In 1918 no less than four large independent distributing organizations have been formed, all buying film on the open market. One of these, the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is represented in Des Moines by A. H. Blank."

"The day of the independent producer is here. It is our intention to produce features that are different. We have a number of brand new ideas we intend to use."

"The men associated with the New Art Film Corporation are all Iowa men and most of the capital stock has already been subscribed. We have arranged for an outlet for our production."

G. D. Watters tendered his resignation to Elbert & Getchell several weeks ago, to leave for Los Angeles Jan. 1, accompanied by Mrs. Watters and George D. Watters III.

The choice of a director is still to be made. Several men of national reputation are said to be under consideration.

It is said that the position has been offered Frederick Sullivan, who directed the Princess Stock Company until it was ordered to close Dec. 21, because of the "flu" ban and decreased business.

Mr. Sullivan was general director for Thanhouser five years, until they went out of business, and kept eleven producing companies going at once.

Minister Upholds Theatres in Influenza Ban

WHILE Elgin theatres were closed on account of the influenza epidemic, a champion of their privileges arose in Rev. E. Dean Ellenwood, Universalist Minister.

At his church, for the evening of Sunday, November 17, a "war" lecture by a celebrated California educator was booked. A great mass meeting was planned for the Congregational church to have a prominent Chicago judge for attraction.

The promoters of the mass meeting claimed they had secured special permission for the meeting from local health officials, for at the time the ban was being only gradually lifted from public gatherings.

Came the Universalist preacher with announcement that he had cancelled his meeting, refusing to take unfair advantage of the theatres, still under the ban. He announced his belief that churches should not be allowed to offer Sunday evening attractions until theatres were permitted to reopen. As a result, the mass meeting was cancelled and the town silent as a tomb, so far as its entertainment part was concerned, on the last Sunday night of its quarantine.

New Randolph Joins Jones, Linick & Schaeffer Chain

WITH the announcement of the approaching opening next Saturday of the new Randolph Theatre, Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaeffer's meteoric progress as purveyors of amusement in this locality is again brought to the fore. Their Boswell, writing of their past, present and future, brings many interesting truths to light. To begin with, Jones, Linick & Schaeffer may justly wear the crown as pioneers in the motion picture business in Chicago and in this state. On Christmas Eve, 1905, they opened the first motion picture house in this state on State street, where Browning King Co. now operates a store. The firm has built more theatres in Chicago than any other firm. It was "J., L. & S." who erected the Lyceum, Crystal, Century, Plaza, Wilson Avenue, Star, Willard, American, Lexington, Orpheum, Bijou Dream, Lyric, Rialto, and the new Randolph. That is a reputation of which to be proud. The Orpheum has become known the world over as the greatest "money maker" in Chicago. The Rialto has been acknowledged one of America's finest playhouses. It was erected two years ago at a cost of $600,000.

Jones, Linick & Schaeffer have also become known as film distributors. They opened the Central Film Co., four years ago, and that firm is now one of the most prominent film distributing concerns in the Middle West. Aaron J. Jones is also the directing head of the local Goldwyn corporation, and is also the local genius of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Aaron Jones is also the head of the Marcus Loew Western Booking Agency, and Peter J. Schaeffer has, among his other duties, the presidency of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Motion Picture Industry and the presidency of the Allied Amusements Assn. Adolph Linick is mostly concerned with the financing of those various activities, and while he does not share the limelight as prominently as his two partners, Mr. Linick is the "power behind the throne" and the McAdoo of the "J., L. & S." administration.

The "J., L. & S." news gatherer also claims distinction for his firm as the owners of Chicago's oldest as well as newest theatre. Their McVicker's Theatre, built in 1858, recently celebrated its sixtieth anniversary, and upon its boards once trod Booth, Barrett, Forrest, Mary Anderson and others of historic world prominence in the drama.

Thus the opening of the new Randolph brings remembrances.

Fon du Lac Business Improving Slowly

THE managers of the Fond du Lac moving picture houses, all of whom have been hard hit by the seven weeks' ban on picture shows, followed by several weeks of anxiety lest the lid might be clamped down again, are cheered up a bit—not a whole lot, but some.

Business is gradually improving. Manager Vollert, of the Idea and the Henry Boyle, declares it is so; Manager Smith of the Bijou confirms the good news; while Manager Ainsworth of the Orpheum adds a whole-hearted Methodist "Amen!"

"We can scarcely notice it," says Manager Smith of the Bijou, "but it's there. Here's hoping the tide has turned for good."

A Newsy Week in Detroit

WHEN THE MAJESTIC THEATRE is taken over by Henry Guthard on December 29, two former Majestic favorites, Henry Santrey and J. Ward Hutton, will again appear in the organization. Mr. Santrey is a very popular soloist, while Mr. Hutton has a wide reputation as an orchestra leader. Mr. Hutton was at the Majestic for more than three years, while Mr. Santrey sang there for two years. Both have this season been at the Regent, another picture house that now goes into vaudeville. M. W. McGee, managing director of the Majestic, will remain there for several weeks to start Mr. Guthard off. Mr. McGee's successor has not yet been named.

FEW CHANGES are reported in the staffs of the various Detroit exchanges. Frank Stuart, with the General Film Co., has become assistant manager of the Fox exchange, under M. S. Bailey. Will Baker, formerly with Goldwyn, St. Louis, is now handling Universal special features out of the Detroit Universal exchange. Earl V. Hennessey, formerly with Goldwyn, has become city salesman for United.

TWO IMPORTANT RULINGS affecting every exhibitor in the state have just been made. The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers have decided to send no C. O. D. shipments, starting January 1. Exhibitors must have their checks in the exchange before film will be shipped. The Post Office Department also has decided to accept no C. O. D. parcel post packages addressed to the film exchanges. This is because many exhibitors who have a fancied grievance against an exchange have sent back film with C. O. D.'s attached, attempting in different instances either to collect deposits or to take a rebate on pictures that have not brought them the business they expected. The exchange men now want the Post Office Department to make the same ruling on express shipments.

The new organization of exchange managers expect to institute several other reforms within a short time. Some of their plans were discussed at a dinner at the Board of Commerce last Friday night, December 20.

The new Regent Theatre, Bay City, has been leased by James Steele. Mr. Steele now operates the Washington and Wenonah theatres in Bay City and the Lincoln Square, Detroit.

Jake Sullivan has been named by Fred De Lodder as house manager of the Del-The Theatre, succeeding the late Charles J. Nevison. Mr. Sullivan was formerly manager of the Colonial Theatre here.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S popularity increased by leaps and bounds in Dubuque ever since he cast his lot with First National. "A Dog's Life," shown here both at the Grand and Majestic theatres some months ago, firmly established his reputation as the greatest comedian in picturedom. The second of the million dollar pictures, "Shoulder Arms," was shown at the Grand and Majestic on the same days of the same week, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, December 16, 17 and 18, to crowded houses at both theatres. The Majestic had booked the picture for an earlier date, but through some mistake at the exchanges, the picture was delayed until the above dates. The managers of the Majestic and Grand were a bit afraid as to the business they would do, but their fears were groundless for each theatre did an excellent business. As a comedy "Shoulder Arms" is the best ever; the trench scenes are the funniest things the celebrated comedian has ever done. The Majestic ran "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" with the Fox Kiddies, in connection with the Chaplin picture, while the Grand had the official American Red Cross film, "Of No Use to Germany."

ON Sunday, December 15, the Grand offered "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" with Edmund Breese. As a strong, wholesome drama this photoplay could not be surpassed: the acting was splendid, and the settings truly wonderful. Plays like this are always in demand. The Grand had good business in the afternoon, while at the evening performance the house was packed from top to bottom.

THE DREAMLAND put on "Caught in the Act" with dainty Peggy Hyland, for the Sunday, December 15, program. The picture was also shown on Monday. Miss Hyland is rapidly coming to the front as a comedian; she is becoming a fine drawing power. A very good crowd attended every show.

"LAWLESS LOVE," with Jewel Carmen, was shown at the Liberty theatre Sunday, December 15. Jewel Carmen fans were there in full force, and from all reports the picture made a very favorable impression on them.

THE PRINCESS starred Enid Bennett in "The Marriage Ring" on Sunday, December 15. Miss Bennett was as entertaining as ever in this production; her leading man, Jack Holt, gave a most refreshing characterization of the young American sugar planter. The Hawaiian settings were admirable; one could see that the director of the picture had an eye for detail. A good Sunday crowd witnessed this picture, and the average report was that it was an unusually good entertainment.

ON Wednesday, December 11, the Liberty presented that excellent actor Henry Walthall, supported by Mary Charleson, in "Humdrum Brown." Walthall's acting was good in this picture, but it could not compare with some of his earlier films; however, the story was very interesting, and it seemed to please the theatre's patrons.

THOSE clever children, Jane and Katherine Lee, were presented at the Liberty theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, December 11 and 12, in "Doing Their Bit." William Fox advertised these children as the most talented entertainers on the screen, and he isn't far from wrong, for they are capital comedians and can make even the gloomiest people laugh. And they draw a crowd that makes an exhibitor happy, whenever they are shown.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM," with Mary Pickford, was shown at the Princess theatre Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Judging from the attendance, Dubuquers considered this picture one of Mary's best, notwithstanding the fact that it had been shown here two or three times in the past year.

HERBERT RAWLINSON'S brilliant "Come Through" was the attraction at the Family theatre Wednesday, December 11. Manager Yount advertised the picture as being a show only for those who liked excitement. A great many of the North End people were of an excitable nature, for the theatre was packed the entire evening. On Thursday evening "Thais," featuring the world-famed Mary Garden, was shown to large and appreciative audiences.

"THE EYES OF THE WORLD" opened a four-days' engagement at the Grand on Monday, December 9, and played to large houses the first night and average to big houses the following nights. Everyone who saw the picture liked it; they complained, however, because the cast of characters was not given. As a whole, the picture was quite satisfactory.

LOUISE GLAUM, that fascinating star of the shadow stage, played at the Liberty theatre on Thursday, December 12, in "An Alien Enemy." Miss Glaum had the benefit of a pleasing story and a good supporting cast, headed by Thurston Hall. This seven-reel classic was shown at the usual prices.

"LET'S GET A DIVORCE," starring Billie Burke, attracted good houses Friday and Saturday, December 13 and 14 at the Princess theatre. Miss Billie is a butterfly sort of a creature who has the ability to please a theatre's patrons, no matter what kind of a play she has. One of her fans remarked, "I don't go to see a story; it's Billie Burke I want to see," and that seems to be the attitude of nearly every one who comes to see her pictures.

A NEW star, Colleen Moore, made her appearance in Dubuque, Friday, December 13, in "A Hoosier Romance." Little Miss Moore is a player of personality. Everyone who saw her picture liked it and are awaiting with interest her next offering.

The interior decoration of the Randolph is a marvelous thing of beauty, representing an indoor Venetian garden, the mural paintings being the largest every executed. The performance is continuous from 8 A. M. to midnight. Every comfort possible and an unexcelled ventilation should make the Randolph a delightful habit.

In Indianapolis and Indiana

THE first motion picture to arrive in America showing the complete details of the surrender of the German fleet will be shown this week at the Circle theatre. The pictures arrived in Indianapolis late Saturday night having been brought to this city by a special messenger from the Universal Studios in New York City where the original negatives arrived only a few days ago by special boat from the scene of the surrender. The film is a complete panorama of the entire spectacle connected with the turning over of the German fleet to Admirals Sims and Beatty, King George and other officers of the Allies. This picture, with Fred Stone in "The Goat," gives the Circle an exceptionally strong program for the week.

MOTION PICTURE THEATRES in Indianapolis are experiencing a phenomenal run of business, and if the run continues through December as it has during the past two weeks, a new high record for patronage will be established. Practically every house in Indianapolis is holding waiting lines at the evening shows. Out through the state, however, conditions are not up to normal. The "flu" epidemic showed a satisfactory decrease in Indiana last week, according to the state health board. Reports from thirty-two counties gave a total of 1,142 new cases, a decrease in practically every county. Henry, Johnson, Grant, Elkhart, Daviess, Clay, Gibson, Wells and Tipton counties reported the greatest number of new cases. It is in these counties that practically all houses are closed. In Terre Haute, however, where the theatre managers took a decided stand against the health board orders the situation has not changed greatly and business has not reached the profitable stage.

MISS MARVIN GREENE, organist at the Isis theatre in Indianapolis, has been transferred to the Alhambra theatre to succeed Professor Crane, who played the organ there ever since the erection of the theatre. Both the Isis and Alhambra are operated by Barton and Olson, proprietors of the Central Amusement Company.

J. I. SCHNITZER, central states manager for the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., left Indianapolis last night for Cleveland, where he will hold a meeting of the state managers. The question of how to help the exhibitor recuperate his losses of the last three months during the raging of the "flu" epidemic will be the biggest problem the managers will have to discuss, according to Mr. Schnitzer.

THE CRYSTAL THEATRE at Portland, Ind., under the management of W. Walter Swheir, is no longer a jitney house. Admission prices have been raised to 10 and 15 cents.

CHARLES KOCH, owner of the Best and Apollo theatres in Indianapolis, has disposed of his interests in the Apollo to Max Patton. This house is located at Southeast and McCarty streets.

THE COLONIAL THEATRE, Indianapolis, a first-run house under the management of Bingham and Cohen, has bought the series rights of the Mrs. Chaplin pictures from the Universal.

A. C. KOHTZ, of Houston, is the latest salesman to join the staff of the World Film Indianapolis office. He will not go on the road for two or three weeks.

J. G. CONNER, Indiana representative for the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, will sever his government connections this week. He has not made public his plans. Mr. Conner, who made his office with the World Film Corporation in Indianapolis, was for more than four years and a half in charge of the Indianapolis office of the Mutual Film Corporation, and during that time made scores of friends among exhibitors in the state. He was instrumental in organizing the Film Exchange Managers Branch of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, and until his connection with Government activities, headed the organization as chairman.

C. M. SPRAY, of Bluffton, Indiana, has taken over the Bluffton Opera House, formerly operated under the management of the Gayety Theatre Company of that city. Mr. Spray will change the policy of the house and put in vaudeville and high-class feature pictures and serials.

ACCORDING to H. M. White, manager of the Indianapolis office of the World, the World has booked "America's Answer" solid in Indiana. Bookings have been begun by this office on "Under Four Flags."

THE Indianapolis office of the Fox Film Corporation has sold the Annette Kellermann feature, "Queen of the Sea," to the Circle theatre for the week of December 29. S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle, is planning an extensive setting to accompany this picture.

THE COLONIAL and Regent theatres will show "The Prussian Cur" this next week.

J. D. GRAINGER, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, who visited Indianapolis this last week, declared that the business conditions in Indianapolis were phenomenal, and because of this fact Indianapolis was standing out on the theatrical map. He said that conditions in other cities the size of Indianapolis were not to be compared with the business done in the Hoosier capital city.

Late News of Fon du Lac

WHILE the "flu" ban has not been put on again in Fond du Lac, it might as well be, in the opinion of Manager Smith of the Bijou. Mr. Smith declares that there has been no improvement in business of late, in fact, the anxiety about the "flu" has hit the moving picture houses a hard blow. Right now at holiday times when the people are thinking more about Christmas shopping than pictures the moving picture houses expect to suffer loss of patronage, but the 1918 holiday season is setting a new record in the way of a low ebb. As a result, the moving picture managers are, for the most part, just marking time, waiting for a rift in the clouds.

MANAGER VOLLERT of the Idea, is usually an optimist. Today he is in a quandary as to whether he should continue such or not. The Idea in normal times has a steady patronage and there is no red ink on the balance sheet. The "flu" however, according to Manager Vollert, has hit the Idea along with the rest of the motion picture houses, conditions having been going from bad to worse. On the theory that the darkest hour is the one just preceding day the managers of the Fond du Lac moving picture houses are hoping that the light is about to appear.

"THE motion picture houses are the healthiest places in Fond du Lac," declared Manager Wm. E. Ainsworth of the Orpheum.

"Just to prove it," he continued, "I checked over the staff and working forces in all of them and what do you think I found? Not a case of 'flu.' With the rest of the city in a state of anxiety and suspense, with everybody chary about attending picture shows, not a member of our organization has fallen victim of this disease. Pretty clean slate for the picture houses, I'll say."

MILDRED HARRIS (Mrs. Charley Chaplin) in "Borrowed Clothes" drew only ordinary business at the Orpheum Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Dec. 12, 13 and 14, due to "flu" conditions. Those who saw the picture voted it better than "For Husbands Only" which did an enormous business at the same house a few weeks ago.

MANAGER Ainsworth has booked Mary Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley" for the Orpheum Christmas week.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

THE SAVOY runs along doing a money-making business every day, which tickles Louis Kerasotes very much. On Sunday, December 15, the Savoy had "A Fight For Millions," a two-reel Helen Gibson feature, and an L-Ko comedy; Monday, "The Triumph of the Weak," with Alice Joyce; Tuesday, "A Modern Lorelei"; Wednesday, thirteenth episode of "The Brass Bullet" and other features; Thursday, Fritzi Brunette in "Playthings"; Friday, fifth chapter of "The Iron Test" and two features; Saturday, "A Slacker's Heart."

"TOO FAT TO FIGHT," Goldwyn-Rex Beach production, came to the Gaiety Sunday, December 22, for three days. Mrs. Charlie Chaplin came on Christmas Day for four days in her latest Jewel, "Borrowed Clothes." This was Miss Harris's, or rather Mrs. Chaplin's first appearance at the Gaiety since becoming a star. On the previous Christmas Day she was seen in "The Cold Deck" with W. S. Hart, playing a minor role, which shows how quickly stars can climb in the films.

EDDIE POLO continues a prime favorite in this city, drawing heavily at the Royal on Sunday, December 15, with the second chapter of "The Lure of the Circus." "The Yellow Dog" was the attraction on December 16 and 17; on December 19 "Find the Woman," a Vitagraph; December 20, "A Hoosier Romance"; December 21, Jane and Katherine Lee in "Doing Their Bit," a Fox play. On Saturday, December 22, the Royal had another special Jewel feature scheduled.

THE LYRIC has not yet renewed its contract with Select pictures. Ed Maisel planned a great treat for his patrons Christmas. Asked what he has in store, Ed only smiled and said it will be something good and worth while.

HARRY LOPER did so well with "Cleopatra" on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 12, 13 and 14, that he secured permission to hold it over for Sunday and Monday, figuring that he could do more with it than his regular show. His contention proved correct, for the two extra days were also profitable. "Cleopatra" was shown in this city at the Chatterton last winter during the big blizzard and zero weather, and was only fairly attended. The prices were also high. As the great majority of picture fans had not seen the spectacle, and had heard a lot about it, they pushed the turnstiles at the Lyric around in a lively manner. The picture sidetracked for the extra days on "Cleopatra" was "Caught in the Act," with Peggy Hyland. Alice Joyce in "To the Highest Bidder" was the Lyric attraction on December 15 and 16. Following this was "When a Woman Sins," with Theda Bara.

WALLACE REID in "Too Many Millions," a Strand comedy and Bray Pictograph, came to the Vaudette, December 19, 20 and 21. Dorothy Gish followed for four days in "The Hope Chest."

THE influenza situation appears to be clearing up rapidly in Springfield and there seems no chance to put the ban on the second time. At this writing Peoria is still closed. Another thing that is going to help the showmen in the city is the ending of the interurban strike, which was in effect for eleven days, and cost this city a barrel of money.

GUS KERASOTES admitted all soldiers and sailors in uniform free to the Royal during the engagement of "The Yellow Dog."

THE CAPITOL is running along nicely, doing splendidly with "Hands Up" every Sunday, and making money with Triangle, Goldwyn, Select and special features. "The Lightning Raiders," new Pathe serial, will have its first showing at the Capitol on January 5.

BEN ROVIN, of the Amuse-U, says he pins his faith on William Farnum always. On Sunday, December 15, the Amuse-U had "A Soldier's Oath" with popular bill, and Ben cleaned up. Other Farnum pictures booked are "The Conqueror," "The Heart of a Lion," "The Bondman," and "Rough and Ready." Theda Bara pictures coming to the Amuse-U include "The Two Orphans" and "The Clemenceau Case." Manager Rovin announces that he will show "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" very shortly.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS came within an ace of breaking the Gaiety box-office record with "Arizona," on Sunday, December 15. The high mark was made by Fairbanks and Chaplin last summer, and last Sunday's figures were the closest to come to the banner day. "Arizona" made a hit with Gaiety patrons, it being a departure from his usual line of work. "Sleuths," a corking good Sennett comedy, was also on the bill. For the last half of the week, December 19-21, the Gaiety has Madge Kennedy in "A Perfect Lady," and "Rough on Husbands," an L-Ko comedy.

CHARLES RAY had in "String Beans" the best play since "The Pinch Hitter." At least that was the opinion of the crowds which attended the Vaudette for four days, starting December 15. Folks here like to see him in "rube" parts, and enjoy his acting immensely. With a Fatty Arbuckle comedy and Burton Holmes Travelogue, the Vaudette had an excellent bill, and did well thereby.

GUS KERASOTES has had a run of hard luck at the Royal lately. "Crashing Through to Berlin" fell down badly, and Gus lost money on it. Folks do not want war pictures now, at least the last few war pictures shown here were very poorly attended.

MISS NELLIE BROWNE DUFF, special feature writer on The Illinois State Journal, is leaving this city the last week of December to try her fortunes in the film world. Miss Duff was for some time on the staff of the Vitagraph company, and wrote other numerous scenarios for Selig. The young lady expects to go to California. Miss Duff will undoubtedly make good on the coast, for she has unusual ability, and understands the art of photoplay writing thoroughly. Her latest story will be published in the February number of Cosmopolitan.

THE GAIETY had a whale of a week with W. S. Hart in "Branding Broadway" and Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," the first four days, and Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat" and "Choose Your Exit," a Fox comedy, for the last half.

DORA RODRIGUEZ, a pretty miss who has been with Universal for some time, made a personal appearance at the Vaudette on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 12, 13 and 14. The bill for the same three days was "The Way of a Man With a Maid," featuring Bryant Washburn and Wanda Hawley, and the usual Strand comedy and Pictograph.

MANAGER WATTS, of the Vaudette, has booked "The Surrender of the German Fleet," a Jewel special for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 19, 20 and 21.

NAZIMOVA enjoyed four days of fine patronage at the Princess in "Eye For Eye." For the last half of the same week Elaine Hammerstein in "Her Man" was the attraction.

FRANK KEENAN in "The Bells" is playing a three-day engagement at the Princess, December 15, 16 and 17. "Why I Would Not Marry," a Fox special, will come on December 18 for two days.

DR. B. L. RENFRO has sold the Empréss theatre, the largest and finest neighborhood house in Springfield, to Mr. Buer, of St. Louis. It is understood that the new owner will make extensive improvements immediately, the only fault with the playhouse being that at times it is not large enough to handle the crowds. Dick Diamond, former owner, who sold it to Dr. Renfro, is planning on returning to the film business and expects to make his plans known shortly.

ERNEST LANGE, for many years leader of the Majestic theatre orchestra, but absent from this city since last summer, has returned to his old position. Majestic patrons will find this cause for rejoicement, for Lange is a wizard at conducting.

EARL ENOS, local showman, has been helping at the Majestic box office during the absence of Miss Bessie Ware, who is down with the "flu."

What Detroit Is Doing

THE MAJESTIC THEATRE, Detroit, has been leased by Henry Guthard, one of the board of directors. Mr. Guthard, it is announced, intends to operate it as a first-class house. M. W. McGee, managing director, has been asked to remain by Mr. Guthard but has not yet accepted.

THE REGENT THEATRE, under the direction of C. H. Miles, which has been offering pictures exclusively, is to return to vaudeville in two weeks. Feature films will be shown as an added attraction, the program consisting of six acts of vaudeville and pictures. The Orpheum will be booked in conjunction with the Regent by the Loew circuit, Mr. Miles controlling both houses.

MICHIGAN'S "flu" situation is exceedingly serious. The state board of health has announced at Lansing that Spanish influenza is considered an epidemic and the daily reports show a constant increase of cases. Soldiers at the cantonment at Battle Creek have been forbidden to visit the cities of Grand Rapids, Jackson, Lansing, Flint, Kalamazoo, Saginaw and Bay City until further notice. Theatres in about 15 cities in the state are closed and a Red Cross survey shows many more cases than have officially been reported. Detroit's health officer says he can see no reason for closing the Detroit playhouses and if such an order is sent out from Lansing, legal action will be taken in the courts, through injunction proceedings to prevent the houses being closed unless everything else is closed down.

Fischer a Live Wire Manager Who "Gets the Price"

PHOTOPLAY PRICES in Milwaukee are constantly on the increase, and leading the procession in the way of increased prices is the Alhambra Theatre, under the management of George Fischer. Only recently this house advanced its prices to 25 cents, with the result that patronage increased. Now, despite the fact that the flu ban is still on and that the theatres are allowed to play but to 50 per cent of their capacity, Manager Fischer announces that commencing Sunday he will advance his admission prices to 22 cents and 33 cents, including war tax.

The Alhambra's first real advance in admission price was made shortly after the war tax went into effect. Taking the bull by the horns, Mr. Fischer not only advanced his admission price, but unlike many other photoplay managers, instead of apologizing for the war tax, boldly announced that the admission fee was 17 cents, including the war tax in the price of admission. This created quite a sensation in local film circles, but resulted in increased business for the Alhambra.

"The public will pay any reasonable price for photoplays as long as you deliver the goods," said Mr. Fischer in commenting on his most recent increase in price. "Too many managers make the mistake of being afraid of their public and apologizing for any increase that may be necessary, thereby making the public suspicious that the value of the entertainment does not warrant the increase. Your show is just what you make it worth, and if you are charging a 10-cent admission fee the public naturally figures you are giving them a 10-cent show and no more."

Aaron J. Jones Makes Ralph Kettering's Xmas a Happy One

AARON J. JONES, in behalf of his firm, Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, has presented Ralph T. Kettering with a most bounteous Christmas remembrance.

Kettering has been the general representative of the Jones, Linick & Schaeffer organization, handling all their advertising and publicity, covering their chain of moving picture and vaudeville houses for the past six years, and to show the appreciation of his firm, Mr. Jones presented him with an increase of $1,300 per year in his salary—some Christmas, Ralph!

That amount added to Mr. Kettering's present handsome remuneration makes the gentleman one of the highest salaried men in the business.

In addition to his connection with Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, Kettering has a handsome income from the outside, from plays and sketches that are being used on the speaking stage all over the country.

He has to his credit five full sized plays and over two hundred vaudeville sketches—Some Boy! Some Income!—and he deserves it all.

What Racine Is Doing

"EYE FOR EYE" is coming to the Rialto again, with the great movie star Nazimova. Thousands of people were turned away at the Rialto last week when this great production was presented here last week, so the management got a return engagement. It was first intended for the Palace, the other Friedman owned house, but Mr. Blumberg feels confident that he will have as much success this as last time.

RACINE talent was in evidence at this theatre the last time "Eye for Eye" was shown here, when Caroline Parker delighted thousands of local fans with a real Egyptian dance which she did for about five minutes between shows.

"ARIZONA," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, will also be shown at the Rialto this week. Fairbanks has gained a wonderful popularity with Racine fans, and the theatre that plays him is always certain of getting a good attendance.

THE PALACE has reduced its admission prices. The afternoon and evening admission is again 10c. for adults and 5c. for children, war tax excluded. The management is confident that by doing this a big majority of the city's fans will be enticed to attend either the Palace or the Rialto. Herb Rawlinson will be seen here in "The Man Trap" this week.

THE RIALTO undoubtedly is offering the public the biggest thing in filmdom. The large orchestra at this theatre, composed of ten master musicians will soon be increased by two or three new members, making an orchestra of over a dozen pieces. Manager Blumberg says, "In business, one must put something in if he intends to get something out," and he has therefore made this the policy of his house.

Galena Opens After Ban December 15 to Tremendous Business

THE influenza ban was lifted in Galena, Ill., during the week of December 15, and on Thursday, December 19th, the Dreamland Theatre opened its doors.

To use the manager's own words, they "came back with a smile, ready to welcome the picture hungry people with a photoplay that was surely a winner, 'The Road Through the Dark,' with Clara Kimball Young."

They started out with a fine program, and are keeping the good work up by scheduling the following plays to be shown before January 1st: "The Burden of Proof," with Marion Davies; "Sauce for the Goose," with Constance Talmadge; "The City of Dim Faces," a Sessue Hayakawa offering; "Friend Husband," starring Madge Kennedy; "Huck and Tom," with Jack Pickford; "One Dollar Bid," with Jack Warren Kerrigan; "The Safety Curtain," featuring Norma Talmadge, and "Madam Jealousy," with Pauline Frederick.

Newsy Items from Milwaukee

IN BOOKING as a special added attraction the Kilty Band of Canada for Christmas week at the Alhambra Theatre, Manager George Fischer has inaugurated a new departure in photoplay bookings that is being watched with a great deal of interest by Middle West theatre owners.

This organization has played Milwaukee numerous times previously, but always at $1 or $2 top and has a splendid reputation among local music lovers.

Mr. Fischer expects not only to attract a big attendance from photoplay fans, but from Milwaukee's music lovers. The band will blend splendidly with the photoplay attractions.

This is said to be the first of a series of special offerings of this sort that Manager Fischer has secured and which are expected to make his theatre most popular with Milwaukee's theatre going public.

The new scale of prices will be inaugurated Sunday, December 22, as a part of the Peace Christmas celebration. A splendid show has been booked for this week, including the famous Kilty Band from Canada, which has been added as a special attraction to a program that contains Bryant Washburn in "Gypsy Trail" and Fatty Arbuckle in "The Sheriff."

EARL RICE, son of M. Rice, manager of the State Theatre, and prior to his enlistment manager of the Magnate Theatre, has returned from Waco, Texas, where he has been on duty in the quartermaster's department.

"VIRTUOUS WIVES" opens a week's engagement at the Alhambra Theatre January 12, its first Milwaukee run. Following this release the next Milwaukee release of the First National Exhibitors will be Charlie Chaplin, in "Sunny Side," also slated for the Alhambra. According to Jack Fitzgerald, manager of the First National Exhibitors, everything points to a wonderful reception for this newest Chaplin.

WILLIAM A. ASCHMANN, manager of the Milwaukee branch of Pathe, has long harbored the belief that the most advantageous thing that could happen in local film circles would be to get motion picture men and newspaper people together at some sort of a jollification, in order to promote a spirit of fraternalism. In order to do this he invited scribes and film men to a supper in the banquet hall of Charlie Toy's Chinese restaurant Monday. When the bandbox movie house, the Toy, closed on the first floor at 11 o'clock, the company trooped in to see a pre-view of Gaby Deslys' "Infatuation."

STEALING A MARCH on less progressive exhibitors, Ralph Wettstein, local manager of Paramount and Artcraft, who books the Toy Theatre here, had motion pictures taken of the recent White Elephant Sale. They are being shown at the Toy and are getting over big with the prominent Milwaukee women who pushed the big patriotic affair to its successful conclusion.

MAKING THE ROUNDS of the movie desks in Milwaukee newspaper offices one day last week was W. H. Leahy, publicity manager for Anita Stewart productions. He arranged a private showing of the star's "come-back" picture, "Virtuous Wives," which proved a riot with the movie critics here. The showing was held at the Alhambra on December 13.

FRANK COOK, manager of the Princess, has contracted for the first run of Goldwyn pictures, expecting to run two the second week in January. Mabel Normand, in "Peck's Bad Girl," will hold the screen there the first half of the week with Madge Kennedy following in "A Perfect Lady," the last half. Mr. Cook's resolve to book the Goldwyn program followed close on Samuel Goldfish's visit to Milwaukee.

JOHN KENT, for a year manager of Milwaukee's Mutual exchange, has been transferred to the Cincinnati office of that company. George Malone of Minneapolis succeeds Mr. Kent, having already assumed his new duties. Mr. Kent left for Ohio Wednesday.

TOM SAXE, owner of the Alhambra and Princess theatres and controller of the activities of the First National Exhibitors in several states, is in New York attending a conference of the organization.

A VISITOR received with open arms in Milwaukee's film colony during the past week was Charles C. Perry, who was mustered out of the service, ranking a captain. Before entering the service Mr. Perry was manager of the Strand Theatre, coming from the New Garrick in St. Paul. After waking Milwaukee up to the fact that it had in the Strand a first-class house, he assumed charge of the Buffalo Theatre at Camp Upton, Long Island, later going to Camp Cody, Deming, New Mexico, where he directed the activities of the Liberty Theatre. Mr. Perry in the future will be located in Chicago.

HENRY P. DICKSON, the man who had the leading part in the Triangle picture, "The Man That Made Good," came into Milwaukee this week with his big burlesque review. He says he prefers burlesque to motion pictures.

"Kiddies Made Happy"

FRED McQUIGG, the head of the Chicago American's movie department, who originated the idea of "Go-to-Movie Week" at this time of the year in Chicago, added a three-day frolic for the kiddies to his endeavors this year, and announced that Thursday, Friday and Monday, December 26, 27 and 30, of his Go-to-Movie Week, Christmas to New Year's, made by the Chicago theatre managers the official days for giving Christmas movie joy to thousands of youngsters from the city homes and asylums.

On those days the fastest of the comedies, with Fatty, Charlie and Teddy—the Sennett dog—were shown, and feature pictures with Lila Lee, Marguerite Clark, Vivian Martin, Mary Pickford and Mary Miles Minter for the girls, and Bill Hart and Doug Fairbanks for the boys, were booked in honor of the small guests of the days.

Ascher Bros.'s long string of theatres and Lubliner & Trinz's chain of picture palaces are planning special entertainments for the youngsters.

Film Flashes from Flint

RAYMOND A. COOK, director of the orchestra in the Palace theatre, vaudeville and pictures, for the last year and a half and for several seasons previous in the same capacity in other Flint theatres controlled by Col. W. S. Butterfield, has transferred his activities to the Orpheum theatre where almost the entire orchestra from the Palace has been engaged as a permanent attraction, it is understood. Manager Garfield is featuring the orchestra of six pieces very strong in his advertising.

"THE WOMAN THE GERMANS SHOT" was held over from an advertised run of three days for two additional days at the Palace theatre during the week of December 9. The theatre played to big business all during the extended engagement.

SOME excellent advertising was obtained by Manager Frank H. Butterfield of the Palace for the showing of Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" during the four days beginning December 22. Manager Butterfield secured a window in a large department store building in the heart of the business district that was being remodeled after a fire. In this window he placed a life-sized figure of Chaplin as the doughboy, making the figure from a three-sheet poster which he cut out and mounted on beaverboard with an easel to make it stand erect. This figure was draped with all sorts of kitchen tinware, a large mouse-trap and many of the contraptions which are a part of Charlie's trench equipment in "Shoulder Arms." This, coupled with an announcement on a one-sheet card of the reopening of the Palace after the recent fire attracted the attention of hundreds passing the store during the week previous to the opening of the attraction at the Palace.

Ince Celebrates Xmas With New Studio

THOMAS H. INCE, the famous moving picture producer, enters another epoch of his career Christmas when he and his companies will occupy the new $250,000 studio just completed at Culver City.

It is just eighteen months since Mr. Ince severed his connection with the Triangle Film Corporation and bade farewell to Culver City for temporary working quarters at the old Biograph studio in Los Angeles. During his occupancy of these temporary quarters he has made some very notable successes of the screen, and during that period he has been working under a severe handicap.

Mr. Ince's producing record during the past eighteen months follows:

Charles Ray Pictures—"The Son of His Father," "His Mother's Boy," "The Hired Man," "The Family Skeleton," "His Own Home Town," "Playing the Game," "The Law of the North," "The Claws of the Hun," "A Nine O'Clock Town," "String Beans," "The Sheriff's Son," "The Girl Dodger," "Greased Lightning," "The Busher."

Dorothy Dalton Pictures—"The Price Mark," "Love Letters," "Flare-Up Sal," "Love Me," "Tyrant Fear," "The Mating of Marcella," "The Kaiser's Shadow," "Green Eyes," "Vive La France," "Hard Boiled," "Extravagance," "The Accursed Town."

Enid Bennett Pictures—"Keys of the Righteous," "Naughty, Naughty," "The Biggest Show on Earth," "The Desert Wooing," "The Vamp," "The Marriage Ring," "When Do We Eat?" "Fuss and Feathers," "Coals of Fire," "Happy Though Married," "Partners Three," "Nemesis."

Specials—All-star cast in "The Midnight Patrol" and Henry Walthall in "False Faces."

The new studio at Culver City is the last word in convenience and equipment. It has a large capacity. Back in a modern picture home, Mr. Ince assures the public an output of pictures that will set a new standard for patrons of the screen.

Thomas H. Ince, the noted producer of motion pictures, photographed the wives and sweethearts of Los Angeles soldiers Sunday, December 8, and the film will be rushed abroad to show the men over there that their loved ones at home rejoice in their victory and are anxiously awaiting their return. Previously Mr. Ince photographed "Miles of Smiles" at San Diego, San Francisco and other cities.

Enid Bennett has completed work on "Partners Three" at the Thomas H. Ince studios and has started work on a picture the story of which was written by John Lynch. The working title is "Nemesis." It is being directed by Fred Niblo, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

A remarkable illustration of the art in juggling lights will be seen in "The Busher," a photoplay on which Charles Ray is now working. One scene in this shows an old-fashioned basket social, during which the baskets were sold while the silhouette of the owner was thrown on a large white screen, the figure being on the opposite side of the sheet. The photography shows the bidders as they vie for the honor of having the woman on the other side as a partner. Of course the humor of the situation is that the hero, Charles Ray, gets fooled by a big hair ribbon.

Dorothy Dalton is hard at work on "The Accursed Town," a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, which promises to be one of the most remarkable pictures presented for many months by Thomas H. Ince. It is a highly dramatic story and Miss Dalton has been surrounded by a remarkable cast, including Tully Marshall, Thomas Holding, Joseph Swickhart and many others. Some remarkable types will also be seen in some of the Western scenes.

"The Accursed Town," a Thomas H. Ince photoplay now being filmed with Dorothy Dalton in the principal part, will have an historic value to film people. An entire village has been built at Inceville, the producer's first plant on the coast. This will be destroyed by fire for a big scene. Other scenes are being taken at the old Biograph Studio in Los Angeles, temporary quarters, and still other scenes at the latest Ince studio at Culver City, just being completed at a cost of $250,000.

The constant reminder of what science has done for the story telling art has worked its way under the skin of Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince wonder boy. He therefore has championed the cause of the writer and insists that the story teller has done more for science than science has done for the story teller.

With Los Angeles Theatres and Exchanges

CARL RAY, manager of the Garden theatre, formerly Miller's, announced this week that Theda Bara in "When a Woman Sins" had had a successful run of two weeks at his theatre.

SAMUEL WESLEY, salesman for the M. and R. features, is a victim of influenza this week. He is expected to be out again within a few days, however.

GUY GUNDERSON, in charge of the Kleine office, which was recently removed to the General Film offices, has been ill this week with influenza. J. A. Quinn, Kleine booker, is also ill with influenza.

THE WILLIAM FOX SUPERPICTURE, "The Queen of the Sea," starring Annette Kellerman, will be shown at the Kinema theatre Christmas week, beginning December 22. Elaborate preparations for putting the picture over in a big way are being made, according to Branch Manager M. A. Walsh of the Fox exchange. Tom Mix and his newest production, "Fame and Fortune," will be the attraction at the Kinema theatre next week. Mr. Mix will make personal appearances.

DAVID BERSHON, Universal branch manager, this week explained why in his opinion Universal specials and Bluebird subjects are playing to unusual business, although many theatres with well-known stars on their programs have reported business below normal. "It's the titles, the nature of our stories and the general appeal of the subject," Mr. Bershon said. "Under the present conditions the exhibitor must have productions that have big advertising possibilities. Stories of timely and unusual value are now proving great drawing cards. Stories of the usual standard during normal times got the business, but it takes more than an ordinary story to do it now. Universal specials and Bluebirds lend themselves easily to a good advertising campaign, and because of the high class of the stories, the thrill of their titles, the exhibitors seem to be more successful in playing productions of this kind than in playing a big star."

W. J. QUINN, Universal salesman, visited a number of California coast cities this week and returned with seventeen new contracts in his pocket. Branch Manager David Bershon said that under the circumstances it was a good week's work.

DAVID BERSHON, branch manager of Universal, received a wire this week from General Salesmanager Burman, of the Jewel Productions office in New York, that special prints of the "Universal scoop" on the surrender of the German fleet were being rushed from Chicago to Los Angeles by special messenger. Mr. Burman said in his telegram that Universal hoped to get this big news feature on the screens of the country at least one week ahead of any other news release in the United States.

EARL SINKS, Universal salesman, went to Arizona last week and this week he kept the Los Angeles exchange busy filling Arizona contracts. Branch Manager David Bershon estimates that while 40 per cent of the theatres in Arizona are still closed that Universal is doing at least 80 per cent of its normal business in that territory.

DWIGHT HILL, booker at the Metro exchange, was this week made salesmanager of the exchange to succeed Roy L. Turner, who was made manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual Booking Corporation for the Los Angeles territory. Mr. Hill is one of the best known bookers in this territory.

THE METRO PICTURE, "Pals First," in which the late Harold Lockwood is the star, played to capacity business last week at Clune's Broadway theatre, according to a report made by the theatre management to Metro's branch manager, A. B. Lamb. "The unusual attendance coming at a time when the theatres were reporting a business below normal, was a fine tribute to the popularity of the late star," Mr. Lamb said.

ROY L. TURNER, for three years with Metro and during the last year a special salesman, has been made manager of the Mutual Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in the Los Angeles territory, which corporation will control Mutual affiliated releases in this section. He was selected from four applicants it is said. Branch Manager A. B. Lamb, of Metro, paid a high tribute to Mr. Turner's ability and predicts that he will be eminently successful in his new position.

W. W. WHITSON, proprietor of the Plaza theatre at San Diego, was a visitor in Los Angeles this week. He told of the experiences that have fallen to San Diego theatre owner during the past few weeks as a result of influenza. San Diego closed completely for four days last week, and when the reopening order was issued it was accompanied by another order that everybody appearing on the streets or in public should wear masks. Mr. Whitson says the latter order is being enforced to the letter.

J. G. KNAPP, proprietor of the Temple theatre at San Bernardino, this week purchased the Strand theatre at San Bernardino from Mrs. Ethel H. Curtis, according to word received by various managers on film row. The Strand is one of the leading houses of San Bernardino.

L. WINGHAM, Los Angeles salesman for Mutual, has been made branch manager of the Mutual exchange at Portland. He left this week for his new post of duty. His promotion was fully merited, according to the tribute paid to his service and efficiency with the Mutual exchange by Branch Manager A. B. Patton. His successor has not as yet been selected.

THE FIRST PRINTS of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" arrived at the Los Angeles Mutual exchange this week. A preview of the subject will be given next week. It has not been determined what theatre will get the first run of these remarkable pictures in Los Angeles, Branch Manager Patton said.

JAMES COOK, an exhibitor of El Centro, Cal., was again visitor in Los Angeles this week.

THE LAUGHLIN THEATRE at Long Beach has booked Goldwyn's "Laughing Bill Hyde" for a ten days' run, according to announcement by Branch Manager Ben Fish.

THE MORENCI CLUB, of Morenci, Ariz., recently gave a private showing of the Goldwyn picture, "Joan of Plattsburg." The picture made such a hit with the club that Manager Martin has rebooked the picture. The letter praising the subject was received this week by Branch Manager Ben Fish.

HARVEY GAUSMAN, Goldwyn special salesman, this week visited various California coast cities, including Santa Barbara, San Louis Obispo and San Diego, reporting an excellent business.

What Butte Film Men Are Doing

GIL HEYFRON, for years heavily interested in the Missoula Amusement Company, controlling all the theatres in that city, has disposed of his stock and plans locating elsewhere in the state in the show business. Mr. Heyfron is now on the coast. Gil proved his managerial ability, being a live wire and awake to every development in the film world and theatre game.

BEN F. COLLIER has resigned as manager of the Babcock at Billings and has a responsible job with the United Picture Theatre Corporation, recently organized to apply a new principle in the film game. Mr. Collier reports many leading Montana theatres taking a favorable view of the new plan and becoming members of the corporation. A private showing to showmen of "The Light of Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum in the leading role, was given in Butte this week.

F. O. BOEDECKER, proprietor of the Lyric theatre, Bozeman, was in Butte on business the past week.

HENRY THOMAS is the new manager of the Bijou, Isis and Empress theatres in Missoula, houses owned by the Missoula Amusement Company. Mr. Thomas recently purchased the interests of Gilbert Heyfron. He is one of the substantial citizens of the university city.

GEORGE BOURKE of the Universal Film Exchange, Butte, has received the 1,000-foot film showing the surrender of the great German high seas fleet. The first house in the state to show it was the American, Butte.

IN THE OPINION of Mr. Bourke the entire state will be open by the first of the year. Influenza is showing improvement all over Montana. In Butte the record this week went as low as eight new cases in a day.

ALTHOUGH the American theatre was "dark" the management has of late been lighting up its large electric sign. Under the name of the theatre, in bright, red electric letters, appear the words, "Germ proof; ventilated." Manager of Publicity Ralieggh has taken a lead in impressing on the public his theory that a well ventilated and thoroughly fumigated show house is as healthy and sanitary as the great outdoors.

MANAGER E. MARSHALL TAYLOR of the Ansonia has been attracting the attention of the public the past few days by brightly lighting up the lobby and front of the theatre. In fact the outward signs were all in one direction—a show must be going on within. However, on nearing the lobby one's eyes quickly glimpsed a neat sign and a cordial invitation as follows, "Step in the lobby and look at the pictures." On both sides of the spacious lobby are dozens of pictures advertising Goldwyn features just booked for the Ansonia. Large portraits of Mae Marsh, Pauline Frederick, Tom Moore, Madge Kennedy, Geraldine Farrar and Mabel Normand appear. The idea costs a little electric light, but is certainly impressing on Butte show goers that Goldwyn stars and plays will soon appear at the Ansonia and that the manager has not gone fishing and given up all hope of ever again entertaining the Butte public.

WHILE theatres and cabarets were closed in Butte there was one form of amusement that was "mopping up" and which had not brought down upon its head the displeasure of the health authorities. It was ice skating. The big rink here is the Holland, owned and managed by Jim Byrne, widely known as Butte's "ice king." Starting Dec. 16, Mr. Byrne put on an ice carnival with band music every night. Thousands of artists on the steels attended and the event proved the big success of the history of ice rinks in the Montana metropolis. Byrne knows how to run his outdoor amusement emporium and the public has shown its appreciation by liberal patronage. However, with the opening of theatres, attendance at the rink will of course be cut down.

Bits from Seattle

R. R. NAVE, manager of the Triangle office in Seattle, has been receiving compliments from his friends on Film Row. The reason for these compliments are the manner in which he has been conducting his office. Three members of the force became sick at the same time, but there was no hitch in the conduct of the business. Nave did the "3 in 1" act, with the assistance of Mr. Tracy and Miss C. Olness.

MANAGER MORAN of the Rialto, Medford, Ore., was a recent visitor on Film Row.

THE MANAGER who will be in the Seattle and Northwest Select office after Manager Hicks has been sent to Ohio has not been announced to date.

OWING to the "flu" epidemic that has re-closed 40 per cent of the Northwest territory, many of the exchanges on Film Row now have called in their salesmen. Jack Lannon, of the Greater Features Company, however, has put two more out. They are Lieut. Ben Shearer, who before enlisting as a private was selling machines for the Rialto Theatre Supply Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., and Mr. Frank Burgett, a well known film salesman who three years ago handled "Where Are My Children" for Paramount.

D. B. LEDERMAN, a special representative of the Universal Film Co., has been in Seattle superintending a new system in the Seattle office, which he recently installed through the U. S.

THE SURRENDER of the German fleet to the allies will soon be shown on the screen, as the Universal camera happened to be there at the time of surrender. This will be a Jewel production. King George, Admirals Beatty and Sims and the German high seas fleet commander will all be in the picture.

THE CLEMMER has done big business for one solid week with Nazimova in "An Eye for an Eye." Carl Stearn, Northwest manager for Metro, who placed the picture, announces that he has also placed it at the Liberty, Portland, Ore., and that he is receiving many calls for the film.

A. B. CLELAND, Goldwyn representative, returned to Seattle headquarters long enough to attend the now famous Goldwyn luncheon given in honor of President Goldfish of the Goldwyn corporation and Mr. Rothapel of the Rialto and Rivoli of New York.

A. H. HUQT, formerly booker for Select, has been appointed Northwest manager for the Independent Sales Corporation and the Film Clearing House. Mr. Huot has opened offices on Film Row, 2012 Third avenue, Seattle. The first picture for release is "Her Own Mind," starring Evelyn Nesbit, and the second will be J. Stuart Blackton's "Life's Greatest Problem," starring Mitchell Lewis and Ruby De Remiere. The first big feature which the Independent Sales Corporation will release, and which did well on Broadway, New York, is "Wanted for Murder." D. J. Chatkin is Pacific coast manager for these corporations, with offices in San Francisco, Cal.

SEATTLE THEATRE MEN recently got together to see how they could help amuse the soldiers who come over from Camp Lewis. They inaugurated the "theatre privilege," which simply means that all a soldier need do is to go to one of the service officers at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Club and ask for a ticket to any of the following houses: The Clemmer, Little Theatre, Colonial, Rex, Levy's Orpheum, Oak, Palace Hip, and Pantages. The uniform men thus have a wide range of houses to choose from. The only requirement is that they pay the war tax. No restrictions are reserved as to hours or seating capacity at any one time in discrimination against the soldier. The managers of the houses have been thanked by the leaders in the community who are endeavoring to make things pleasant for the men in uniform who come to Seattle.

"Flu" Goes and Strike Comes in Butte

TROUBLES of the showmen of Butte did not end with the lifting of the epidemic shutdown on December 17. Instead they seemed but to multiply. When the ban was lifted things took on a roseate hue. But not to last long.

During the closedown the musicians demanded higher salaries. This was refused by the showmen, with the exception of Manager Belmont of the Empress, where stock holds forth.

On the day the ban was lifted for the second time, December 17, the Moving Picture Operators' Union declared a sympathetic strike to aid the musicians. That further complicated matters for the theatremen who had determined to get along without orchestra music in the event that the musicians stood pat on their demand for higher pay.

During the afternoon but one picture house in the city was running, the American, where Owner Frank T. Bailey stepped into the booth, after peeling off his coat, and turned the crank. Mr. Bailey ran a theatre in Butte when it was not at all unethical for a manager or owner to run his own projection machine at times.

The entire trouble came to a head at a conference of owners, managers, operators and musicians held at 5 o'clock. The outcome of the conference was that horns were locked for a fight to the finish. Neither side would give an inch.

So theatres opened with managers operating the picture machines and with no musicians, not even a lone pianist on the job. All the non-organized help was on duty, however.

The Empress, Dick Sutton's house, acceded to the demands of the musicians and is running as usual with stock. The People's, where Hip vaudeville is booked, and the Pantages house opened later in the week.

William S. Hart came with a smile, minus the music from the pit, at the Rialto, appearing in "Branding Broadway." There was a big jam when the doors opened at 7:30.

Influenza Has Spokane Worried

ONE Spokane theatre has announced its intention of closing its doors within two weeks, and others are announcing their intention to close unless the modified influenza ban is lifted. Petitions have been circulated by a number of Spokane business men, including theatre men, asking the board of health to remove the influenza ban and substitute for it a quarantine of all influenza cases. Under the modified influenza ban, theatres are permitted to run at half capacity, with every other row of seats barricaded, and to close between the hours of 5 and 6:30 to thoroughly ventilate their houses. Manager C. E. Stilwell of the Casino, Class A and Rex says he is losing money every day and that unless definite information as to when they will be allowed to show to full capacity is given the houses will be closed.

The health board has announced that the ban will not be lifted before January 6, and not then unless conditions warrant. This prohibits the motion picture houses and other theatres running at full capacity Christmas, New Year's Eve and New Year's Day, big nights under normal conditions. Obviously this is the contingency feared by the board of health. Every effort has been made by the board throughout the influenza epidemic to prevent the congregation of people in big crowds. When apprised of the petitions, Dr. J. B. Anderson, health officer, said they would have as much effect on him as water on a duck's back, and he had every intention of standing pat so far as the ban is concerned.

Sheehan a Portland Visitor

WINFIELD SHEEHAN, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who is on a tour of the United States to study the motion picture industry, was in Portland Wednesday.

Mr. Sheehan said that he found business in Portland in better condition and more prosperous than any other city he has yet visited.

"J. J. Parker of the Majestic, E. B. Armstrong of the Strand and John A. Jennings of the Sunset are as progressive managers as will be found in the United States," he said. "The managers of other Portland houses are the equal in originality of any I have found in the East."

Mr. Sheehan was in conference with Mr. Parker and Mr. Armstrong about their programs for 1919. The Strand will present many Western plays from the Fox corporation, among them being pictures by Tom Mix, the newest and greatest light in the Western screen drama.

L. C. WINGHAM, former manager of the Mutual Film Corporation at the Los Angeles office, is in Portland and in charge of the Mutual exchange. H. H. Brownell, former manager of the Portland office, has been promoted to the Seattle office. Theodore Johnson, formerly of the Mutual exchange in this city, who has been with the Mutual exchange at Salt Lake City, has returned to Portland after a year's absence.

Clemmer Booked Up Well Ahead

DR. HOWARD S. CLEMMER of the Clemmer theatre has bookings that will take Clemmer patrons up to the fourth anniversary, February 22, 1919, with almost no holes in the dates. There are several relatively new stars in the lot and many of the best of the recent special releases, including several Cecil B. De Mille offerings. Dates and bookings are as follows: December 22, Constance Talmadge in "The Shuttle;" December 25, Wallace Reid in "The Man from Funeral Range;" December 29, Ethel Clayton in "Women's Weapons;" January 1, Cecil B. De Mille's "Till I Come Back to You;" January 5, Vivian Martin in "Miranda Smiles;" January 8, Private Peat in "Private Peat;" January 11, Marguerite Clark in "Uncle Tom's Cabin;" January 15, Dorothy Gish in "The Hope Chest;" January 19, Ethel Clayton in "The Mystery Girl;" January 22, open; February 1, Marguerite Clark in "Little Miss Hoover;" February 22, D. W. Griffith's "Romance of Happy Valley."

Paramount in Five Downtown L. A. Houses

HARRY BALLANCE, branch manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange in Los Angeles, announced this week with much gratification and many smiles that the Paramount-Artcraft program will be represented in no fewer than five downtown theatres during the week beginning December 22. The program consists of the following: Clune's Auditorium, D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life;" Kinema, Enid Bennett in "When Do We Eat;" Grauman's, Lila Lee in "Such a Little Pirate;" California, Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona;" Clune's Broadway, Wallace Reid in "The Man from Funeral Ridge;" Marguerite Clark in "Out of a Clear Sky," at the Palace.

News of the Week in San Francisco

PROMISE that the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, will expand its present popularity in a new managerial policy, is made by Fred Dahnken, president of the T. & D. circuit of picture theatres of which the Tivoli is the center. Two important items in the plans contemplated have just been announced by Dahnken. He has signed up Uda Waldrop, one of the most noted of the Pacific coast musicians, who has just returned from New York, where he maintained his reputation as a musical and artistic genius.

During the brief stay of Messrs. Goldfish and Rothapfel Mr. Dahnken consulted with the two magnates on the plans under contemplation for the radical reconstruction of the interior of the Tivoli for the purpose of better, more commodious and more luxurious entertainment of motion picture patrons.

A new lighting scheme will also be installed. It is from one of Mr. Rathapfel's theatres, the Rivoli, that Ura Waldrop was secured and where he was featured as the organist. He will now be featured as the Tivoli organist and will perform on the Robert-Morton type of organ which was installed in that house by the American Photo Player Co. Waldrop was one of the soloists on the great exposition organ at the Panama Pacific exposition, and he was also an honored guest organist at the San Diego exposition.

INSTRUCTIONS IN GARDENING shown by motion picture are now ready to be distributed to the schools of California by the University Extension Division. "Making of the Home Gardens" is the title of the film in four parts. Eleven reels of 750 feet each are used in the work. The developing, printing and all laboratory work on these films was done by the Duhem Motion Picture Manufacturing Co. This company is making additions to its plants of several new machines for exclusive laboratory work, and is now one of the best equipped places of its kind in the city.

THE SHADOW OF INFLUENZA is again hanging over the heads of the exhibitors and exchange men of this section. The proposition of re-enacting the mask law in this city is taking form and it is expected that next Thursday, December 19, that the supervisors will agree to pass the law again. As it will take five days before the law becomes mandatory this will give the business men a chance to conclude their Christmas trade unhampered. It is not anticipated that the theatres of this city will be closed again, but the enforced wearing of masks will have a serious effect upon attendance. In some sections of the state local authorities are again closing the theatres. The most serious case of this kind so far reported is Fresno, where all theatres were closed on December 17. Some smaller places have also closed their show houses.

WINNIE SHEEHAN, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, was a visitor to San Francisco this week. He reports that the company has on hand a number of superior pictures for release next year. Mr. Sheehan came to San Francisco from the Northwest and went thence to Los Angeles. He will return east by way of Texas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Washington, and expects to sail for Europe from New York on January 20.

HARRY OASTLER and his wife, of the American theatre, Winnemucca, Nevada, is in San Francisco for the holidays.

RUTH J. KEELER, several years cashier for the George Kleine System, has succeeded Miss Josie O'Connell as cashier of the General Film Co.

JOHN MORPHET, auditor of the General Film Co., who has been visiting San Francisco, left this week for Los Angeles, from which city he returns to his home by way of Dallas, Tex.

ED REDLICH, formerly with the Metro at Seattle, has become associated with the Fox in San Francisco.

PETE HANLON, manager of the Strand theatre at Mare Island, was in San Francisco this week.

EARLY THIS WEEK Bruce Johnson of the T. & D. circuit was laid up with a severe cold. So far it is believed that he has not been stricken with influenza.

C. C. KAUFMANN of Colusa was a visitor to film row this week. Mr. Kaufmann has been building a new house in Colusa to be called the Gem. He reports that good progress has been made in the building and that he expects to open the new theatre about the second week in January.

Promotion of Newton Levi

NEWTON E. LEVI, who for the past two years, has been branch manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, now known as the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, and for two years previously connected with the company in another capacity, has just received notice that he has been promoted to the position of Western division manager, to succeed J. H. Merrick, who goes to the home office in an executive capacity.

The headquarters of the corporation have been previously at Los Angeles, but as the division has been increased in size to take in the territory from Denver west, Mr. Levi decided to establish his headquarters in San Francisco. Besides the branch office at San Francisco the new division manager now has branches at Denver, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland under his jurisdiction.

Opening of Phoenix Strand an Event

A LARGE delegation of Los Angeles film exchange managers will go to Phoenix, Ariz., during Christmas week to attend the opening of the new Strand theatre in Phoenix under the management of Rickards and Nace. Aside from the opening ceremonies a special luncheon will be provided for the exchange men. The party from Los Angeles will be headed by David Bershon, of the Universal exchange, and Harry Ballance, of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange. Others who are planning to make the trip are A. B. Lamb, Metro; T. E. Hancock, World; A. R. Patton, Mutual; W. E. Knotts, First National Exhibitors; Ben Fish, Goldwyn; W. H. Hepburn, Vitagraph; C. J. Marley, and B. E. Loper, Select.

New Cabrillo at San Diego a Playhouse De Luxe

W. E. HICKS, owner of the Cabrillo Theatre, has completed the installation of a new organ which places the house in the front rank on the Pacific coast. The Robert Morton Company of Van Nuys, Cal., put in seven weeks—mainly day work during the period of closing during the “flu” scare—in the installation of the organ. Mr. Hicks made a selection of pipes which he believed best suited to his house, and it can be said that the organ fits completely with the accoustic properties of the Cabrillo.

The organ has 61 stops, about 40 of which are on the musical side and the remainder regulate the traps and sound effects. The pipes are arranged on either side of the house, flanking the screen, the tallest pipe being 22 feet.

A 3-h.p. motor is used to run the blower for the organ, and connected with the motor is a generator for making the low voltage for the electrical contacts. Either the organ or the photoplayer can be operated by roll from the pit or by hand from a console, thus giving the house a double-header in the matter of music. In case the regular organist may be off duty, the relief, though not a pipe organ player, can still furnish music for the pictures. Generally the photoplayer is used for the comedy films and the pipe organ for the features. Through this double equipment a contrast in music is afforded.

Two Powers 6-B projectors have also been installed in the Cabrillo. A motor-driven ticket machine is another recent addition, this being built to order. Manager Hicks has always used the automatic machines in his ticket booths. Changes have been made in his lighting apparatus so that he has a dual system for meeting any emergency.

A feature of the Cabrillo in which Manager Hicks especially prides himself is the ventilating system which he installed when he erected the building four years ago and which gives a complete change of air throughout the house every 46 seconds. This has been proven by tests made by the health department, and the system has been the subject of study by classes from San Diego High School. The fresh air comes in at the ceiling and goes out at the floor, reversing the general idea of ventilating. From tests it has been found that when the house is packed the air comes within one cubic centimeter of carbon dioxide to the 10,000 parts air of being as pure as the air on the streets of San Diego, and San Diego claims, by reason of its geographical location, to have as pure air as any city in the world.

Manager Hicks believes he has established a record in the line of launching young women of his staff upon matrimonial careers, no less than eleven having become brides during the five and a half years he has been located in San Diego, these going mainly from his ticket booth, although he has lost one or two organists through the work of Cupid.

Miss Betty Cheeley is his present chief organist, and she is an artist in her profession, being an expert pipe organist. She gets wonderful effects by hand and even more wonderful effects from the roll.

E. A. Jonas, formerly chief electrician at the Cabrillo, who went into the service of Uncle Sam during the draft, is expected to return to his post about the first of the year.

Around the Circuit with Goldwyn and Rothapfel

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of the Goldwyn Film Corporation and Samuel Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, spent a short time in San Francisco on the 14th instant. Mr. Goldwyn stopped over here on his way to visit the new studio recently acquired in Los Angeles, while Mr. Rothapfel is accompanying him on a pleasure trip. On invitation of G. C. Parsons, manager of the Goldwyn San Francisco exchange, a select number of local motion picture men met the two visitors at a luncheon at Tait's cafe. Among those present, besides the guests of honor and the host, were: M. L. Markowitz, owner, and Leo Wiener, manager, of the Strand theatre; C. W. Midgley, American theatre, Oakland; Bruce Johnson, T. & D. circuit, operating Tivoli theatre; Oliver Kehrlein, Kinema theatres, Oakland, Los Angeles and Fresno; W. W. Beatty, Liberty theatre, San Jose; Samuel H. Levin, owner and manager of the Coliseum theatre, and Joseph Bauer, of the Wigwam.

Mr. Rothapfel told the luncheon guests that San Francisco has taken a lead during the past three years in improving motion picture presentations. “Do not adopt the policy of ‘giving the public what it wants,’”—said Mr. Rothapfel. “Neither you nor the public is apt to know what it wants. Give the people, rather, what you think they want and make them like it because of the artistic presentation and musical accompaniment. Establish a character to your theatre and the public will come to your entertainment rather than to the manager who depends upon spasmodic sensational features.”

Mr. Goldwyn also spoke briefly. He declared that producers and exhibitors are widely at variance. He said, however, that the domination of either will jeopardize the industry. He urged co-operation and mutual recognition of obstacles.

A Luncheon Also in Portland

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, and Samuel Rothapfel, manager of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres of New York, were Portland visitors Thursday, December 12th.

A luncheon was given Thursday noon at the Benson Hotel in honor of them, at which a number of the most prominent exhibitors and film exchange men were present.

Mr. Goldwyn spoke informally, in which he urged that a closer bond of understanding should exist between the producer and the exhibitor. He stated that the object of his visit to Portland and to the other cities which he has visited, is to become acquainted with the exhibitors and to get their viewpoint on conditions.

Among the motion picture men present at the luncheon were Ed Myrick, manager of the Columbia theatre; John Stille, manager of People's and Star theatres; W. J. Parker, manager of the Majestic theatre; Frank Lacey, assistant manager of the Majestic; John Jennings, manager of the Sunset theatre; H. C. Stevens; G. T. Holtzclaw, manager of the Circle theatre; and Messrs. Graper, Warstock and Ayers, representing the suburban houses. Out-of-town men present were Messrs. Goldwyn, Rothapfel, Bernardo and Brownell.

San Diego News and Notes

ALL of the motion picture houses resumed business Tuesday, Dec. 10, with the exception of the Hillcrest, upon the raising of the quarantine which had closed all places of amusement, churches, schools and business houses, except those dispensing necessities of life, for the previous week. A new ordinance was enacted by the city council Monday, taking effect at midnight and continuing for nine days, requiring universal wearing of gauze masks, but opening up all the places which had been under the ban. Consequently the audiences at the various houses since that time have shown seas of masked faces. Every one has entered heartily into the enforcement of the ordinance in the hope of stamping out the influenza in time for the holiday trade. The number of cases reported since the wearing of the mask became obligatory has steadily dropped daily.

AFTER BEING CLOSED for some weeks, permission was granted Dec. 12 for the Sunshine and Kearny theatres at Camp Kearny to reopen, but the soldier patrons must wear masks. Soldiers visiting San Diego, however, from the camp are not allowed to visit the city show houses.

GROGG'S THEATRE at Bakersfield, Cal., has booked for an early showing “Romance of Tarzan,” sequel to “Tarzan of the Apes,” a First National release.

Doings of Denver Film Men

THE INFLUENZA SITUATION shows considerable improvement this week. Out of approximately 325 theatres in Denver territory, 85, or 38 per cent, are now open for business. So far as patronage is concerned the business is coming back slowly and it is very spotted. Curtis street houses in Denver report business 60 per cent of normal, and New Mexico exhibitors report an average patronage of 50 to 60 per cent. The latter average will hold good for all territory tributary to Denver, except for the Black Hills district. Theatres in South Dakota are practically all closed.

Conditions in northern Colorado and in Wyoming show but little improvement. Cheyenne, Douglas and Lander are closed, as is Greeley and Fort Collins. The following important points in Colorado are open: Boulder, Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Trinidad, Grand Junction, Montrose and Salida. Clovis and Deming, both important New Mexico towns, are open. Many houses in Nebraska have closed for the second or third time.

JOSEPH BARNETT and H. E. Sherman of the Barnett Amusement Company at Albuquerque have been in Denver several days this week visiting old friends and arranging new service.

J. O. TAYLOR of the Gem theatre at Durango also visited Denver exchanges this week.

THE PROPERTY of the Mountain and Plains Theatre Supply Company was sold to the highest cash bidder by the bankruptcy court in Denver a few days ago. The business will open shortly under new management. For the reason that the court has not formally confirmed the sale, no further announcement can be made until the next issue.

IRA C. FOSTER of the Colonial theatre, Pueblo, was a recent Denver visitor.

THOMAS WICKHAM has resigned as road salesman for Pathe and has returned to his former home at Oklahoma City.

DENVER MANAGERS of film exchanges are co-operating, as they have in connection with all war activities, with the Red Cross in the distribution of slides which are being exhibited in the interest of their Christmas roll call.

H. A. KYLER, the popular salesman for Supreme Photo Plays Corporation, is out again after three weeks' serious illness. He contracted influenza, which later developed into double pneumonia. His life was despaired of for several days and his friends are rejoicing in his recovery.

THE FIRST NATIONAL gave a trade showing at the Broadway theatre a few days ago of "Virtuous Wives," featuring Anita Stewart. The picture was well received.

T. Y. HENRY of General extends the following Christmas greeting: "Forgive us our Christmas as we forgive," etc.

SALINAS and Santa Cruz are playing a return date on the "Spanish flu." The second engagement is not as popular as the first one, however the theatres are closed again.

MANAGER FRANK VESLEY of the Brown, Salinas, installed in his theatre a new heating system, warm air being blown into all parts of the theatre openings covered with allied flags. A half dozen small fans placed facing the audience are causing much talk. These fans are covered with artificial flowers hiding a floral cone filled every other day with carnation perfume. When in operation all the flags wave and the breeze everywhere is very pleasing.

MONTEREY, Pacific Grove, Hollister and Watsonville are again wearing masks.

¶ The West Coast Edition of Motion Picture News costs us a lot of money. It costs just as much as would a separate publication published locally in Los Angeles or San Francisco. But it's worth it to us—Because it enables us to say that NO OTHER FILM PUBLICATION covers the West Coast as thoroughly, and with such intimate news and gossip as does Motion Picture News.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful West Coast Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theater manager in the West Coast territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the West Coast Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

¶ Will you do it? Will you let us know about it? And then watch our smoke!

The Suggestion for the "Ad"

To The Advertising Department:

William Faversham in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Silver King," is such an unusually fine production that I hope you will exert every effort to convince the exhibitors of that fact.

Especially, I believe, should they be urged to advertise heavily and with copy that will assure their patrons of the quality of this picture.

I remember that some time ago we had an advertisement of Paramount-Artcraft Specials headed, "When we say it's a Special we speak Webster's language." Several exhibitors have used this copy in their own advertisements of Paramount-Artcraft Specials.

I think it would be a good idea to run it again - not so much for our benefit as to furnish the copy to exhibitors that they may pick it up to use in advertising "The Silver King."

I believe it would be well to include this copy in one of the extra advertisements that you are furnishing exhibitors, in addition to the regular ones in the press book.

Walter E. Greene

Specials

When We Say "It's a Special" We Speak Webster's Language

When we use the word "special" we mean just what Webster's New International Dictionary means, namely: "Distinguished by some unusual quality; uncommon, extraordinary; especially distinguished by superior excellence, importance, power or the like."

That describes Paramount-Artcraft Specials.

Paramount-Artcraft Special

Making Promises—and Keeping Them

WHEN the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced that it would produce a series of Paramount-Artcraft Specials it promised that each of these productions would indeed be specials in every sense of the word.

Because the promise was made by an institution in which the exhibitors had confidence, hundreds booked these Specials before they had seen even one of the pictures.

The Paramount-Artcraft Specials have made good. They are Specials.

A promise well kept always increases confidence and Paramount-Artcraft Specials are helping greatly to build good will and added business for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

So, in turn, are the Paramount-Artcraft Specials building good will and added business for the theatres that show them.

"The Silver King" will increase your profits and your prestige.

But you must advertise it sincerely. Give it your personal indorsement. We suggest that you use "When we say it's a Special we speak Webster's language," in your advertising.

It's a promise that you will back up with a 100% performance, with William Faversham in "The Silver King."

"The Silver King" is as written by Henry Arthur Jones.

And They Made Him Sheriff!

CAN you imagine popular Tom Moore playing the role of a soft, idle waster who is forced out of his home by his angry father? Can you picture him as a dishwasher in a Western saloon-restaurant; arriving in a "Bad Town" just as it is being "shot up" by Western bad men? Can you picture Tom Moore's surprise as well as your own at seeing him elected Sheriff to capture a noted outlaw, arresting his own father and winning the girl of his heart? Whether you can or not, you are going to do a big business with

By Willard Mack

This is the third successive big "hit" by this popular young fellow who was made a star by Goldwyn because the exhibitors of the country demanded him; because his name draws patronage out of the ordinary every time it goes up in the electric lights and lobby frames. THE test of success in any business is contract orders. Accustomed as Goldwyn is to volume of business with the best exhibitors of the nation, we confess our surprise not over the tremendous number of incoming contracts for The Ford Educational Weekly under Goldwyn distribution but at the rapidity with which exhibitors are being signed.

The adjacent reproductions of telegrams from several Goldwyn offices evidences the instant demand for the most powerful, vital, carefully-prepared and costly educational production in the entire motion picture industry.

Behind The Ford Educational Weekly are the vast physical and financial resources of Henry Ford; the imagination of Henry Ford; the same persistent, restless energies that have made Henry Ford the mightiest industrial leader of our generation.

As a preliminary announcement of bookings under contract, Goldwyn is pleased to announce the signing of contracts for The Ford Educational Weekly with every Marcus Loew theatre in Greater New York—representing the largest volume of public patronage annually and the greatest daily average of patronage done by any one amusement ownership in the entire industry. Have you signed a contract for your theatre.

(From the New York Herald)

Mr. J. W. Duree Believes Man
" WANTED FOR MURDER "
Stopped at His House

If it were not the world's good luck that Mr. J. W. Duree has a camera eye at each corner of his head—corner, mind you—and a fountain pen which simply drips red ink it is probable that the present whereabouts of the unspeakable Bill Hohenzollern would be smeared with mystery. The fact is that the one-time Kaiser, long believed to be fretting in Holland, is now travelling south through Kansas, whistling through his teeth and talking Irish.

Within the last few days there has been presented at a Broadway theatre a motion picture entitled "Wanted for Murder." It has to do with the Kaiser and his ten million homicides, and the advertisements for the production, which have been circulated far and wide through the medium of the newspapers, are as follows:

WANTED FOR MURDER

DESCRIPTION

Height 5 ft. 10 in.
Weight 191 pounds
Iron gray mustache, turned upward. Withered left arm. Wanted for Atrocities Against Humanity.

REPORT TO AUTHORITIES

The press agent who wrote that advertisement probably never once considered the fact that Mr. J. W. Duree, who resides south by southeast of Rural Free Delivery Box 74, at Perry, Kans., reads the papers and keeps his eyes and ears ajar. However, Mr. Duree works while the universe sleeps, apparently, and having caught the warning in his teeth, so to speak, he sent the following letter to the HERALD:

"EDITOR OF NEW YORK HERALD:

"Dear Sir—A man answering to this description stayed all night at our house just a week before Thanksgiving. He was going through the country begging for money. And all we got out of him was that he was going South. He said he was sixty-two years old, and talked Irish. Please turn this over to the proper authorities. Very truly,

"MR. J. W. DUREE.

"R. F. D. Box 74, Perry, Kan."

The authorities were notified and the bloodhounds have been mailed to Mr. Duree.

Democracy Abroad—

When President Wilson went abroad Fox Pictures went with him on the George Washington.

Though an American President as a stranger in Paris, Fox Pictures were well known there.

They had preceded the Executive to Europe by three years—had long been favorites in London and the capitals of the Continent.

No steamship carrying express leaves the port of New York, whether bound for Africa, South America, Asia, or the remotest nooks and corners where men dwell, that does not bear a consignment of Fox Pictures.

The people of the whole wide world have placed the stamp of their approval on the Fox Idea.

Universal appeal is the predominating characteristic of Fox Pictures.

They are the great international pictures—the exponents of that universal democracy to which the hearts of men everywhere respond.

They tell the stories common to all humanity—the great heart interest and human interest stories

How About Comedy?

It costs William Fox $1,500,000 a year to make SUNSHINE COMEDIES. This cost is greater than that of all other comedies combined! And there is full quality value developed for every dollar expended—which may be one reason why SUNSHINE COMEDIES are the best two-reelers of any sort ever produced. See them and book them!

Here's the combination you are looking for: Big productions of proved value, featuring popular stars.

The Great Nine are the pick of the best box office producers William Fox has made in the last three years.

Their value is not a matter of assertion—it has been demonstrated repeatedly—the pictures are recognized throughout the trade as big money makers. Look over the remarkable list:

William Farnum in FIGHTING BLOOD

Theda Bara in THE SERPENT
REGENERATION

William Farnum in THE BROKEN LAW

Theda Bara in UNDER TWO FLAGS
INFIDELITY (Dr. Rameau)

Valeska Suratt in

Theda Bara in THE DARLING OF PARIS

William Farnum in HOODMAN BLIND

Each of these nine productions runs 4500 feet. Each has been re-edited, re-titled and re-printed. Each is a modern masterpiece.

—together, THE GREAT NINE constitute a library of film classics—the most complete and perfect series of pictures ever released in one group!

Such productions should command big prices. But it is as much a part of the Fox Idea to afford unusual opportunities to the exhibitor as it is to provide him with unusual quality.

The time has come for a clean-up! Book THE GREAT NINE today and give the people a chance to spend their money!

F O X
FILM CORPORATION

Revision of THE GREAT NINE has been the most comprehensive and complete work of the sort ever undertaken.

It has been in progress nearly six months, occupying the time of a large staff of experts under the personal direction of William Fox.

Every unessential action, every foot of film that did not contribute directly to intensifying interest in the stories, has been eliminated.

They meet every demand of a critical, up-to-date American audience.

The productions virtually have been made over. They are 1919 editions of popular successes.

They are new

—new to ninety per cent. of the picture patronizing public. When they were first shown attendance at motion picture theatres was only a small part of the attendance today.

Probably no one person in your city has seen all of The Great Nine.

Not one person in one thousand has seen four of the nine pictures.

Not more than ten persons in one hundred have seen one of the productions, though the total who have seen all of them may, even at that rate, have exceeded 90,000,000.

As far as the exhibitor is concerned—so far as profits are concerned—every one of THE GREAT NINE is as potential as if it had had its first release only yesterday!

A woman wrote one of these Reviews—

MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

To say that the Strand audience that greeted Anita Stewart's return to the screen December 29th at the Strand enjoyed "Virtuous Wives" would be putting the facts mildly. From the very introduction, an introduction in the way of a scene between Father Time and a baby who talks of the career before her as a sophisticated debutante might, it was well entertained and well rewarded for its collective struggle for seats.

Miss Stewart is delightful to look upon and measures up to requirements in the leading role, while Conway Tearle, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper and Edwin Arden give superlative support.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW.

A great deal of time has been spent on the production, and the result makes this apparent, for there are no jarring notes and no lapses in the excellence. We left the Strand Theatre after viewing the picture with a keen desire to see it again. Anita Stewart is a delectable morsel as Amy Forrester. Conway Tearle is splendid as the husband; Mrs. De Wolf Hopper is a vivid Irma, and Edwin Arden as Delabane gives a polished performance.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

"Virtuous Wives" is elaborately produced and extremely well acted. The story is a pungent satire on society. Anita Stewart makes Amy Forrester one of the best drawn characters in her gallery of fair women. The supporting company is a distinguished one.

NEW YORK TIMES.

Emerging from the forest of litigation over the question of who should have control of her services, Anita Stewart returned to the screen yesterday in "Virtuous Wives" at the Strand. Miss Stewart is a most attractive person, with sufficient ability to express moods and meanings intelligently. And in "Virtuous Wives" she is excellently supported by Conway Tearle, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper and Edwin Arden. Also, George Loane Tucker who directed the production, deserves credit for extraordinary workmanship.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH.

"Virtuous Wives" has a theme of aggravating appeal to feminine interest. It is an adoption of Owen Johnson's story by the same name, enacted by a cast of capable players, including Edwin Arden, Conway Tearle, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, William Boyd, Virginia Norden and others of equal strength. Miss Stewart plays the part of Amy Forrester, whose domestic troubles as the wife of Andrew Forrester, a social Bolsheviki, have provided thousands of women with word pictures of their own personal wifely problems. "Virtuous Wives" is a picture of exceptional interest, splendidly directed with obvious attention to minute detail. The photography, too, is excellent.

THE WORLD.

The quick action and variety of incidents in the story lend themselves well to the screen, and it makes a good movie. Miss Stewart's acting was excellent. Others who acted for the film were Conway Tearle, Edwin Arden, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper and William Boyd.

Many Exhibitors are extending their Runs

"THE GREAT VICTORY, WILSON OR THE KAISER? THE FALL OF THE HOHENZOLLERNS."

Screen Classics—Six Parts—Metro.

Reviewed by Agnes Smith.

Here is a picture that lives up to its title, and any one will admit that it's some title. For lack of space we will refrain from repeating it here. Why write out the name of the picture when time might be given to saying a lot of good things about it?

Of course, the war is over, but we can't help crowing. This Screen Classic Production is a big crow. It makes you happy to be an American, so that you can celebrate the victory by cheering for a good cause.

The production takes the war from an interesting angle. It makes it a struggle against two sets of principles. The principles are represented by two men—Wilson and the ex-Kaiser. We see the ex-Kaiser's first public appearance—surrounded by bowing diplomats and saluting army officers. Then we see the atmosphere into which Wilson was born—a humble and God-fearing home.

Then the picture plunges into the war and shows all the dramatic moments. The sinking of the Lusitania, the murder of Edith Cavell, the wanton disregard of international law and the atrocities in Belgium are all graphically set forth.

But you must not get the idea that the picture is not timely. It is. It brings history up to the moment of the peace celebration, of the ex-Kaiser's flight into Holland, of the sailing of President Wilson to Europe. All the prominent figures developed by the conflict are presented and most of them are creditably depicted by the actors.

Of course Wilson is the hero, and he is lauded in the sub-titles and in the action in the most glowing terms. Something tells us that Maxwell Karger is a good democrat. Be that as it may, it is the American spirit that is represented, and for purposes of screen drama it is just as well to personify it in one man. Most people will like it. The picture stands the final screen test. It is interesting.

The familiar scenes in Belgium, in Washington, in Berlin, and in France are carefully presented. Some of the submarine views are remarkably well done. There are no trench or battle scenes and only a few "shots" of troops on the march. Most of the picture has to do with the international dramas of the war.

Henry Kolker plays the role of the Kaiser and is sufficiently convincing in portraying crazy kingliness. Frederick Truesdale is Wilson and the likeness is very good. Others in an extensive cast do excellent work. We have seldom seen German officers and troops played with such vindictiveness and relish.

Because it is more than a war picture, this production should get a popular reception. The war is still the main topic of conversation and of thought. If you don't believe it, try thinking of talking for five minutes without introducing the subject.

P. S.—It may help you in advertising this picture to mention the fact that not once during the action does the Crown Prince show his vacuous face on the screen. That alone ought to draw a good-sized audience.

"The producer has excluded anything that might be repulsive. The subject should be driven home with hammer blows of reality."

"A very frank statement of fact with regard to the evils that follow unclean living. It can be seen to profit by old and young alike—its message is to all humanity."

"The subject was brought before the public when 'Damaged Goods' was put on the screen."

"They say children never listen to advice! 'The Scarlet Trail' shows to the brain through the eye that which the tongue is ashamed to tell."

(Louella O. Parsons) "'The Scarlet Trail' is a story founded on social hygiene and much like 'Damaged Goods,' though it is very much better done than the picturization of Brieux's play."

"Discloses the suffering incurred by youthful indiscretion and aims at purity among young men and women for the welfare of the coming race."

"It is a warning fashioned somewhat after 'Damaged Goods' in that it advances the dangers of contamination and is propaganda for the leading of pure lives."

"It's pertinent message—the effects of indiscretion between the sexes. Its moral lesson is driven home without the slight offensiveness. It has been produced clean."

"'The Scarlet Trail' is free from the nauseating details apt to accompany the presentation of a subject of the kind. . . . It should be beneficial in that it points a warning to youth and never by any inference, makes vice attractive."

High Quality Of Spoor-Thompson Process Wins Big Contract

A thorough study of the Spoor-Thompson Process was made by J.A. Berst, an acknowledged expert on processing, and one of the few ~~no~~ film executives recognized as having a full and comprehensive knowledge of laboratory methods.

Mr. Berst was convinced that positive prints produced by this method are of a higher quality and have a greater artistic value than is possible under any other system.

As president of the United Picture  Theaters of America, Inc., Mr. Berst  backed his convictions with a long term contract to make all his corporation's positive prints, amounting to several hundred thousand feet a week, by this Method.

That Advertising Question

IT would seem that the article we recently published by John H. Kunsky on the sort of national advertising which helps the exhibitor and the sort which does not, struck a sore spot on the anatomy of many exhibitors.

We didn't think Mr. Burleson's second class mails had carried that issue of the NEWS more than a few miles before our mails sizzled with a letter from L. H. Grandjean, of the Saenger Amusement Corporation, which backed Brother Kunsky up to the limit and then went a bit further.

And this week! "Go to it, Bill!" writes Herbert Weil, of Port Huron, Mich., who then goes on to explode some red hot opinions of his own.

He says some interesting things. For example: That Kunsky's advertising of a picture in Detroit does him more good than all the two million circulation magazine splashes.

To which he adds, "When Kunsky comes out big on a picture I get aboard quick and profit by the surplus demand he creates."

All in all, we think we have struck a subject on which many exhibitors have decided views. We expect to hear them. Come on and shoot!

* * * * *

And Bill is "Going to It"

ON top of these proofs that the question of producer advertising to help the exhibitor is a live subject, comes word from William A. Johnston, president and editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The boss has been away for two months, trailing the genus exhibitor to his lair, meeting him face to face, hearing his growls, kicks—and boosts.

He's coming back loaded to the hilt with some of the most valuable reading matter you will find in a trade paper in the coming year.

And on the Kunsky and Saenger articles he says: "Those stories have touched one of the most pertinent questions of the moment. Everywhere I go I find exhibitors discussing it. Their views will make corking reading."

So we hereby announce that, starting next week, William A. Johnston will "go to it" on the subject of manufacturer advertising to the fans.

And you know what it means when W. A. J. "goes to it." There isn't a coming issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that you can miss without losing some of the valuable "field stuff" gathered in the course of his two months on the firing line.

Ohio Should Be Aided

WHILE we are speaking on the subject of manufacturers aid to exhibitors we are reminded of a news story in this week's issue. It doesn't concern help in the exploitation of pictures but it is linked with "manufacturer aid."

Ohio's exhibitors have for a year been fighting a slow and losing battle with advocates of Sunday closing. One by one, towns have been grasped in the clutch of the reformers, and one day a week has been taken off the exchanges' rental books, and the best day in the week off the exhibitor's calendar.

The situation is becoming critical. Over a hundred towns are now affected and a few more victories for the cranks will leave things at a serious pass.

The Ohio Screen League was organized by the theatre men solely for the purpose of fighting for open Sunday legislation. It was prepared to do its own share of the financing, but felt assured of the support of the National Association.

Now, we understand, that support has been withdrawn. The exhibitors are to be left to fight their own battle. They are meeting the situation gamely and preparing to do so.

But the whole proposition is wrong—ridiculous and suicidal.

It is important to one individual exhibitor if his town authorities order him closed on Sunday—but it is vital to every producer if a hundred towns are closed on Sunday. The exhibitor's struggle is over when his local fight is lost.

The producer's worries only begin when a hundred towns are closed—for a hundred will beget another hundred, and two hundred a State.

And then we'll howl and squeal and wail "Let's do something."

The exhibitors of Ohio—and other States—must be helped in their Sunday battles. Not alone for the sake of helping the exhibitor, but for the manufacturer's own need.

There isn't a distributor in the business in a position to withstand the cutting of a few more rental dates from his list by arbitrary Sunday closing.

The National Association has a sad habit of ceasing to function for long and weary periods and then commencing to function in a panic-stricken helter-skelter manner.

It's got so that we take it for granted, with a complacent, "who cares" smugness.

Would we greet with equal satisfaction a State-wide Sunday closing in Ohio?

That Question of "Pooling"

QUITE a few of the producers we met during the week used our editorial note in the last issue on the subject of exhibitor pools as the subject of conversation.

It would seem that the cities controlled by one organization and the sections where exhibitors have "unwritten agreements" constitute a real threat to distributors.

One producer told us of an organization which had this season signed up for everything worth having, then when its competition had made other arrangements cancelled half the contracts.

This particular organization is accused of being one of the most ruthless users of its strength in controlling its territory.

But the incident referred to would seem to point more to the necessity of a form of motion picture contract that would really bind than to the evils of "pooling."

And this moral is double-edged—for there are also distributors whose hands are not clean of contract abuse.

* * * * *

Forcing Things to a Fight

THE manufacturers discovered during the recent influenza epidemic that in times of emergency they could really get together and act in concert.

There is every prospect then that in sections where exhibitors are especially rough-shod in their methods of taking advantage of a lack of competition they are only forcing things to the point of a fight. The case we have referred to above is only one of a number that are sore spots with many producers—so it wouldn't be a far stretch of the imagination to find these gentlemen meeting exhibitor "pools" with producer "pools."

Which ought to bring on a merry war in some parts of the well-known U. S.

Then supposing it were followed in different localities by an exhibitor pool against any organization that showed flagrant disregard of the obligations of its contract!

Perhaps the result would be the devising of a motion picture contract that "contracted."

* * * * *

The Influenza Aftermath

UP in Canada some sections are finding that the influenza aftermath means a new set of rules regarding the hours for theatre opening and closing.

Theatres in Edmonton formerly on an "11 toll continuous" policy will in the future run from 1 P. M. till 5 P. M. and then 6 P. M. till 11 P. M.

The idea being that the old idea gave the exhibitors no opportunity to properly air and ventilate their theatres.

Out in Indiana there are towns and cities which find that the influenza aftermath means renewed agitation on the part of the Sunday closing cranks. It was so easy to order the theatres closed during the epidemic period that the reformers are emboldened.

What is the influenza aftermath in your town?

Look out for it.

Be sure that there is no lingering suspicion regarding the sanitary condition of your house; no continuance of the idea that the picture theatre is something to be closed at the first sign of emergency.

Subtle missionary work—in your advertising, your house atmosphere, your own manner—will do the trick.

Don't neglect it.

Dealing in Personalities

"He Leads the Way to Money"

WE suppose we shouldn't run this photo without a companion one of A. H. Sawyer.

For Sawyer and Lubin have become as inseparable in film language as the Gold Dust Twins in the household.

But this column only allows one photograph—so just imagine, every time we say "Herbert Lubin" that we mean "Lubin and Sawyer," and every time we say A. H. Sawyer that we mentally add "and Lubin."

When the Canadian market looked its darkest on the books of the distributors we used to hear on Times Square, "But there's one outfit up there who can make money for your pictures—Lubin-Sawyer."

When the state rights market looked its worst about a year ago Sawyer and Lubin came along with General Enterprises and showed that there was money there if you knew how to go at it.

So now we are watching S-L Pictures to see if Sawyer and Lubin can once more show the way to where the money lies.

A Few Odds and Ends

J. D. WILLIAMS is reported as an early visitor to the City of Angels.

GILBERT HAMILTON—pioneer of pioneers—arrived in New York on Thursday. Brought with him two productions and ambitious plans for the starring of Neal Hart.

GRANT CARPENTER, who did good work for the industry on the "work or fight" regulations, dropped into New York on Monday. Then we discovered that the Californian had been in Washington for these many months. Mystery.

The serious illness of his wife caused John Flinn, of Famous Players-Lasky to leave Los Angeles for New York on Thursday only a few hours after his arrival there.

Got more details about the MacManus Corporation. Correct address is 6 West 47th street. Offices the classiest suite we have seen in five years of fillum lay-outs. Business? Dunno, but two independent producers telephoned the day we were visiting.

"We
as a Regular Fellow"

BENNY SCHULBERG happened to be in the office the day the news of the new Abrams-Schulberg organization broke.

Says Fred Beecroft to Benny Schulberg: "Benny, I don't know of any one in the game who could start 'on his own' with more good wishes than you will have."

Says Benny to Fred: "That's nice." And he almost blushed.

Say we to all of you: "That's deserved."

We could give you a multitude of "reasons why" but we'll pick one that may seem insignificant but which speaks a volume in this fillum life—Benny Schulberg never got so big that he couldn't be seen when you called.

Back to the Twenty-sixth street days when Benny was combining scenarios and publicity we remember calling on him. And on through the days of his rise in the Zukor organization. And always he has been the same accessible, "regular fellow," Benny.

Here's to him!"

Real Red Meat

"Go To It, Bill!"

So Says a Michigan Exhibitor of Our Articles on Advertising

[EDITOR'S NOTE—Out in Port Huron, Michigan, Herbert L. Weil is known more sonorously as "Herbert L. Weil, Theatrical Enterprises." And the three theatres he controls, the Majestic, Maxine and Family, have a combined seating capacity of 2,800. That's enough to show you that when Herbert L. Weil talks blunt, hard facts—he says something worth reading.]

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston, Pres. & Editor,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Bill:

Shake!

I have long been tempted to write you and express my sentiments pro and con about certain picture propaganda which has been advocated, discussed, cussed and epitomized in your highly valuable publication.

Out in the wilds of Michigan you know we like to see a publication which has some backbone and when one starts something why one should finish it. That's what we like about the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and we have long been tempted to write and express our appreciation of your policies and the highly efficient manner in which they are executed.

For instance, we read every line about what our fellow exhibitor, John H. Kunsky of Detroit, said about the apparent waste in the industry today, and the pursuant shameful manner in which money is spent by some distributors in national exploitation of their products.

And mind you the more that we dissected that article, tore it to bits and disseminated every paragraph, the more convinced were we that Mr. Kunsky was right with a capital "R."

It is the growing tendency of some distributors to advertise themselves above their stars. No man in the world is greater than the theatre which he operates. His patrons do not come to his theatre to see him, although his presence albeit gives them a feeling of welcome when he is seen about the place with a smile for all and a glad hand wherever one can be given.

It's all right, we admit, for the Gillette Safety Razor folk to advertise the Gillette with all the power at their command. However, it does not make an iota of difference what Mr. Gillette is doing. And perhaps, not ninety-nine out of one hundred people can tell you where the razor is manufactured. However, when one thinks of a safety razor one just naturally lets his mind revert to the name Gillette.

The same holds true of Pear's soap and perhaps a hundred other products which have had a national campaign of advertising in back of them.

So much for soap and razors, and now for pictures.

It has always been my contention that if the amount of money now being expended for advertising by certain producers in some of our national magazines were apportioned among the newspapers throughout the United States in cities where their stars were shown, that much greater results would ensue. I seriously doubt whether an eight-thousand-dollar page advertisement in one of our two-million circulation magazines does one penny's worth of good as far as direct results to the exhibitor are concerned.

That's why there is even greater need of further cooperation between the producer and exhibitor, especially now when the industry is in its comparative infancy.

Take Port Huron for a concrete example. Here is a perfectly busy and prosperous little city of some 25,000 inhabitants, and yours truly has the town sewed up like Marshal Foch had Hindenburg on the hip. I am spending with one concern at least $25,000.00 a year for service. In fact, I am what the stereotyped press agent would term a one hundred per cent exhibitor.

Yet at the same time this particular producing company will spend millions of dollars annually to advertise its score or more units while not one penny comes this way to bring the good folk to my theatres.

If some plan were adopted whereby a certain sum would be spent annually in the locality where these particular stars were shown, it would make a much greater hit with the exhibitor. In other words, if my investment with this particular concern amounts to $25,000 annually, then I feel that I am entitled to more local cooperation than a press book, slide, and music cue.

Our daily newspaper here has a circulation of 13,000 each day. I burn up space like a mail express burns up anthracite, but I'll bet a cooky to a dollar that it isn't any alluring announcement in a magazine which may circulate freely in the State that brings the motion picture populace into my theatres.

No, siree! It isn't in the book no more than you can get an elephant into a chicken coop.

Mr. Kunsky points out in his article that the remainder of the theatres in Michigan are guided more or less by what goes on in Detroit as respects the advertising given certain pictures and certain stars. Port Huron is in such close proximity to Detroit that this in a measure is true. If Mr. Kunsky elects to put a certain star into his beautiful Madison theatre, then I lose no time in getting right on to his trail and book that same star for appearance here within a week or two after, and in this way I benefit from the money which he has spent to exploit his program for that particular week. But it's not any million dollar magazine bait that brings the shekels into my coffers.

Well, we could harp about this subject all day, Bill, and burn up a lot of otherwise valuable space (you must forgive us, we were once a newspaper man), but we'll live in the hope that some of these producers will see the error of their ways and get into direct touch with the small town exhibitor. Let him share in some of the fortunes which are being grossly misspent to advertise their product.

The best suggestion in this connection would be a get-together love feast of some producers and certain exhibitors from various portions of the country, and out of this something intelligent might be sprung which would do more real good than a thousand communications of this kind. Let this be held in New York, as we all like to see the bright lights at least twice a year.

More power to you, Bill, and your perfectly good magazine. I wouldn't do without reading it each week for a million, and my sincere good wishes are also extended to your able editorial staff.

Yours for the success of the Fourth Estate, and the motion picture industry!

HERBERT L. WEIL.

Several New Theatres Are Projected

INDIANA

Chicago and local capital has acquired a downtown site in South Bend and will erect a new theatre to be known as the Blackstone, with a seating capacity of 2,600, according to J. Handelsman of the W. W. Kimball Company and Charles E. Potts of the Inland Steel Mills of Indiana Harbor.

J. W. Johnson announced that he would erect a new theatre on North Main street in Kokomo with a large seating capacity and thoroughly modern, to be completed by August 15.

NEW YORK

At Fort Plain the former Diefendorf building will be razed and the site will be occupied by a motion picture theatre, according to George R. Chriss and Fred Weakley.

On the corner of Flatbush and Rogers avenues, Brooklyn, a new theatre will be erected by Jules Realty Company, with a seating capacity of 2,100.

The Zenith Amusement Company will erect a three story theatre on the Rockaway boulevard near Namecke avenue, on Long Island, at an estimated cost of $100,000.

Theatres—Sends Out Letters Broadcast

WHATEVER may be the fate of the fiction picture with a warlike theme, official records of actual facts, as exemplified in the releases of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, are said to be in greater demand than ever.

According to reports at hand, the Community Section of the Division of Films is daily proving its value as an agent in reaching a large class who seldom or never go to picture houses, but who, when officially notified of the showing of a Government film welcome the opportunity of seeing it.

The Community Section, though at the request of exhibitors addresses personal letters to many individuals, and concerns itself mainly with individuals as representative of and influential with large organizations. These include principals of schools, clergymen, presidents of clubs, and heads of industrial concerns with large bodies of employees. In New York and other large cities the houses showing "America's Answer" have won splendid support from the public schools, due to the letters sent to principals by the Community Section in advance of the showings in their respective neighborhoods. These serve as an introduction for the exhibitor when he personally visits the schools. Several houses in New York have showed the picture to thousands of children each.

Inquiries are constantly reaching the Division of Films from school heads and clergymen as to where the Government pictures of which they have seen newspaper and magazine announcement are being shown. Such persons are in every case referred to their local theatres and the suggestion made that the manager be asked to show the pictures. Many actual bookings have resulted from this.

Exhibitors who have run "America's Answer" recently or who are planning to run it in the near future will be interested to learn that advertising matter on "Under Four Flags" has gone to every organization or individual circularized on showings of "America's Answer" since December 1. Thus, while reminiscent interest in the picture is still lively, expectation is aroused concerning the new picture. The letters that will follow, as actual bookings of "Under Four Flags" are announced, drive home the point that the screen will picture perhaps for the last time a phase of history that, if the faith and concerted effort of mankind can avail, will never be repeated.

Publicity's worth is, in the last analysis, measured by the box office. The splendid success attained thus far by the pre-release showings of "Under Four Flags," and the fact that such theatres as the Rivoli and Plaza in New York, and the Metropolitan in Washington, is testimony to what intelligent exploitation on the part of the exhibitor backed by Government invitation can do to attract a class of patronage that has long held aloof, but that is rapidly learning that motion pictures are worthy of respect and continued support.

Simplex Describes New Shutter

Expert from Precision Machine Company Explains Various Phases of Important Projection Machine Adjunct

UPON learning that a newly invented shutter had been installed in Simplex projectors, MOTION PICTURE NEWS secured an interview with a Simplex expert anent the evolution of the shutter.

"One point of the projection machine that has always received considerable attention from the projectionist is the shutter," he stated. "Many forms of shutters have been tried out since the inception of the cinematograph. In the early days this blade was placed inside the machine, so that it operated between the film and the lens.

"The disadvantages, however, of the inside shutter became apparent and efforts were made to eliminate the troubles thus caused.

"From the very beginning the designers of the Simplex projector have always kept before them the necessity of combining perfect optical with perfect mechanical principles. At a time when many other machines were using the inside shutters, Messrs. Porter and Cannock, the designers of the Simplex, were using the outside shutter on their first machine, nineteen years ago at the old Eden Musee in New York City.

"The new 'Extra-lite' gives added screen illumination, this being accomplished by the fact that none of the blades of the 'Extra-lite' are solid or opaque, thereby cutting off light by passing; but the cut-off blades are so designed that neither the light nor the picture itself is at any time cut off by the shutter blades.

"It is the purpose of the Precision Machine Company to equip their machines in future with the 'Extra-lite.'

"This new shutter has been so designed that it is of universal use and can be attached to any projector, new or old, using the outside shutter construction. We will later take this new shutter up from the scientific point of view and will give light measurements, etc."

This treatment will be outlined in the Projection Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Inter-Ocean Gives Dinner to Employees

PACK UP YOUR FILMS IN YOUR

Or,

DON'T TALK BUSINESS TONIGHT.
By Quirk and Adler.

Stolen from "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag."

The theft suggested by Eugene Heavins !

On December 24 the employees of Inter-Ocean presented Mr. Cromelin with a gold watch.

Alberta Operators Get Classification

Starting with January 1 the operators of the Province of Alberta were classified according to experience and ability under the direction of Howard Douglas, chief film censor for Alberta. Arrangements were made for examinations and the operators are to be placed in one of three classes, according to their showing. Operators in small centres will be restricted to the third class only, it is understood, and if they move to a larger town or city they will be required to undergo another examination.

Mr. Douglas announced that the aim of the board of censors is to improve projection in Alberta.

Ohio Wants Liberty on the Sabbath

Towns in Indiana Also Feel Pressure of Radicals Who Would Like to See Sunday Pictureless—Exhibitors Expected to Rally Round the Flag

THE agitation against Sunday motion pictures in Ohio seems to have oozed down through Cincinnati and across the Suspension Bridge into an edge of Kentucky and along the river into Indiana. According to latest reports, both Ohio and Indiana exhibitors are awakening to the fact that a serious menace confronts them in the shape of propaganda against Sunday shows. One correspondent declares this propaganda is being carried on by radicals who have had their attention drawn from the liquor question.

Feeling that the "booze babble" has reached a climax and is sliding down to where it needs nothing more than a parting kick, the agitators are jumping onto Sunday pictures with both feet. And just as lively, the exhibitors intend to protect their interests, according to reports.

Rally Round the Flag

Every motion picture theatre in Ohio is expected to do its bit toward helping along the good work of legalizing the Sunday picture show in the state. There have been one hundred towns in Ohio, during the past year, which have had to close on Sunday, because legally, the Sunday picture has no standing. These towns have been closing gradually, and the fact of their closing did not attract much attention, until those who were interested in obtaining favorable legislation began the task of collecting the evidence necessary to arouse the exhibitors to definite action. It was early last June that a general meeting of exhibitors from all sections of the state was called in Columbus. At that meeting the Ohio Screen League was formed. This league has no other duties than to act in connection with the Sunday movement. Henry H. Lustig, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, was appointed president, and Fred Desberg, also of Cleveland, was appointed secretary.

For the past four months these two officers have been active in arousing the exhibitors of Ohio to the dangers that beset them, by failing to provide proper legislation in favor of the Sunday show. It was the expectation of the Ohio Screen League to have the moral and financial support of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, in the conduct of the campaign, but recent events have occurred which make it necessary for Ohio to paddle its own canoe into safe waters.

At the last meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Mr. Desberg made an announcement of what has already been accomplished, and what is further expected of the exhibitors in the territory affected by this legislation. "In lieu of the fact," Mr. Desberg told them, "that the support of the national association is withdrawn, it will be necessary for Ohio to raise all the funds required to bring this campaign to a successful issue. We need money to do this. And in order to get money, every theatre in the State is to be taxed pro rata, according to the number of seats in his house. Downtown houses will pay twenty cents a seat, and suburban houses will pay ten cents a seat. One-fourth of this is payable upon the signing of the subscription, one-fourth on the first of January, and the remainder of the sum due to be paid by the first of February.

TRY US OUT!

If You Have Served Your Country Let Us Serve You

PERMIT us to repeat what we said in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, and to express gratification because the khaki-clad boys are beginning to take advantage of our offer:

The classified columns of Motion Picture News are open free of charge to service men now returning to civilian life and seeking to resume their activities in film ranks.

Operators, musicians, studio employees, men in all branches of film work who have been in the service of their country may avail themselves of this opportunity to run "Situation Wanted" advertisements without cost.

In addition to these free ads all the facilities of Motion Picture News are "At the Service of the Service Men." Call on us.

Small Sums Wanted

"This is a very small sum," Mr. Desberg went on to explain, "in comparison to the seriousness of the menace that confronts the industry at the present time. Do you realize that the fear of closing on Sunday hangs like a Damascus blade over our heads continually? Whenever we, as an industry, take exception to some civic ordinance, we have not the power to voice our objections. Why? Because the first thing that will be told us is to accede to all demands or we will be closed up on Sunday. I don't know how you feel about it, but at the Mall and Alhambra theatres, in which I am heavily interested, we do 30 per cent. of our business on Sunday. We can't afford to be closed on that day. One Sunday's receipts will re-coup every exhibitor for the amount of the tax he is asked to put into this campaign fund.

"There's another way of looking at this proposition," Desberg continued. "Some exhibitors are prone to say, 'what's the use of stirring up something when there's no attempt to close us up now?' That's all very well, but you never know when someone will come along and close you up. It's in their power to do so, just as long as the Sunday movie is illegal in Ohio. This tax which we are asking you to pay now, you should look at as an insurance payment. You pay it to procure protection. When you pay fire insurance you do so to protect yourself in case of fire, not because you expect to have a fire in your house. You pay this amount, not because you look for interference but to prevent anyone from interfering at any future time."

The State of Ohio has been divided into districts, and representatives have been appointed to see every exhibitor in each district, to see that he is doing his bit, and contributing his share toward relieving the industry of the greatest menace that confronts it today.

Indiana Uses Influenza Scare

Radicals in Indiana, now that their attention has been drawn from the liquor question, are attacking the moving picture houses on several scores and asking legislation to curtail the programs of the theatre houses. Through the northern part of the State is this most evident, where a certain class of people are loudly clamoring for a Sunday closing act and are using the influenza epidemic as a club.

Returns from the theatres in this section of the country during the past two months have been meagre and in most cases below operating expenses. Many managers have been forced out of business when the bans were placed on their industry for the second time in five weeks. Many have been running on the ragged edge of the ledger account and could not afford a forced suspension of business.

This new cloud on the horizon has taken the heart out of many of the smaller theatre owners who have counted on their Saturday and Sunday business to even up the week. Film men declare that the industry cannot stand such a blow at any time, but coming on the heels of poor business it is a calamity.

The effect of the law would be simply this: all moving picture theatres throughout the northern part of the State, if not the entire State, would be forced to close their houses on Sunday. They would not be allowed to run either an afternoon matinee nor an evening performance.

Abrams and Schulberg Leave for Coast

Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg, whose plan to establish their own organization was recently announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, left New York last week for California to adopt the first physical steps toward that end. It was at first planned for Mr. Schulberg to remain in New York while Mr. Abrams was in California, but this course was changed due to exceptionally rapid telegraphic progress of the preliminary measures which they have already undertaken. They will remain in California for about three weeks, returning to New York, when it is expected that they will make a definite announcement.

Famous Players Cheers the Fleet

Makes "Gobs" Happy by Presenting Big Stars in Latest Productions—
Walter Greene Originates
the Idea

WALTER E. GREENE, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, prepared the biggest single "booking" for one evening when he arranged a "show" of 161 reels of film for the "gobs" aboard the battleships in the Hudson River who were unable to come ashore on New Year's Eve. Each of the twenty-three ships in the Hudson River carrying projection machines and facilities for showing motion pictures was given a complete screen entertainment, including a five or six reel feature production and a two-reel comedy. On each ship the show was first given in the officers' salon and then relayed to the gun deck, where it was presented to the men.

The idea of giving the entire fleet a motion picture show on New Year's Eve, especially to "gobs" who had to stay on board, was originated by Mr. Greene, who offered to supply the films to the fleet free of charge so as to make the boys forget about the good time their more lucky mates were having ashore. Arrangements for the "big show" were made by Mr. Greene himself, who called upon Lieut. Horace D. Clark, on board the flagship Pennsylvania, the officer in charge of the entertainment of the fleet while it is here. Lieut. Clark accepted the offer with thanks and expressed enthusiasm at the opportunity of seeing American stars in American pictures, their motion picture entertainment on board ship for the past six months having consisted of foreign-made films.

Only the latest Paramount and Arcraft pictures were booked for the New Year's Eve show on the Hudson River, presenting the work of the following stars and producers: Douglas Fairbanks, Thomas H. Ince, William S. Hart, D. W. Griffith, "Fatty" Arbuckle and Mack Sennett. The battleships that were supplied with the pictures are: Flagship Pennsylvania, Missouri, Wisconsin, Kearsarge, Maine, Illinois, Alabama, Indiana, Iowa, Wyoming, Arkansas, Texas, New York, Utah, Nevada, Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, Mississippi, Florida, Solace, Vestal and Bridge.

Woodin Plans a New Towanda Theatre

Manager William L. Woodin, of the Keystone Opera House, in Towanda, Pa., has announced his intention of building next summer a $30,000 motion picture theatre in that city.

Manager Woodin is known as "the little Rothapfel of Pennsylvania."

Camera Follows President

From the time that President Wilson reached Europe to the moment of his return he will be followed wherever he goes by "movie" men.

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, is now in Europe completing arrangements for this huge task of filming every detail of the Peace Conference.

STARTING RIGHT

Happy New Year Made Happier by "Those Kind Words"

HAPPY NEW YEAR wishes rained down upon us in bigger quantities this year than ever before—and we are sure the quality meant more also than usual.

And just to help us start the New Year right, H. Evans, South Wales manager of Butcher's Film Service, Ltd., Cardiff, South Wales, sent the following letter:

"All good wishes to Motion Picture News. It is SOME book, and something is missing when it does not turn up."

A part of the letter was given over to the studio directory.

Sickness Handicaps Universal City

Rumor had it just before the New Year was ushered in, that Universal had ceased production activity on the Coast. In part, this is true, as the influenza has attacked the Coast colony with all its old vigor and as a result some of Universal stars, Director MacGowan, practically the entire accounting staff and many of the scenario department of Universal are disabled by the epidemic. This information came from the New York office of Universal, R. H. Cochrane speaking for the company when asked to verify the rumor.

Mr. Cochrane said that the epidemic which is most severe on the Coast at this time, had impeded production activity at Universal City, but that production had by no means ceased. Some of the companies, including the Harry Carey company, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran's comedy company, had ceased production owing to the illness of the stars. He said that Mr. Carey would resume work the first week in January and the Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran company as soon as the stars' conditions would permit. Director MacGowan in charge of the Universal serial, "Lure of the Circus," is ill with the influenza, but Mr. Cochrane said that the work would go on under the direction of another.

Destroyed by Fire

Manager James Moxley of the Regent theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, received a wire on December 27 that the print of "Under the Greenwood Tree," which was due to be shown at the Regent on December 30 and 31 and January 1, had been destroyed by fire at Toronto. "Woman's Weapon" was substituted for the destroyed picture until a new print of the latter could be obtained.

Charles Manfre, former Fox manager at Omaha, killed in action in France

Fox Exchange Man Meets Death in France

Believed to have been the only American film exchange manager to meet death in the service of his country, Charles Manfre, former Fox Film Corporation exchange manager at Omaha, was killed in action October 26, according to official notification from the War Department, received this week by relatives in Kansas City. No details regarding the circumstances of his death have been received.

Mr. Manfre, who was one of the youngest exchange managers in the business, enlisted shortly after America's entrance into the war, despite the fact that he was the main support of an invalid grandmother, two young brothers and a sister. After the usual period in cantonment in this country he was sent to France as a member of the 89th Division. Letters received from him while he was in the American training area on the Western Front expressed eagerness to get into action and do his share toward bringing an end to the misery which had held the world in its grip for years. That a bullet found him a few days before that misery was ended by the armistice is an especially poignant feature of his death.

As soon as William Fox learned that Mr. Manfre had been killed he wired to his representatives in Omaha and Kansas City to make all arrangements necessary for the immediate comfort of Mr. Manfre's dependents. At the same time he sent a letter expressing his sympathy enclosing a substantial check for the family.

Pathe Booker Reported Saved from Ship

Louis Samuelson, at one time a booker in the Seattle branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., thought to have been lost in the burning of the steamship Dumar in mid-Pacific, after a lapse of several days has been reported among the survivors. He was in a third boatload, containing fourteen men, which landed near Manila.

"Mr. Samuelson shipped on the steamer Dumar, which left San Francisco with a load of dynamite and gasoline," wrote L. O. Lukan, manager of the Seattle branch, in telling the story to the home office. "Somewhere in mid-ocean between the Island of Guam and the Philippine Islands the ship was hit by a typhoon and struck by lightning.

Pyle Enthuses Over the New Year

Charles C. Pyle, general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, returned to Chicago recently from the factory at Oshkosh, Wis., very much enthused over the prospects for the coming year. Among other things Mr. Pyle stated that the sales of the Bartola for 1918 surpassed the business that had been anticipated.

Mr. Pyle has information that there will be more new theatres during the coming year than have been constructed within the three years past. He has just had an interview with C. Howard Crane, the famous Detroit architect, who is now working on twenty-one plans for theatres in the United States. Mr. Crane has an added force and is working night and day to keep up with the work, and in anticipation of this building the Bartola Musical Instrument Company have decided to extend their selling force and will add six high class traveling representatives.

Mr. Pyle is now working out an entirely new elaborate catalogue which will be something different than any company has ever used before and will be ready to mail by the middle of January.

Ottawa Wants a Film Exchange

The suggestion has been made by an Ottawa newspaper that a film exchange be established in the Canadian capital, particularly in view of the unfortunate delays in the arrival of film shipments from Montreal and Toronto. Several times recently boxes of reels did not reach Ottawa exhibitors until long after shows were scheduled to start on either Mondays or Thursdays and the theatres have lost considerable money, not to say anything about dissatisfaction among patrons.

Ottawa has almost twenty theatres, while there are many houses in centres of the Ottawa Valley district, but the city is only some 120 miles from Montreal, where all Canadian film exchanges have offices.

Keep the "Smokes" Going Across to Them

S. L. Harris, manager of the Olympic theatre, Portsmouth, Va., who has been a regular remitter to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," has just sent another check for $5.70 collected at his theatre. This continued effort, even though the armistice has been declared, will be appreciated by the boys over there. There are over a million of them, and it looks as if they would be there for some time, and they want a smoke just as much as they did during the actual fighting.

Business Picking Up!

The Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., has found business so heavy that it has had to put another traveling representative in the field. H. A. Matthews has been appointed to cover western Kentucky. Nathan Schaffner is in the field for eastern Kentucky and George Starkey, Jr., for Tennessee.

INFLUENZA FADES WITH OLD YEAR

Improvement Noted in All Sections of the Country Where Epidemic Had Left Mark

IF Kid New Year were an exhibitor, there is little doubt that the thing at which he rejoiced most upon coming into the midst of a happy world on January 1 was the fact that the influenza epidemic was reported as "going out with the old year."

From all sections the situation has been reported as more favorable.

In Spokane, Wash., where the health officials had denied a petition asking the lifting of the ban on public gatherings, the motion picture theatres were permitted to run full capacity on New Year's Day. This followed a request that theatres use only alternate rows for audiences. The influenza is reported at low ebb in Spokane and surrounding territory, and no further restrictions are expected.

An account from San Francisco said in part that the influenza situation in the state showed an improvement and all danger of the closing of the San Francisco motion picture theatres was passed. Even the masks which have been much in evidence were voted abandoned. Sacramento also did away with masks.

There are indications that the chief outcome of the recent epidemic in Canada will be the shortening of the hours during which motion pictures can be shown. It is said most Canadian exhibitors welcome this move.

John Keiley Is a Father

John "Jack" Keiley, film editor with B. A. Rolfe Productions, which made the Houdini serial "The Master Mystery," was receiving congratulations last week upon the arrival of a son at his home.

The youngster was named Harold George, after Mr. Keiley's two brothers, who are in France with the American Expeditionary Forces. Harold Keiley is with Company A, 305th Artillery, while George is with the 52d Pioneers.

Nathan Goes West

Al. Nathan announced this week that he is resigning from the management of the Symphony theatre. Mr. Nathan will leave for Indianapolis to assume a similar capacity is one of the theatres there. No one has been appointed to succeed Mr. Nathan at the Symphony as yet, it is said.

Special Show for Canadian Employees

The Dominion theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, conducted a special midnight show on New Year's Eve as a benefit for all employees of the theatre for loss of wages during the recent epidemic. The Ottawa theatres were closed for practically six weeks. The sale of tickets was undertaken by the employees and the price was 50 cents per ticket. The theatre was crowded for the event. A number of special features were presented, while numerous vaudeville acts offered their services for the occasion. Manager W. J. Hanitch donated the use of the theatre. The total proceeds went to the employees.

Pathe Sends Haskett to Boston Office

H. D. Haskett, assistant manager of the Cleveland Pathe Exchange, has been transferred to the Boston office of the Pathe Film Corporation. Haskett's position in the Cleveland office has been filled by Paul Tessier, who has recently returned to town after being discharged from military service. Tessier says it feels like home to be back with Pathe, as he was associated with that concern for several years prior to his joining the army, first as assistant manager in Cleveland and later as manager for the Pathe Exchange in Albany.

Ohio Censor Board Member Reappointed Again

Maude Murray Miller, Columbus, chairman of the Ohio Board of Censors, has been reappointed a member of that board for three years by the Industrial Commission with the approval and consent of Governor James M. Cox.

When the censorship bill became a law in May, 1913, Mrs. Miller was the first member appointed by Governor Cox on that board. She served through that administration and through the administration of Governor Willis.

Controversy Develops Over C. K. Y. Features

RUMORS of a coming battle over the distribution of future Clara Kimball Young productions took definite shape on Friday with the insertion by both sides of advertisements in the trade publications. The following statements were then issued:

The C. K. Y. Co. says:

"In respect to the statements of differences between Clara Kimball Young and the C. K. Y. Film Corporation, which has been producing Miss Young's pictures since July, 1917, and particularly in regard to the announcement from Harry I. Garson that the last picture which Miss Young will make for C. K. Y. Film Corporation is 'Cheating Cheaters,' the sensational comedy drama announced for release by Select Pictures Corporation, and only recently completed at Los Angeles, C. K. Y. Film Corporation authorized the following statement:

"In conjunction with Select Pictures Corporation, which has by contract the exclusive right of distribution of all of our pictures, we have today inserted in all of the trade papers a public announcement warning against any interference with our contractual rights and interests under the contract between Clara Kimball Young and ourselves, by which we obtained Miss Young's exclusive personal services for a period of years ending August 31, 1921. The insertion of this advertisement was made necessary by statements popularly attributed to Mr. Harry I. Garson, who has therefore served as Miss Young's personal representative, pursuant to a clause in her contract with us, which gave her the right to nominate such a representative. We have no knowledge as to whether Mr. Garson was really authorized by her to make the statements attributed to him, and in truth are inclined to believe that Miss Young really intends to live up to the very letter of the entire spirit of her agreement with us. In view, however, of the fact that a notice reached us signed 'Clara Kimball Young, by Harry I. Garson,' supporting the other statements popularly attributed to him, to the effect that Miss Young was to leave our employ, we conceived that in fairness to the other producers and distributors of the motion picture industry, an announcement of the facts was in order.

"We believe that the time has come in the motion picture industry when every respect will be shown not only by producers and distributors, but by exhibitors as well, to existing contractual relations between producing organizations and their stars, and accordingly, anticipate no difficulty in the present situation. We believe we can safely forecast the continuance by Miss Young of her work in our studios, and the continuance of our ability to deliver her pictures for distribution to Select Pictures Corporation until the contract between Miss Young and ourselves expires, on the 31st day of August, 1921."

The Other Side:

W. G. Rudolph, New York representative for Harry Garson and Clara Kimball Young, made this announcement: "The statement sent by Clara Kimball Young to the C. K. Y. Corporation and published in your advertising columns is flat and final.

"The official notice served by Miss Young's attorney on the C. K. Y. Corporation states her case plainly and clearly. We are prepared for a fight to the finish on those grounds. The attorney's letter follows:

"C. K. Y. Film Corporation,
"485 Fifth Avenue,
"New York City, N. Y.

"Gentlemen:
"I hereby give you notice that I have elected to and do now hereby rescind and cancel the certain contract entered into between us under date of July 12, 1917, whereby you engaged and employed me to render exclusive services in the portrayal in motion picture productions of leading roles or characterizations for the period beginning July 16, 1917, and ending August 21, 1921.

"My reason for taking this action is because you have wilfully committed vital and flagrant breaches of the terms of this contract by your refusal, upon demand, to pay to me the several sums of money, now aggregating in excess of at least the sum of $25,000, to which I am rightfully entitled and which are now and for some time past have been due and payable to me, under the terms and provisions of our agreement, for services performed by me thereunder for and on your behalf.

"The false construction and interpretation which you have sought by your letter of November 18, 1918, to place upon this contract clearly evinces an intention on your part to no longer be bound by the plain terms of the written agreement entered into between us on July 12, 1917.

"Your action at this time in demanding that I accept as binding upon myself this false interpretation of our contract which neither of the parties thereto had in contemplation at the date of its execution, nor at any other time during the period of more than a year's operation thereunder, amounts on your part to a repudiation of our written agreement and also to an attempt to coerce me into submitting to a contract whose terms have never been assented to by me and whose provisions are inequitable and unfair.

"I, therefore, give you notice of the termination of all contract relations between us and demand that an accounting be forthwith had of all moneys to which I am now or may hereafter be entitled to receive by reason thereof.

Yours truly,

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.

By Harry I. Garson,
Her Attorney in fact.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG,

By Harry I. Garson,
Her Personal Representative under provisions of Paragraph Sixteen of Contract dated July 12, 1918."

F. W. Thring of Australia Arrives in Los Angeles

F. W. Thring, representing J. C. Williamson, Ltd., arrived in Los Angeles and spent several days there with Samuel Goldwyn negotiating a renewal of a contract for exclusive marketing of Goldwyn releases in the Antipodes.

The Williamson interests consist principally of theatrical enterprises, having a number of theatres where speaking drama is given. In addition to this they have four exchanges in Australia.

Speaking of likes and dislikes of the Australian audiences, Mr. Thring emphasized the fact that presentation of pictures tried in Australia in a limited way had proven unsuccessful.

"Our patrons do not want their vaudeville and music mixed with pictures, nor do they want pictures mixed with vaudeville and musical numbers. We have after several years of experimenting found very satisfactory solution of our people's likes and dislikes.

"We open our Paramount theatre in Melbourne at 11 o'clock and run continuously until 6, with program consisting of one feature, a gazette, and comedy, charging five to twenty-five cents. The music at these performances consists only of that from the piano.

"At 8 o'clock we begin our evening performance and the price for this is ten to sixty cents. The program includes two features of five reels each, comedy and a gazette, or weekly, as you call them here.

"The evening show has music furnished by a ten-piece orchestra. The reason possibly for the success of our evening program is that there is no night life in Australia and patrons of the theatre come downtown solely to attend the theatre."

Baby Marie Osborne Tours Big Cities for Pathe Organization

Baby Marie Osborne, the diminutive Pathe star, upon the expiration of her holiday visit to New York, started on a "sentimental journey to friend," which will include twenty-four cities between the Atlantic and the Pacific. At the end of the journey Leon T. Osborne will begin independent production of these juvenile pictures, which, within a short time, have firmly established her as a star both at home and in foreign lands. The volume of letters sent to her by both children and grown-ups keeps a private secretary busy answering them and mailing photographs.

The sentimental journey includes Boston, Newark, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

OH, THANKS!

And the Same to You

HOLIDAY greetings started early this year and lasted long. Among the messages of good cheer to reach Motion Picture News after Father Time had sounded the knell of 1918 were some from every branch of the industry. Cards came from

Al Lichtman,
Frank Mayo,
Bertram Chas. Bracken,
G. C. Heebner,
Colonial theatre, Orange, Cal.

In our issue of last week we published a partial list of names of those from whom we received Christmas greetings.

To each and every one within the industry, we heartily wish you the best that 1919 has to offer.

Standard Slide Employees Dined by Corporation

A holiday dinner was tendered the employees of the Standard Slide Corporation and the press by the officers of the company Saturday evening, December 28, at the Cafe Boulevard, New York City. It was one of those affairs that brought fellow-workers and executives closer together and showed that perfect harmony and co-operation had existed in making the Standard Slide Corporation a successful organization.

A rather novel form of entertainment was given and afforded a great deal of pleasure to all those present. Every number on the entertainment program was rendered by the employees and they received rounds of applause for their good work.

A new feature in song slides was introduced and consisted of a number of hand-colored slides with the words of the composition inserted on the slide illustrating the action.

Among the speakers of the evening were J. H. Hallberg, who spoke on the subjects of improvement and inventions, which were very interesting; J. Robert Rubin, attorney for the corporation, told how, through the untiring efforts and hard work of Joseph Confal, the four slide companies were brought together as one; H. A. Rosenberg spoke along the same line; Joseph Confal, as toastmaster, had a good word for every speaker as he introduced them.

Others that made addresses were Al. Greenland, Nat Cherin, David Harris, Thomas G. Wiley, Sam Spedon and Mrs. Mitchell Harris.

Taking into consideration that two officers of the Standard Slide Corporation started out in the slide business some six or seven years ago in a one-room office and today conduct business in a five-story building, the wonderful strides that have been made can be appreciated. A booklet with the title, "A Little Journey to Slide Lane," was distributed to the guests. It takes one through the offices, salesrooms and workrooms and describes the whole process of slide making.

The officers of the Standard Slide Corporation are H. L. Edwards, president; J. H. Hallberg, vice-president; H. A. Rosenberg, vice-president; Nat Cherin, treasurer; Joseph F. Confal, secretary and general manager, and J. Robert Rubin, attorney.

Allens Get Another Toronto House

Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen have acquired still another theatre in Toronto, the latest being the Queen's Royal Theatre, Yonge street and St. Clair avenue. The name of the house has been changed to Allen's Royal theatre. It is located in the north end of the city and has been successful during its career of several years.

The Allens now own or control three houses in Toronto and are building two new palaces on Bloor street and Danforth avenue. The number of theatres which they control, own or are building in the Dominion is now near the forty mark, it is declared.

WHAT DOES THE NEW YEAR MEAN TO YOU?

Harold B. Franklin Has Some Instructive Thoughts Here for Every Exhibitor in the Country

By Harold B. Franklin

Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

THE new year will probably see more PROGRESSIVE changes in motion pictures than ever before. The motion picture has emerged from the war period a full-fledged industry, recognized by the Government and by the people as an important part of their daily habits. It should be the aim of every exhibitor to deserve the patronage of the great American public. Your theatre for "1919" should stand for high ideals and a rigid standard of quality. Make your theatre representative of the highest ideals.

Exhibitors should stop merely exhibiting! The up-to-date exhibitor "produces" his entertainment. It is the way you present your pictures that gives distinction. Anyone can hire an operator to put a picture on the screen. It is the atmosphere with which you surround your picture that makes it stand out. The successful exhibitor will see to it that his theatre sets the pace. Quality in pictures is the first essential. The producers and stars realize more than ever that true merit is the order of the day. To get a quality show people go to a quality theatre.

"THE proper presentation of the photo drama," is a subject that will never be finished, because of the enterprising nature of the motion picture business. We have made progress by leaps and bounds in the last few years and the end of the new year will probably introduce new ideas and methods of presentation that will make some of our present entertainments appear antiquated.

The exhibitor is facing what will probably be the most prosperous year in our industry, and there is every indication that good business will be the rule in every theatre that has a good opinion of itself—and deserves it.

The orchestra or organ is one of the big assets of the modern motion picture theatre. Good music that synchronizes with the action on the screen will give your pictures a new meaning. It is therefore worthy of the best effort on the part of the exhibitor. The best talent is available for this class of work and it is economy to secure the very best musicians in your locality.

FOR those theatres that have stage room, "stage settings" offer an inexpensive diversion. At Shea's Hippodrome we have developed this innovation to such an extent that a special setting is prepared each week. They offer a splendid background for a special musical number or overture and can be patriotic or timely in nature.

Commencing next week, we will introduce at Shea's Hippodrome reproductions of the world's famous paintings in stage-setting form. In that way we will bring to our audiences the best there is in art, and enhanced by color effects and appropriate music, we expect it will prove a novelty that will not only be good to look at but also have an educational value.

Exhibitor Enthuses Over "Made in America" Cast Is Made Known

Martin Johnson's picture of the "Cannibals of the South Seas," was said to be such a success in the showing of the first five reels at the Plaza theatre, New York, that Manager Milton Gosdorfer booked the second five reels, showing for eight days later.

"I took on the Cannibal picture in order to relieve the monotony of story pictures," said Mr. Gosdorfer. "I figured that if I could do ordinary business it would suit my purposes. I got a real surprise when I found we were doing an immense business."

"I had the notion it was a feature to give people information, but when they talked excitedly about the adventures among cannibals and the close flirtation with death which Martin Johnson and his fearless little wife carried on through weeks among the Solomon Islands, I got wise."

In eight episodes, "Made in America" shows how the American doughboy was trained within a period of less than a year to win battles against the super-trained and Satan-inspired warrior of Prussia.

The play is cast with the following: Richard Turner, Edward Burns, Philip Sanford, Brian Darley, Lillian Lawrence, Florida Kingsley and Emily Merceau have the most important parts, while the rest of the cast, some 40,000 in number, is made up of American soldiers.

"Made in America" was produced and directed by Mr. Ashley Miller and is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Stars Entertain Soldiers

New Year's Day at the Pershing Club for United States and Allied Officers, corner of Madison avenue, at Forty-fourth street, New York City, was "Motion Picture Day." Stars provided entertainment.

Focusing Attention on Price Tags

Frank Hall Quotes Some of His Views

"WHAT'S the Price?" a most excellent article, which appeared in the columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of January 4 issue, and to which attention was directed by the editor, contains so much truth and common sense that it should not be passed over lightly, said Frank Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation.

As exhibitor and distributor, may I not take the liberty to openly discuss several of the points brought out in "What's the Price?" some of which I heartily advocate from one standpoint and, contrawise, take exceptions to some from the other angle.

I quite agree with the writer that the "How much" habit, which is prevalent among exhibitors in every section, has a decided tendency to retard the progress of the industry instead of advancing it. Too many of us are prone to look at an attraction from the price angle instead of from the show angle and the quality of amusement the picture might contain.

If the rental price is absurdly low, some of the small town exhibitors act on the advice set down in the old adage which says something about "not looking a gift horse in the mouth." In other words, the exhibitor feels that as long as he is paying practically nothing for a film, he should not be at all squeamish about the quality of entertainment, rather the lack of quality, in the film.

Believing he is going to do so much business, regardless, he doesn't care what his patrons might think, with a result that his opposition, who is ever on the alert, slips in a special at a fancy price, and does a rattling big business. The difference in profits of the two houses may not vary five dollars, but it goes without saying, the man who gives the better quality is the one who is building for the future.

But should he overstep the mark and pay "too much," the danger of lost dollars overbalances the lost patronage of his competitor, and sooner or later the sheriff will get him, too.

I have learned from exhibitors in small towns, towns of four to ten thousand population, that when they book some special production at a price way above their regular program stuff, and raise their admissions, their patrons complain and claim they are being "gypped" just because the picture may be a little better than the usual run—the public does not stop to consider an advanced rental, house capacity or drawing population.

On the other hand, exhibitors also claim, even though they do a rattling good business on a special production at advanced prices, the reaction sets in the following day and the falling off of receipts balances up an average week.

Of course, there are exceptions to this rule. I am speaking now of the many so-called specials that are being foisted upon the unsuspecting exhibitor, who is made to believe they are really great by the exorbitant prices asked. The wise exhibitor, though, is the one who asks "how little" instead of "how much," for the scale of prices many salesmen have is so elastic that they can make them fit most arguments.

That's wherein the danger lies—trying to judge quality by price, and thinking because you have brought a salesman down from $50 a day to $15 that you have put one over—the truth of the matter is you have bought a product at ten dollars more than it's worth.

How much better it is for both salesman and exhibitor to have fixed prices—prices that can't be juggled, equitable prices to both exhibitor and distributor, permitting each to make a fair profit. Add to this the confidence inspired by the quality of the film, and you have the ideal proposition for all concerned.

It was with this thought in mind, protecting the exhibitor against raising prices on films of more than ordinary merit, that I worked out my ten-twenty-thirty plan, figuring that giving the exhibitors something truly worth while at a price they could well afford, that the inducement offered would double the number of playing days for any one film, which would more than offset the difference in the lower rental.

When I launched this fixed-price plan for a series of special productions I was confident of its success. Since announcing the first four pictures in this series, Evelyn Nesbit and Russell Thaw in "Her Mistake," J. Stuart Blackton's "Life's Greatest Problem," Bacon-Backer's "A Woman's Experience," and J. Stuart Blackton's "The Littlest Scout," the exhibitors throughout the country were quick to recognize the caliber of the 10-20-30 attractions, and at the close of our first month's business I am more than convinced that it is not "how much" or "how little," but the staple price for quality films that will prove the exhibitors' salvation and the greatest boon to the industry.

Occasionally some super-productions may come along, such as the "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Wanted for Murder," "My Four Years in Germany," "A Romance of the Air," etc., and being bonafide special attractions require special treatment. They are booked under special contracts, are advertised specially, presented in a special way, and special prices arranged commensurate with the attraction. Any exhibitor is justified in playing these extra specials and advancing his admission price, for they come so few and far between that his patrons welcome the truly big meritorious productions and are glad to pay the fare. Instead of reacting against their box-offices the days immediately following, it invariably acts as a stimulant, for it brings back to his theatre patrons who have slipped away to the other house or those who have lost the habit of attending regularly.

Having already pointed out the danger of advancing prices simply because the exhibitor had to pay more in rental, it is easily apparent wherein the difference lies—

Porter Sees Bright Future for Industry

According to E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex Company, who has returned to New York from a tour of observation in the East and Middle West, the outlook for the motion picture industry is unusually bright, notwithstanding indications of present business stagnation in certain parts of the country.

Mr. Porter's predictions regarding the coming prosperity wave are based on a thorough study of conditions in the machine end of the business. He canvassed the situation in detail with the distributors who dispose of Simplex products, men who are known as acute observers of conditions in their particular territories. In some instances these distributors were inclined to be pessimistic as regards their business today, but even they had to admit the ultimate upward tendency of business now in sight in their own localities.

His conclusions from the interviews with all of these men are that an era of unprecedented prosperity in the film business is not far off. The indications in accessory and supply quarters, he believes, point to a favorable reaction of general business on the picture industry as a whole.

Film Board of Trade for Minneapolis

C. W. Stonbaugh, Minneapolis, announces that the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, an organization for the purpose of creating a better understanding generally between the local exchanges and the exhibitors, has been formed in that city. The organization is incorporated under the State laws of Minnesota.

The following officers were elected: E. A. Eschmann, president; E. R. Pearson, vice-president; W. C. Lestico, secretary; Benjamin Goldman, counsel; Ben Friedman, treasurer.

price does not control—but quality does, and accordingly an exhibitor is only justified in advancing his admissions when he has a really big extra attraction to offer, a production that has been put to the actual box-office test and proved its worth on merit alone and not accepted as a super-feature on the wild ravings of some press agent, the bunk some salesman may offer or the lurid advertisements of the producer.

In the latter case I believe the exhibitor is wholly warranted in asking "how much" or "what's the price."

Carroll King Admits Being Hasty in Letter

Carroll E. King of Leesburg, Ohio, has asked MOTION PICTURE NEWS to publish the following letter, which he has written and which needs no comment:

"In simple justice to the officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Company I ask that you please print the following:

"In the November 30 issue of the NEWS there appeared a letter which I wrote to the editor regarding the First National-Pickford deal. The paper had my permission to print this letter and they did so. In it I rather severely criticised the officials of the First National for, first, paying any star this amount of money; second, doing so without the knowledge of the franchise holders, and, third, making the facts concerning this deal public at a time when the war tax revision was the vital subject of the hour. I also feared that it might result in other stars inflating their values.

"As is generally the case, all the phases of a big deal do not appear on the surface, and when I had time to delve more deeply into the matter and obtain information in full I found that I had misjudged the gentlemen responsible for this great achievement. They made the deal in full accordance with their authority and in so doing secured a "scoop" for the First National. The manner in which it is intended to handle the Pickford productions is a positive guarantee of pictures that will far and away excell anything Miss Pickford has yet done, and, as is the case with Chaplin, there will be no rush to produce a given number of pictures. Every phase of the production will be handled properly, carefully, and with proper attention to detail. The announcement that has been made as to the vehicles means that every Pickford production will be an instantaneous hit, for the combination is unapproachable.

"As the tax worry is now seemingly drawing to a close, and as the stars are beginning to realize that it is a 50-50 case of star and vehicle, those two matters need not worry the exhibitor. So I therefore feel that it is only right that I publicly admit that I was hasty in my judgment.

"We sometimes criticise our friends more freely than our enemies, and the First National is most assuredly the exhibitors' friend, for it IS THE EXHIBITOR."

Jake Wells to Entertain Soldiers in Virginia

RICHMOND, VA.—Acting upon a letter sent to all of the resident managers of local theatres, Jake Wells has agreed to do his part in assisting State Labor Commissioner Hirshberg, who is now formulating plans for the entertainment of the disabled soldiers stationed at U. S. A. General Hospital No. 22, at Westhampton, just West of the city.

Mr. Wells, who controls the five largest theatres here, has consented to admit the wounded fighters between 11 a. m. and 5 p. m., during which time the theatres show to only average crowds.

The Bluebird theatre, under the management of Thorpe & Klein, has also agreed to assist in entertaining the unfortunate boys from "over there."

Division of Films Shows a Profit

Charles S. Hart Gives Interview in Europe Showing That United States Organization Has Surplus on Hand

Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information

FOR the British trade journals Charles S. Hart gave out an interview which shows that the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has made good financially besides spreading useful propaganda.

"The way the United States motion picture organization has been built up in so short a time is nothing less than a miracle, and it is especially interesting to note that the department received from the United States Treasury on commencement an appropriation of $10,000," said Mr. Hart, "and that today the organization has in hand a big surplus of money, so that the idea has been successful financially as well as from the propaganda point of view. The Division of Films was created but one year ago.

"I knew nothing about films then," said Mr. Hart, "but was chosen for the post because I obviously had an independent attitude, and not being commercially interested in films could not be accused of having an axe to grind. The work has been tremendously interesting and in some ways I shall be sorry to leave it, as I propose doing next June.

"The department will then be finished with war activities and my part will have been played. What the future of the Department will be I can hardly say at the moment. I do not think it will be run to further commerce or to exploit commercial pictures by the United States Government.

"One thing that struck me as very curious when I first came along was the difficulties of film distribution. I found that if one house showed a film, that same picture could not be shown at another house for miles. This seemed all wrong to me, and we set about changing things.

"I believed it was purely prejudice and that the exhibitors would gain rather than lose by showing the same picture. Starting on this system: our pictures were soon being shown everywhere and barring clauses were things of the past as far as we were concerned, which meant a 75 per cent. bigger distribution for our pictures.

"Now, if this paid—and the exhibitor admitted he made money on the Government pictures—why should it not be done with other films? I am not a film man, but it does strike me that the system in force means a fearful waste, for I understand that the average American picture only gets a 25 per cent distribution."

Houdini Serial to Open on Keith Circuit

The Houdini serial will open in New York on Jan. 6, instead of Dec. 30, as originally announced. The change in date was made at the request of the United Booking Offices, who are playing the serial first run for three and four days in sixteen Keith and Proctor theatres in New York City and State.

Among the Keith and Proctor houses to play "The Master Mystery" are Proctor's Fifth Avenue, Twenty-third Street, Fifty-eighth Street, 125th Street, and Harlem Opera House, all in New York City; Proctor's Mt. Vernon, Proctor's Yonkers, Proctor's Port Chester, Proctor's Albany, Proctor's Troy, Proctor's Schenectady, Keith's Greenpoint, Brooklyn, and Keith's Prospect, Brooklyn.

N. J. Nathanson, president of Regal Films, Ltd., which controls the Canadian rights to B. A. Rolfe's super-serial "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, announces that a special trade showing of the early episodes of the picture was held at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, on December 27. Special music by the Regent orchestra of twenty-two pieces was furnished. The Regent is one of Canada's largest and finest picture houses. The serial will be released in Montreal on Jan. 5 and in Toronto on Jan. 6. Regal Films controls six exchanges in Canada, located in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. The home offices are in Toronto.

Calgary Interests Form Association

Moving picture theatre interests of Calgary have organized a federation which is known as the Calgary Theatrical Association, and it is aimed to perfect an organization the scope of which will eventually cover the whole of Western Canada.

The Calgary association was organized on December 19 at a meeting attended by exhibitors, managers, exchange representatives, moving picture projection machine operators, musicians and stage employees.

Steps were taken at the meeting to encourage the formation of similar local associations in other cities of the Western Provinces, and if active co-operation can be secured the scope of the association will be extended, under a broader name, to take in all moving picture interests west of the Great Lakes. It is also hoped that a Dominion-wide organization may eventually be formed.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

YOU who have been following these articles have no doubt seen that good advertising appears to be contagious—that in a city where one theater's advertising is good it will not be long until that of the average is much raised. But of course the theatre itself hasn't everything to do this with, for the equipment of the newspaper office has to be up to the times or the best results cannot be secured.

For instance, take the page from the Duluth, Minn. News-Tribune which is reproduced on the page opposite. It is hard to imagine advertising that is more unattractive than this—a mess of black type and exceedingly heavy rules. In every case, except that of the Zelda theatre, the designers of the displays or the compositors have used every possible bit of the space.

And turning through the other pages of this paper one finds that the general advertising is all of the same type, that black type rules for the news heads as well as for all of the advertising. And with the newspaper office insisting on furnishing nothing but this Gothic type and enclosing everything in these mourning borders it is hard to criticise the theatres for the result.

Such advertising as this gets the least possible pulling power because of the sameness and unattractiveness. We cannot imagine why anyone should read these displays unless they felt that it was a part of their day's work. In such cases the amount of space that is occupied is going to have mighty little to do with the results that come in. A mere mass of type amounts to about as much in three inches double column as it does in a full page if the display isn't going to be anything more than the aforesaid mass of type.

In justification for the Duluth exhibitors we want to say here that several of them have told us that they have the greatest difficulty in getting any decent cuts from their local exchanges. They add that they don't think they should go to the expense of having them made. One exhibitor complains that he rarely gets the very cut that he asks for, but that he generally gets "something else." It is only too true that the same complaint comes from exhibitors in other sections. There are cases in which the New York general offices have spent a large amount of money in preparing these displays and where the exchange fails to keep them on hand. Evidently, these exchanges are fearing to have the loss of the unused or unsold matter charged against them. The exhibitor has two remedies for this: either he should agree to take all of the cuts on the various productions or he should send a letter direct to the main office when he fails to get the matter that he wants.

Most of the Duluth theatres have well-written advertisements, and there the praise stops. What Duluth needs is:

Use of distinctive types and borders, or, at least, the getting away from the heavy black effects.

Cuts that mean something.

Distinctive name plates for the theatres.

Naturally, the theatre does not care to go to the expense of purchasing outright the types that he wants to use. It is expensive and unfair. If we were among the exhibitors of Duluth we would go to the fellow managers and get them a unit on the proposition and after that we would go to the newspapers and say:

"We have shown that we believe in advertising. We know that it pays, but we lose half of the effectiveness because your compositors set all of our displays up in the same type so that they result in the appearance of a series of handbills. If we have other faces we will be encouraged to use more space because all of us will be trying to achieve THE most attractive, the best business-getting display in the paper. By giving us all the same thing as you are doing now you offer no encouragement for personality in displays."

Making Your Displays Pull

Duluth Newspapers Handicap Good Advertising
With Blackest of Types and Truly
"Mourning" Borders

And when you go to make that little speech have with you your clippings from the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, a whole bunch of the clippings of the most attractive type advertisements that are shown there and show the business manager of the newspaper what you mean. Show them what other newspapers are doing, and you might say to them that the faces they are using in their displays remind men who know things about advertising of Civil War days so far as type faces are concerned.

It is a remarkable thing that among the displays on the page that we have reproduced there are only thirteen lines of type that are not set either in some form of Gothic or in a machine black face type.

There are only nine lines in Italic.

With the exception of a couple of lines in Cheltenham Bold Condensed all of the display belongs to the Gothic family. A mighty fine showing for a newspaper in a city that is given a census population of 89,331. From the typographical appearance of the paper we would be more apt to conclude that this was an issue of the weekly Gazette, the leading weekly of Buncombe county.

We believe in newspapers and we believe that most of them will listen to reason when properly approached, but in cases like Duluth when they refuse to do anything that will encourage you to use bigger space the only thing to do is to CUT DOWN the amount of space that you are using. That will generally be found a most effective argument. If the paper is not willing to invest some money with the prospect of your pulling more business with better advertising, there is not much hope for it.

Few papers will be willing to buy distinctive borders for you unless you agree to use a certain amount of space in the course of a year, but we would highly recommend to theatres in cities where the newspaper has a monotype machine getting the matrices for two or three distinctive borders and having a bunch of these cast up. These matrices can be rented for a small sum and retained only during the time that the casting is in progress. Your newspaper can explain this to you in detail.

Borders, and distinctive borders, are essential. If one of the Duluth theatres had a distinctive border, light-faced type and attractive cut, it could make a display stand out in the midst of the others like a house afire.

There is no investment that a motion picture theatre manager can make that will yield so enormous a return as a name plate for his theatre. They are inexpensive and last for years—because you never want to change once you have adopted a peculiar style and slogan. We would advise every manager to get the services of a good artist to make the design, and this need only be made once, and then have these name plates made in the sizes that you use in your displays, one, two, three columns and upwards as you require. You need have only one cut made for each size for every newspaper that has a stereotyping department can furnish you with as many reproductions as you need.

Name plate and a distinctive border makes the display stand out, makes it individual, calls attention to your advertisement at once, and, more than that, gives CLASS to the theatre.

Now as to the matter of cuts. Taking the whole field into consideration, what can you get?

First, generally there are available from the producers, stock cuts at least in one-column sizes of the stars that are regularly making pictures for that company. If the theatre cannot afford to do any more, we would advise them strongly to BUY one of each star that they regularly play.

Many of these are very bad, we'll admit, but that is a point that you will have to decide for yourself. Most of them are so

Theatres Seem Content with the "Old Stuff" in Duluth Displays

Note the way that these theatres all use forms of Gothic type, resort to heavy borders, almost ignore cuts and lose nine-tenths of the force of a really good display. See article opposite

Min this trip, were even more numerous than before.

The vaudeville show with which William Morris has surrounded Harry Lauder, is excellent. It holds the audience well pleased until the star, himself, appears. Harry Lauder receives so enthusiastic a welcome that he's compelled to remain on the stage for—well, the first night may prove indicative—a full hour and 15 minutes.

Harry, as the audience called him, first, out loud, when demanding old favorites, sang some new songs. The new that took most enthusiastically, was more of war, just in line of "love." At the end of the star's bit a veritable flower garden was handed over the footlights and then Harry Lauder tried to tell his well wishers how much he thanked them.

Then it was that Harry Lauder evaded the advice of his song, and began to tell of what he had seen in the war zone, of meetings with American troops and all manner of funny happenings when he entertained them. But some of Harry Lauder's reminiscences were not funny. A few of them were very compelling. He even made a little speech in which he pleaded for stern justice to the Hun.

That Harry Lauder was an artist long before the war, is merely stating a bit of common knowledge. But Harry Lauder of today is a far greater artist. He ended his entertainment by asking subscriptions for the "Harry Lauder Fund." This has grown to $25,000. With some of this money many a disabled soldier has been set on the road to independence.

At the little Belmont theater there is a play that stars Walker White-side and furnished for Tyrone Power a really commanding character. The title of this play is "The Little Brother."

The story is that of a Jewish rabbi, who is a refugee from a Russian pogrom in which he witnessed the killing of his wife. He had lost his very young brother in a previous pogrom. Now his daughter loves a Christian, and he is brought face to face with the Christian press, who led the pogrom and will believe him to be the chosen instrument of God. The climax is the recognition by the rabbi of his long lost brother in the priest.

The play ends with the priest begging his forgiveness.

There are some tense moments in this play, but there are also some moments that might well be shortened or made brighter. One cannot help but recall another play of religious persecution, "The House Next Door." It is possible that "The Little Brother" may find a wider popular audience than did the earlier play, but there are some who do not like it so well.

The Rivoli and the Rialto theatres while equipped with perhaps the most efficient motion picture houses have yet known, still rely upon their directing genius, S. L. Rothapfel, when the heads of the various departments are "stuck." The other day, when the director, John Wagner, and Jimmy, the chief electrician, looked down over a twinkling star and the lips of a crescent moon.

Now John Wagner is a colorist of the most pronounced type, not to say a futurist. Jimmy, on the other hand, is a materialist.

Mr. Wenger ordered that a star should gleam forth in the property sky. He directed it to be set within the arc of a crescent moon. "Also make it sparkle," he commanded. "Nothing doing," Jimmy declared. "It ain't the way nature works."

They battled for several minutes, but neither would give in. So they telegraphed Mr. Rothapfel, who was away on a vacation. This is his answer.

"Nature is sometimes crude. Wenger never is. Give him his star anywhere he likes."

So there is a star at the Rivoli where a star cannot be and it twinkles.

At the Metropolitan opera house and the Park theater where the Society of American Musicians are to be both seen and heard, the musical offerings are of the "tried and true" variety, and are winning success consistently.

Indeed, during the war the Metropolitan has done better perhaps than any other entertainment. The subscriptions for this season which were made when the war seemed destined to continue for months if not for years, were so large that they surprised even the management. Some of the subscribers have been subscribers for the number of new subscribers. One of the old subscribers said:

"Opera at $4 plus war tax is a real treat to my friends. It is the way I treat my friends. It is the place of some of the entertainment I need to give at home and although I have given up my automobile and the money I used to give, I won't give up my seat at the opera."

Further an unusual view to take, isn't it? But it is a odd fact in this season.

The Society of American Musicians, which has established itself in the same relative position occupied by the Opera Company in Paris, has done so well at the Park theater that it has run season without and this year. Not much, when the closing date comes, the society will return next season for its customary and now eagerly looked for season in this city.

A rather interesting side light on the situation has been furnished by the determination of the actual length of time to which a good season ticket is sold.

Mrs. Ballington Booth of the Volunteers of America has gone overseas to spend the winter with the American soldiers in France.

The Women's Municipal League of New York has launched a campaign with the aim of doubling its present membership of 1,000.

"So you're coming up to buy an airship? You're quite an ambitious little boy."

"Yes, sir! I want to fly over Jimmy Mack's yard and drop bricks on him."

Bad Type Effects and Old Style Borders Mar Duluth Display

lettered that it is hard to use them for any but one attraction, but often the careful use of the printing office saw will eliminate this lettering without really hurting the cut itself.

But better than that, we would prefer to get a striking picture of each star and have made from this one and two-column cuts (you will seldom need larger, no matter how much space you use). These should be cut-outs and we would have the work well done, with the view of using them often. Then we would have a file system in the theatre, wrap each cut so that it will not become scratched and then put it away for use the next time you play a picture with the same star.

Most of the Duluth theatres that advertise appear to play attractions at least two days and we believe that it would pay all of these theatres to spend a little money on the engraving for each picture—that is, to have cuts made that bear on the particular picture and that are good for only one use. But always avoid scene pictures unless they really mean something. A character picture is always stronger. That shows the star in the particular role he plays in that picture and it gives an intimate touch that is always valuable.

While Duluth is being used only as a text for these remarks, let us turn back to the displays. There are only three cuts used. The one of Fritz Brunette is about as bad as it could be, evidently a makeshift arrangement sawed out of a layout and with more background than anything else. The one of Tom Moore is better but it does not fit into the picture. Whoever made the selection of the picture made a bad one, for in this Tom looks like he had a grouch on against the world while his sunniness is the thing that makes him so enjoyable in photoplays. The entire center display on "Hearts of the World" was supplied by the producers.

Rex and Zelda theatres have the two best displays on the page that we have reproduced, the latter being the much better in leaving a large amount of white space. But can you imagine what a dominating effect the Zelda could have secured had it employed a smashing cut of Alice Brady, preferably in her role in "The Better Half" and have then taken about twice as much space and have placed this in the upper left hand corner, with a distinctive rule border breaking into it and then using a distinctive name plate in the lower right hand corner with the rule breaking the same way and then have set the body of the display is some lighter and attractive type? We'll stake a lot that if the Zelda had done this and the other theatres had held to their present type of advertising it would have done twice the business that it actually did do—even if the film had to be held over to accommodate the crowds.

The situation in Duluth appears to be the same as the situation in most cities of the same sort. The newspaper doesn't want to go to the expense of buying any other type. The exhibitor possibly reads some criticism of the typing of his displays and goes to the newspaper to ask for different type, and is given a "No" and then says, "What's the use? I'll have to do the best I can with what I have on hand."

You have read a lot about the Broadway Theatre in these pages. Here is a photograph of the new stage setting and the orchestra at that house, with an insert of Maurice A. Kashin, the managing director, at the left and James C. Bradford, musical director, at the right

But we have already pointed out some of the things that can be done. But the main thing is for the showman to try to do everything he can before he throws up his hands.

And then let him do something for himself.

Don't conclude that you cannot afford to pay for cuts, at least along one of the plans we have suggested.

Don't hesitate to make an investment in special borders and nameplates.

Remember that it should be your object to make your theatre THE theatre of the city. Possibly you believe that it is now, but if you are not willing to invest a little in giving it a REAL chance, your confidence is not very strong and you haven't an abiding faith in the future.

Let's improve our advertising. Let's get away from what the other fellow is doing. It is so easy, so comparatively inexpensive that it can be done and every time you and your competitor and the other fellows improve your displays you are making more business all the way around. That's no theory; it has been proven wherever it has been tried.

Unusual Exploitation Aids on "Virtuous Wives"

Departure in the usual style of the press sheet is marked in the exhibitor aid that has just been issued by the First National Exhibitors Circuit on the first of the Anita Stewart pictures, "Virtuous Wives."

As usual the various styles of newspaper stories are supplied and then the entire layout of paper available is produced.

But the chief thing that attracts attention is the varied styles of advertising ready for use in cut or mat form. Not only are the complete advertisements furnished with nothing to insert except the name of the theatre and the date of showing, but the component parts of these displays are supplied separately so that the exhibitor can largely design his own displays. Cuts of the star for either newspapers or advertising use are provided in all sizes ranging from two columns to thumbnails. There are also thumbnails of four of the chief supporting members of the cast. The exhibitor certainly has a wealth of material with which to work.

Cut-Outs Used with Fine Effect in Louisville Theatre

A SIMPLE, inexpensive and effective way of advertising Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" was used in Louisville, Ky., during the engagement of the Chaplin picture at the Strand theatre and at B. F. Keith's National. It was devised by Joe Goldberg, assistant manager, and George Starkey, Jr., traveling representative of the Big Feature Rights Corporation.

A "cut out" from the three-sheet lithograph was backed with cardboard presenting the valiant warrior true to life, or rather to the screen. He was then fitted out with full "field equipment," including mouse trap, wash pan, grater, bake pans, tin cup and egg beater, etc.

Thus arrayed, Charlie stood guard in the lobby or in front of the theatre. The effectiveness of the exhibit was demonstrated by the comment that was heard at the theatre and by the reports that were spread about it.

Patriotic and Carnival Spirits Are Combined When Franklin Celebrates Opening of New Year

NEW YEAR was ushered in at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, in gala form last week. The stage setting was one of patriotic as well as carnival spirit, depicting the New Year in the figure of a new-born child, in part of the uniform of Uncle Sam, crossing the globe from France to the good old U. S. A.

In back of the life-size figure hung hundreds of serpentine strings of pure white, giving the "follies" atmosphere, and on the background a series of colored light cloud effects were thrown.

Over the whole scene a revolving snow slides through its flaky drops. When the setting was unveiled, the big, 31-piece symphony orchestra played "Auld Lang Syne," giving a very striking effect. This piece was followed by the selection from "The Follies of 1918." The added man in the orchestra is a doughboy who has returned from France and has taken his old post in the Hippodrome orchestra as 'cellist.

The Sammie was in uniform the night the writer visited the Hippodrome.

The New Year's feature was "Arizona," with Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role, and for this production an elaborate musical setting was arranged by Harold B. Franklin and Conductor Moulton.

One of the noticeable features of Hippodrome music programs is that there is never any resort to hackneyed agitatos during the presentation of a feature. In dramatic moments there is always some standard work used; it is never the same old "10-20-30 Hearts and Flowers stuff." Some of the numbers noticed on the program were such little gems as "A Little Story," by Zimmerman, and "Pirouette," by Finck, and "A Curious Story," by Winkler.

The opening number was "Suite from the South." The Christmas tree which was in the center of the stage during Yuletide week was moved to one of the smaller openings in the stage New Year's week and

LET'S REVIEW IT What Was the Best Thing You Did During 1918?

OLD Father Time has chalked up another year number on the blackboard. No matter what your resolutions may be for the New Year, sit down and reflect what were the good things and what were the unprofitable ones that you did during the past year. Most of you have experienced ill luck with the war and with the influenza epidemic, but did you take time to cast up then?

How much value has the Exhibitors Service Bureau been to you during the past year? We feel sure that its value is a certain thing, but how much have you availed yourself of it? And how much in your turn have you helped other exhibitors by recording your ideas in this department? The invitations certainly have been frequent enough and certainly the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has shown its willingness to give every line of the space that has been required toward recording those ideas.

But let us forget what you failed to send and turn over the inky leaf to a nice clean one. We want more of your ideas registered here during this annal of 1919. We would like to ask you, each one of you, to sit down and write what is the best thing that you did during the past year. You have some good idea that is of value to others.

And resolve that you will send the MOTION PICTURE NEWS during this year an account of all that you do for the progress of the industry. It'll help you, too.

again illuminated with its hundreds of bulbs, enhancing the beauty of the center setting. A special trailer wishing the Hippodrome patrons a happy New Year was run at the end of the program.

This week Manager Franklin is introducing a novelty in stage settings, reproducing the first of a series of famous paintings. The center of the stage is converted into a large golden frame, and one of the Works of art has been reproduced for Hippodrome patrons. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will show its readers the setting and tell about the idea in the next issue.

MAJESTIC
"HOME OF WASHED AIR"

At the time that we printed a Special Service Section on this picture we called attention to the selling argument in the list of Griffith successes, just as they are used here. But we would have gone further and have put something more of the human appeal in the display. Now you may have the greatest orchestra in the world, but if you are content in merely giving performances and not striking the human note you are not going to have the greatest patronage. And so in this case it was perfectly right to get the Griffith idea dominant, but there is not any reason why the human element should not have left its impress. A couple of paragraphs added would have got much more effect.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

BACK from his trip across the country, S. L. Rothapfel is putting new pep into the bills at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres this week, with the holiday element remaining dominant. Everyone ought to enjoy a "happy new year" after seeing the two presentations.

Especially striking is the arrangement at the Rivoli. Things have literally been "shaken up." As a matter of fact it might be called a bill of surprises, and if one ignored looking at the program there would be something startling happening almost every moment. But months ago we told you that audiences have been accustomed to such things at those two theatres; they expect to be surprised, but they are never jarred.

"Bacchanale," from "Samson and Delilah," is the overture at the Rivoli, and this is played with remarkable lighting effects on the new settings. These effects are pinkish, running into green for the stage curtain. The main dome is in pink with the proscenium arch in deep red, affording a pleasing contrast. There is so much color to the musical offering that it is most fitting that it should be carried out in the lighting. It is remarkable how closely lights and music are associated in their effect upon audiences.

Now, here comes Novelty No. 1. The lights are dimmed down and with the orchestra bathed in we have a few bars of "Aloe Ohe" played, and then there go up gradually on either side of the curtain slowly flaring effects, giving a red cast to the theatre, and these continue through the titles of the picture that follows, Prizma natural color photographs of "Kilauea, the Hawaiian Volcano." During the music, which includes "Salambo" played twice through and then "Orgies of the Spirit," there is a constant rumble of the drums, giving the effect of the erupting volcano. The pictures themselves are most peculiar, with the molten metal showing in the genuine colors and all of the shades in the smoke and lakes of lava. The weirdness of the music adds a great deal to the enjoyment of the pictures.

With a harp cadenza as the introduction the curtains then part, revealing one of the brilliant John Wenger settings, which represents an artist's studio with the slanting skylight and typical furnishings of a studio. There is one dim hanging light. Here Alberto Bachmann, violin soloist, plays "Souvenir."

There is a lot of novelty in the Animated this week, too. To the music of "Cleopatra March" and then "Give a Little Credit to the Navy," we have a New Year card from the Rivoli and then a birthday cake with a single candle, for this week marks the first anniversary of the newest of the Rothapfel houses. Then there follows a picture of the front of the theatre at night with the "Victory" display showing.

Then come pictures especially taken for the Rivoli, "Washington's Sky Patrol," that can claim to be among the most novel that have been produced. There are all

IN THE WOODS

Yet a Theatre is Being Put Over to Big Business

WHAT do you think of a splendid motion picture theatre literally out in the woods where there is not even a town organization, doing big business, playing many of the pictures for the first run in the section, and packing the houses with almost every performance?

It is a remarkable story that shows the possibilities of the motion picture industry for it shows how the manager of a theatre in any country town can increase his business if he is willing to spend a little money and do some hard work. This story will appear in next week's issue. It's worth watching for.

Now as further evidence of what theatres in the smaller cities can do turn to page 243 of this issue and read the story of the way that L. L. Willey put over a Rothapfel-McCormick campaign and presentation in the city of Rochester, N. H., and how he cleaned up with it.

Let's hear from more of you small city exhibitors.

sorts of peculiar effects given—for instance, the Washington Monument seeming to bend this way and that, according as to how the aeroplane inclined itself. At one time it seems that the machine is about to dash into the monument. The audience is kept constantly laughing with the antics that the landscape seems to make. "Queen of the Air" is the music during these pictures.

What great care is taken at the Rothapfel houses in seeing that every reproduction is just right, and the ingenuity that is called forth is shown here in reproducing the sounds of the aeroplane, which, of course, come from the gas explosions in the engine. Joseph La Rose, production manager, has arranged a device which produces a stream of tiny explosions which is an absolutely perfect reproduction. This device consists of an air compressor, a valve system for the rapid release of "bursts" of air and a control system by which the speed and intensity can be controlled. This shading of the sound as the airship appears to be close or in the distance, of course, is wonderful, and the device is so valuable that Mr. La Rose has patented it.

And then another novelty. It is furnished by Will Rogers, who made himself one of the favorites of the Rivoli when his picture, "Laughing Bill Hyde," appeared there. First we have a characteristic picture of Rogers and then the opening words, "I am going to try to horn in on that anniversary of Rothapfel's with a few remarks on the peace ship," and then follow a series of sentences that keep the audience in an uproar. An agitator is used here.

With an American flag flying at the front of the camera then come Gaumont pictures of the welcome to the American fleet. The ships steam immediately before the camera and the fighting men draw the frantic applause of the audiences. Then there are views of Secretary Daniels reviewing the fleet and the "Mayflower" then takes us on review of the ships. It is really better than a trip through the river, and the people all over the country may be sure that they are going to be just about as intimately acquainted with the homecoming warships as are New Yorkers themselves. "Red, White and Blue," "Jack Tar March" and "Give a Little Credit to the Navy" are the selections used during the showing of these pictures, and then comes a drum roll, and to the tune of "Semper Fidelis" we have pictures of the sailors in their parade on Fifth avenue. We saw this parade and we must admit that when we saw these pictures at the Rivoli the sailors got a whole lot more applause than they did on their actual march. It simply shows how presentations like those at the Rothapfel theatres have conduced to arousing the patriotism of audiences.

Then there enters one more of the many novelties. Current Events furnished a picture with the title "Strike Up the Band, Here Comes a Sailor," and then, with the camera operating immediately in front of them, we have a ship's company of marching "gobs." "Here Comes a Sailor" is the music used, with a trumpet solo used through it.

The lights do not come up at the end of the Animated as usually, but the sound of muted horns is heard, and with the orchestra bathed in a dim blue someone begins to sing, "When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Vous." It is Albert Pellaton, who is seated in the orchestra, and you should see the audience as a whole craning its neck in an effort to find out who is doing the singing. Since the number does not appear on the program it is all the more of a surprise. There is only one verse of this and then we have again the muted horns and the curtains part with another clever stage setting showing a balcony effect with a huge moon in the centre and then four girls, two attired as sailors and two as Dutch maidens, dance "March of the Toys," from "Babes in Toyland," while the orchestra renders the selection. Pupils of the Albertieri School are the clever dancers.

Then comes a screamingly funny Mutt and Jeff cartoon, "The Lion Tamer," and there are imitations from the orchestra that add greatly to the merriment. The audience is in an uproar during the showing of the picture.

This is followed by the sextette from "Lucia di Lammermoor," which is rendered by a notable group of singers—Madeleine D'Espinoy, Gertrude Eider, Martin Brefel, Francesco Tamburello, Vincente Ballester and Albert Pellaton. It is probably the most ambitious musical number ever put on in a motion picture theatre and the audiences show their appreciation with the great volume of applause. And for one of the few times in the history of the Rothapfel houses the curtains part again for the recognition from the sextette.

"Chant Sans Paroles" is the theme for the feature, "The Squaw Man." It is played first with the title, "The Girl That Marries," and then is repeated during the picture rather oftener than the theme is generally used at the two theatres. Most of the music is of the Rothapfel numbered selections, the Indian strain being heard quite often. "In the Meadows" is the closing selection.

And this winds up the presentation except for the organ solo. A fitting bill it is to mark the birthday of the Rivoli, a theatre that has set a new mark for all who want to increase the popularity of the motion picture to follow.

"Poet and Peasant" is the overture at the Rialto, which is played with the lights all in gold. Then follows one of the most wonderful scenic pictures that we have ever seen, "The Storm," an Educational Films study of seascapes. There views of warships at sea in the rough weather, then of the surf pounding on the rocks—in short, it is a poem of the sea, every inch of it delightfully pleasing. It gets unusual applause. Organ music accompanied the picture.

With the lights all gold James Harrod then comes from between the stage curtains and sings "In Dublin's Fair City" and "Dear Old Pal of Mine."

Rialto Animated opens with Gaumont pictures of San Francisco welcoming the soldiers returning from Camp Lewis, and then some Pathe scenes of the arrival of Col. Whittesley of the "Lost Battalion" in Boston, and for both of these the music is "We Are Coming." Current Events then shows some of the Christmas presents that were intended for the Kaiser, showing the big gun trials at Aberdeen, Md., during which "The Last Stand" is played. Then follows a novelty entitled "Going Some," these being pictures of one of the cars of a roller coaster taken from another one. There are all sorts of peculiar effects secured here and the audience is in a constant roar throughout. "The Vixen" is the music.

Current Events then shows views of Miss Rose Tolley, the "four-months-old athlete," and there are a lot more laughs here. "Children's Suite" is the accompaniment, and then some Rialto pictures of the latest thing in Cheyenne dances, with "Russian Rag" being played. Culled from the official war review are pictures of "soldiers of the eternal snows," the Alpini, with a mysterioso used. These are followed by Pathe pictures of the welcome to the returning fleet. There are some wonderful hits here, and "El Capitan," which is played twice through here, adds to the applause which greets the vessels and then the sailors marching on Fifth avenue. There is almost a record for enthusiasm

Here is a remarkably simple lobby display and one of the most attractive. A series of Japanese lanterns and a large framed picture of Norma Talmadge formed this for the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, when "The Forbidden City" was shown established here, only to be broken a few seconds later when we have Current Events pictures of President Wilson in Paris and being cheered by the enthusiastic. "Here They Come" is the music.

After Miss Gladys Rice sings "My Son" we have the feature, Charles Ray in "String Beans." "Jimmy Valentine" is the theme for Ray and "Jeanette" for the girl.

Then we have "Tales from Hoffman" by the orchestra and there follows one of the funniest comedies that Mack Sennett ever made, "The Village Chestnut." The music here adds much to the enjoyment of the picture. All the scenes are laid in the village school, and at the opening we have "School Days," followed by "I Can't Do That Sum." Then come "Following the Girl," "Porcupine Patrol" and "Curse of an Aching Heart," played with an exaggerated effect that gets a lot of laughter. "Star Gazer," "When I'm Alone" and "Oh, Harry," follow with "Curse of an Aching Heart" repeated and "Over the Top" and "You Bet" winding up the showing.

It's a mighty happy bill all the way through and certainly just the sort of a one for the holiday season. And in spite of the weather during the week finding a seat at either one of the theatres was mighty hard work.

Yes, the holiday spirit is in both of the presentations, but the best thing about it is that the followers of the two theatres know that they can safely expect everything to be done just right and at the right time, and therefore they never miss occasions such as this, marking holidays or special celebrations.

There's a whole lot of getting your public in that frame of mind. That's the thing that keeps the box office busy.

Many people fail to see the cloud's silver lining because they fail to look "up" long enough.

Moore Gives Theatre for U. S. Showing of "New Glory for Old"

ON Sunday morning, December 29, Moore's new Rialto theatre, Washington, the handsomest structure of its kind in the National Capital and one of the most magnificent photoplay houses in the United States, was turned over to the officials of the District of Columbia government for an exclusive first-time-in-America showing of "New Glory for Old," a cinematographic record of the activities of a fighting division of the United States Army from the time of its mobilization in this country to its review by General Pershing after months in the thick of the fighting on the western front.

The showing was under the direct personal supervision of Major Raymond Pullman, chief of the Metropolitan Police Force of Washington, with whom the officers of Moore's Theatres Corporation co-operated. The private showing was at 10:30 a. m., and was attended by all of the district department heads, their families, friends, assistants and invited guests, including many distinguished representatives of the capital's official, business and social life.

In compliment to the members of the District Government, Mr. Moore added to the program the latest Charlie Chaplin release, "Shoulder Arms," a perfect travesty on the life seriously depicted in "New Glory for Old," and the full force of the Rialto Symphony Orchestra, an organization of solo artists that has created a sensation in Washington musical circles and established new standards of musical accompaniment in the theatre.

"New Glory for Old" was filmed by official Signal Corps operators and forms one of the most valuable historical records extant.

Phonograph window display on "Mickey" and how theatre used 24 sheet on its drop curtain the preceding week

24-Sheet on Drop Curtain in Theatre Helps "Mickey" Exploitation

EVERY use was made of music in advertising "Mickey" during its recent run at Proctor's Fifth Avenue theatre, where it is said to have made a new record for a motion picture. W. H. Quaid, the manager, announces that never before in the four years that he has been the manager of the theatre has he shown a picture of more than two reels, but adds, "any time that you have another 'Mickey' call upon me and you will find a willing exhibitor."

The campaign on this picture was started a week before the showing and introduced some novel features. Use was made of the song of the same name, a slide of this being run, the orchestra playing the music and then a singer rendering the song after each performance. In addition to this a talking machine was placed in the lobby and there the records were played while a number of ushers sold copies of the song. "Mickey" was certainly impressed upon everyone for the full week before the opening of the engagement.

There was another unusual plan followed during the preceding week by the use of 24-sheet with the theatre date stand alongside on a drop curtain. This was lowered after each performance and at the same time a woman employe of the theatre appeared and made the announcement that this was one of the big scenes in the feature and that during the making of it Mabel Normand was almost killed. Directly to this use of the poster the management attributes the unusual word-of-mouth advertising that was given the picture, the lobby attendants reporting that it was almost the sole topic of conversation among those leaving the theatre.

Music stores handling the various phonograph and piano player records of "Mickey" in the neighborhood co-operated. One striking window display was afforded by the Fifth Avenue Columbia Graphophone Company. This consisted of an immense picture of Miss Normand, a number of the records of the song, and then a display card announcing the showing of the picture at the Fifth Avenue theatre.

Dayton theatre got the Christmas spirit into this display and added to the picture's drawing power

Exchange Helps Overcome Law Reducing Admissions

What co-operation of an exchange is worth has just been proven in the case of Williamsburg, Ky., where the city council recently passed an ordinance forbidding local theatre managers from charging more than ten cents admission to a motion picture show.

However, one of the managers had arranged with the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for that territory, to show "Joan the Woman," but when this action was taken by the city council he advised Lee Goldberg, the exchange manager, that he would be unable to show the picture. Instead of arguing the matter, Mr. Goldberg wrote a letter to the council pointing out that if such a law were enforced it would result in Williamsburg failing to see the best of motion pictures, and that the exhibitors would have to show the cheaper grade film. Evidently the letter had its effect, for the next day in came the order to ship "Joan the Woman."

Dayton Theatre Shifts Bill Change to Get Benefit of Holidays

AS usual thing the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., changes its bill on Thursdays, but, of course, this year both Christmas and New Year came on Wednesday and the management figured that it could get a greater volume of business by putting on new attractions on those days instead of waiting twenty-four hours later to make the changes. It was the only house in Dayton to fall for this idea and the result was a large increase in business.

Holiday spirit was carried through all of the advertising for that week, and the theatre used large space in the newspapers to announce this change in the bill. The three column, ten inch, display which is reproduced here on "The Greatest Thing in Life" could not have been better. None of the selling argument of the picture itself was lost and in addition the pictures of Lillian Gish and Robert Harron were placed on the Christmas tree, the whole thing surmounted by a star bearing the title and under this decorations asking other questions. D. W. Griffith was represented as a Santa Claus bringing good things to the Dayton.

It was not long ago that we urged that every theatre manager use the inspiration of special occasions to bring new business. The Dayton is surely doing intelligently.

This Manager Makes Stage Attractions Help

When Ziegfeld's "Follies" played its annual two weeks' engagement at the Detroit Opera House, Manager Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway Strand, decided to link up the production with his presentation of Billie Burke in "The Make-Believe Wife." Miss Burke being Mrs. Ziegfeld in private life. An invitation was extended to the members of the company to attend the Monday matinee, and more than sixty took advantage to see the wife of the "boss" in pictures. Announcements in the daily papers that the company would visit the theatre naturally crowded the house, and this the week before Christmas, which is usually quiet.

Here's a Big City Smash In a Little One

How Manager Willey of the Colonial, Rochester, N. H., used a 24 sheet for his big decoration and then staged a special prelude to "The Romance of Tarzan"—all in a city of 8,000

"THAT Rothapfel-McCormick stuff in MOTION PICTURE NEWS is fine reading, but it doesn't do us fellows in the small towns any good. They've got the chance in a big city like New York or Indianapolis to do things. The materials are there to work with. What have we got here? There isn't a decent twenty-four sheet stand in town. As for music, we can't afford more than two or three pieces. Besides the town wouldn't know how to appreciate any splash like a big orchestra or these here stage settings and vocal numbers that Rothapfel and McCormick are always using."

The complainant was an exhibitor in Rochester, N. H. His audience was L. L. Willey, part owner and manager of the Colonial Theatre of Rochester.

"Perhaps you're right," answered Willey. "There are eight thousand people here. I wonder what they would do if they saw something that resembled a metropolitan presentation of a special feature production. I wonder"—

"And I'll tell you," interrupted his visitor. "They'd refuse to pay the increased prices you would have to charge to get back your costs. Besides what have you got here in Rochester to work with? Gee whiz, there isn't a scene painter in town. May be Pearl Balfour, who drew that cartoon for the Courier, could draw pictures for a set. I said 'may be.'"

"I was thinking of that," Willey continued. "I've often wondered if we small-town exhibitors are not too much inclined to close our eyes and say 'it can't be done,' without trying to find out if it can be done. We haven't got all of the things that Rothapfel and McCormick have, but they didn't always have a staff of artists, an orchestra leader to work out special scores, a big lobby, a stage equipped with every known mechanical facility, an electrical expert to work out lighting effects, and all that sort of thing. They were 'out in the sticks' themselves once upon a time. Say, I just said something! I'm going to try and give this town an R.-M. show."

"An R.-M. Show"

"What do you mean, an R.-M. show?"

"A real Rothapfel-McCormick presentation of a special feature."

"You'll queer yourself and spend a lot of money for nothing. There's not a thing for you to work with. You've got only six hundred seats. You couldn't begin to cover expenses with that capacity. What'd you charge?"

"I don't know. Depends upon the cost, the film rental, and what I want as a profit. I can figure that out later."

"Aw, you make me tired. Anybody would think this town was just waiting to jump when you snap your fingers. They don't appreciate any special stunts."

"All right, old timer. Perhaps your dope is correct. But any way I am going to satisfy myself. I've booked 'The Romance of Tarzan' for Thursday, December 19. I'm going to apply the R.-M. principle of showmanship to it and see what happens. And hang the expense."

The Colonial theatre is situated at the corner of Main and Arrow Streets in Rochester. Its average daily patronage is approximately the equivalent of one full house, or six hundred admissions. The town is eighteen miles northwest of Portsmouth, and has for its chief commercial activities the manufacture of woolen goods, boots, shoes and bricks.

Used Aids of the News

Willey's first move in carrying out his intention of actually "presenting" was to spend an entire morning in studying his file of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He read carefully the "Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel" departments in several issues and the S. Barret McCormick "Zero Hour" articles on advertising motion pictures. He made notes as he read and studied of the things he proposed to do to

"R.-M." the Tarzan sequel. When he had finished his list contained twelve items. The following is an exact copy of the original:

"Three weeks' advance advertising.

"Special ad copy for the 'Vest Pocket' Monthly Program for the Colonial.

"An order to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange in Boston for a special supply of posters, slides and photographs.

"Three home made slides to run one week in advance of showing and to be alternated with stock slides from the exchange.

"One dozen specially painted window cards for local display.

"A street parade with men dressed as sailors, a tiger, a lion and an ape.

"House to house distribution of special heralds and bills two days before the showing. Distribution in shops, factories and stores the day of the showing.

"A band concert in front of the theatre at 6:30 as the announcement of the beginning of the night show.

"A prologue at 7 o'clock, with a specially written descriptive overture to follow the dialogue and action written by myself.

"The Romance of Tarzan" with an eight-piece orchestral accompaniment.

"A twenty-four-sheet stand in front of the theatre."

That made twelve things Willey was to do to test his theory that the "R.-M." methods of presenting pictures can be adapted to small towns if the exhibitors are capable of modifications necessary to the difference in facilities available.

Got Half the Front Page

Willey's next step was to go to the office of the Rochester Courier.

"I want to run a half-page ad on the first page," he said.

"Can't be done," the advertising department told him. "Every inch of space we can devote to advertising on the first page is under contract to the merchants. And they use it every week."

"All right," said Willey. "I'll be back in a little while and sign the order for that half-page position."

True to his word in thirty minutes he returned.

"Here's a form of space release signed by every merchant who has a contract for front-page position," he said. "They're going to loan their space to me."

"How did you do it?" gaped the advertising department.

"Told them about the fine show I was going to put on. Said I had to have this space to advertise it, or I couldn't get enough business to make it pay me. Told them I'd have to use their space or cancel the show. And they want to see the show."

With this safely arranged for, and realizing the effect it would have on the Courier's readers to see a half-page ad—the largest ever used in that paper with a front-page position to announce a feature production—Willey felt that things really could be done if only they were attempted. Encouraged he plunged headlong in the problem of stage setting, prologue, band concert and special music for the overture and the picture. He sought the leader of the local band.

Engaged an Orchestra

"I want to engage twelve of the twenty musicians in the band," he explained. "A dozen will make just as much noise and music as twenty, and I can save the extra cost for the entire band."

"Which ones do you want?" asked the leader.

"I want the best of the twenty. You make the selections. There's to be a band concert in front of the Colonial at 6:30 on Thursday night, December 19."

"Gee, that'll be great! Can I ask the wife and kids to come down? We haven't had a public band concert in months."

Then came the difficulties of selecting the cast for the prologue and equipping them with costumes. This looked like an impossible task.

"I'll bet Rothapfel or McCormick could do it," Willey decided, "and there's no reason why I can't. There is some way. It's up to me to find it."

Making the Best of It

The sailors' costumes were imported from Portsmouth. The savages were garbed in woolen union suits, darkened with applications of brown paint, while the local board of censors was eliminated from consideration by the judicious use of platted grass and shredded cornstalks suspended from their waists in lieu of loin clothes.

The lion skin was an overalls and jumper cleverly sewn together and painted. The lion's head was built and painted by Willey. He also supervised the creation of the tiger and ape.

Tarzan was played by the biggest man Willey could find in town. With a lot of persevering search he unearthed a long-haired wig for the ape man, and the rest of the costume was easy. The girl was attired in modern dress.

Then came the stage setting, and with it the lighting problem. Willey had previously painted twelve special display cards which he had placed in windows of the leading retail stores. After purchasing additional brushes at a hardware store, he created a back drop, painting in a mountain range with a lake on the foreground.

"I was a little bit doubtful about the costumes for the characters in the prologue, particularly of the effect under a full lighted stage. So I decided that dimmers were not only an act of wisdom, but essential to give the proper effect. I called in a local electrician to assist me in wiring for the additional lighting effects I wanted."

What the "Talking" Did

December 19 finally arrived. The half-page ad appeared in the Courier for December 13. The "hoodoo" number didn't worry Willey in the least in any possible relation to the effect of the copy. The parade was held just at dusk, with the twelve-piece band in the lead in the march through the business district and principal residential streets. Then came the band concert at 6:30, with the streets in front of the Colonial jammed with curious people. It was a typical old-time minstrel stunt and it worked as perfectly and thoroughly as the first time it was ever tried by Lew. Dockstader or Primrose and Thatcher. The unusual costumes of the characters in the prologue helped to intensify the curiosity. Directly over the lobby, and well illuminated, was the twenty-four sheet stand.

The matinee business had returned a gross of $89, at 11 and 15 cents. The night price had been raised from 18 cents to 28 cents. It was evident to Willey that the matinee patrons had been talking during the supper hour.

At exactly 7 o'clock every one of the six hundred seats was occupied, and there was a crowd out in front which could fill the house twice more. And then the prologue began. On the twenty-four foot stage, with twelve feet of depth, this is what Exhibitor Willey produced as the prologue:

"Stage dark; Tarzan is awakened by a lion's roar in the distance. Then a rumble of thunder, followed by lightning. Animals run about on stage as storm is at its height (use real water from a pipe perforated with small holes, catching water in an oiled cloth stretched on stage). Tarzan fights with the lion and kills him. It stops raining and the moon rises on back drop. Tarzan hears his love calling (introduced a song here sung off stage by a feminine voice). The cannibals rush across stage to right exit, seize girl and drag her to center. Tarzan fights with one of the big blacks and slays him. The second cannibal flees in terror. Two sailors enter and give chase to him. The girl runs to Tarzan's arms. Stage dims out and picture is projected. Note—By using dimmed stage it took off the crudeness of the animals."

Yuletide Novelty at the Circle Put in a Quaint Old English Setting

By Davis Hampton

THE silver song of Christmas morning chimes floating out as though from lofty spires and answered by the mellow voices of a distant brass quartette softly playing "Holy Night," with a quaint, little old English setting with its wayside inn and snow-covered street and buildings, and the gently falling snow making the old fashioned street lights seem to blink was the introduction to "Ye Merry Yuletide Voices," the Circle theatre's Christmas week novelty produced by S. Barrett McCormick.

The production introduced a double quartette of mixed voices in the songs and carols of Christmas time. The old town watchman with flickering lantern making his nightly rounds, formed the opening picture as the curtain rose on the picturesque screen.

Then in the distance the voices of the first caroler was heard singing, "Good Christian Men Rejoice," and as he made his entrance lights begun to show in the tavern windows and girls peeped out to get a glimpse of the serenader, and join in the songs of gladness. Others came down the roadway.

All were costumed in the period of the latter eighteenth century, and the scene was typical of the Christmas morning carolers of that time. Assembled they sang numerous of the old Christmas songs to the accompaniment of brass quartette and orchestra, while the snow fell softly over them, then as the lights begun to show the breaking of dawn the lone caroler having gathered together a quartette, moved on down the street to continue the serenading and the curtain fell with the woman's voices singing "God Rest You Merrie Gentlemen."

YOUR HOUSE ORGAN

We Are Anxious to See What You Are Doing With It

THERE is a lot of importance attached to house organs or programs and announcements, especially in the smaller cities.

We are going to write some articles about these with a view to standardizing and improving the work—in other words we are going to try to make it easier for you.

We would like to see, if possible, the program or the house organ of every theatre in the United States. Of course that is impossible for many managers will read this, conclude that it is a pretty fair idea and then fail to mail in a copy of the product that they are putting out.

Producers are now willing to do much more than they have been doing in cooperating with you, but they want to know more nearly exactly what you want. They are depending on us to tell them.

So won't you mail us in a copy of your program TODAY? Better still if you put us on your regular mailing list. You may find that it will bring you as much business as the average copy to a patron.

Saenger Amusement Company Holds Annual Banquet

Christmas night the Saenger Amusement Company held its seventh annual banquet in New Orleans, it being attended by the various officials of the company and its representatives in Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi and Florida, where the company controls about fifty theatres. Speeches were made by E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager, and various other officials. One sad event of the past years, the death of D. L. Cornelius, manager of the Strand in New Orleans, was recalled.

logue satisfied Willey that Rochesterians were mentally equipped to appreciate an R.-M. show. It had won great approbation at the matinees, but nothing to compare with the pleasure manifested by the night audience.

The eight-piece orchestra, especially selected and engaged for the occasion, played through the score which Willey had prepared.

"I used a violin, cello, flute, cornet, clarinet, trombone, piano and drums as the best combination for the musical effects I wanted," he explained.

The results of his effort are best told by Mr. Willey himself:

"The Romance of Tarzan' went on after an atmosphere had been created for it. The audiences seemed to take a deeper interest in the picture than in any I have previously shown. The orchestra played well and the novelty of eight pieces won a lot of comment.

"All in all, I have satisfied myself that an exhibitor, even in a town of eight thousand inhabitants, can put on R.-M. shows not once, but repeatedly, if only he uses a little originality and has the courage and energy to make the best of what he has to work with.

"At the bottom of my list of twelve ideas for this R.-M. performance I have added the strongest endorsement their principles of showmanship can have, whether they are practiced in New York, Indianapolis, Rochester, N. H., or Dundee, Ill.

"The thirteenth item on my list reads: 'Record breaking business. Paid admissions 1,871. Almost fifty per cent more than any average special feature day. Production splendid. Weather good. Remarks—Re—sults M—agnificent.'

"Wanted for Murder" Brings Response from Kansas

How far it is possible for a "stunt" campaign to go is shown by a story that has just been printed in the New York Herald. Readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS will recall that two weeks ago we printed a full account of the manner in which Maurice A. Kashin exploited "Wanted for Murder," which he showed for a week at the Broadway. A portion of this campaign consisted of posters on the order of those usually used in offering rewards for criminals, and under the caption "Wanted for Murder" there was given a description of the kaiser.

And now he has been heard from in Kansas "going south." The Herald has received this letter from J. W. Duree, rural free delivery box 74, Perry, Kan.:

"Editor of 'New York Herald':
"Dear Sir—A man answering to this description stayed all night at our house just a week before Thanksgiving. He was going through the country begging for money. And all we got out of him was that he was going South. He said he was sixty-two years old, and talked Irish. Please turn this over to the proper authorities.

"Very truly,

Goldwyn Gets "Border Legion"

Production Stars Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth in Zane Grey Story—Western Drama of Action

EXHIBITORS who have had success with special productions released through Goldwyn should learn with interest that Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has acquired rights to "The Border Legion," made by T. Hays Hunter from the story by Zane Grey. In it Blanche Bates, one of America's stars of the stage, makes her screen bow. The production stars her and Hobart Bosworth, long a distinguished figure on the screen.

"The Border Legion" is said to be a photoplay masterpiece of action, brilliantly done by a cast of artists of the first water. New York praised it recently on its premiere presentation at the Strand theatre, the press and public being a unit in commending "The Border Legion."

It is not a war picture, as Zane Grey's followers are aware, but a western drama that should appeal to every class of picturegoer—a true-to-life reproduction of incidents in the Rocky Mountain region when bandits held full sway. Mining camps in full swing, lairs of the bandits and the homes and ranches they prey upon—all have a place in "The Border Legion."

But through the smoke of battle between the outlaws and law-abiding citizens there runs a tale of love and romance in which Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth show at their best, the performance of the stage star recalling her portrayal in "The Girl of the Golden West," which first won her public approbation as a Belasco star.

Miss Bates shares honors with Bosworth, with Eugene Strong, Russell Simpson, Horace Morgan, all of whom show a profound knowledge of the rugged West as Zane Grey pictured it. Prominent among the scenes that make "The Border Legion" stand out is the sensational hold-up of a pony express carrying a fortune in the metal that men fought and died for in the days of '49. Nothing more realistic has ever been photographed for the screen, Goldwyn claims.

Vieing with that incident is the mad dash of Blanche Bates and the sweetheart she has redeemed to escape from the border legion, a band of outlaws which has claimed both of them as its own. In their flight on horseback Eugene Strong, the sweetheart, falls from his steed and tumbles down an embankment. Here Miss Bates performs the perilous feat of crawling down the gulch and helping her companion to clamber to the roadway, 150 feet above.

Nazimova Busy Filming "The Red Lantern"

Nazimova has finished the mission scenes in the newest Nazimova Production, "The Red Lantern," in which the Russian star is presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger.

The colossal Chinese production now being filmed at the Nazimova studios in Hollywood is the story of an Eurasian girl's supreme sacrifice, limned against a background of the Boxer uprising in Peking in August, 1900, which was quelled by Allied military forces.

Albert Capellani is directing the production and collaborated with June Mathis in adapting Edith Wherry's novel to the screen.

World Releases New Kinograms Series

It was announced this week by World Pictures that Kinograms, a twice-a-week news reel, will begin circulation February 1. This new screen reel, it is said, will be produced by the newly organized Kinogram Publishing Corporation and will be distributed through the exchange system of World Film Corporation.

Kinograms is announced by its producers and distributors as a reel to carry news and features of international scope and interest, built upon a policy of quality production aimed at service to the higher class theatres. The camera staff of Kinograms has representatives in all important centres and a number of men on special missions in the United States.

Important foreign connections of established trade significance are already available to Kinograms through Charles Urban, who is a director of the Kinogram Publishing Corporation. Mr. Urban has put at the disposal of the company his entire foreign organization, which is of twenty-three years' standing and reaching to every corner of the globe. The distributor is represented in the official list of the new concern by Ricord Gradwell, one of the directors.

The editorial staff of Kinograms is headed by Ray L. Hall; Terry Ramsaye is associate editor. Charles Urban, of the corporation, will, of course, contribute his skill and craftsmanship in pictures in the make-up of Kinograms. He will work in close association with Mr. Hall and Mr. Ramsaye.

"Kinograms begins with a remarkable array of film sources and an editorial staff which seems to us to be a guaranty of superior quality and consistent sustained merit," observed Mr. Gradwell, vice-president, who is especially concerned with the work of distribution and relations with the theatre customers of the new release.

William Fox Tells of Double Business

How a Series of Productions Grew Out of a Social Discussion
About the Motion Picture Industry—Nine Features
Leaped Out in the Lead

“THE best way to ascertain whether an exhibitor had a satisfactory breakfast,” said an official of the Fox Film Corporation this week to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, “is to ask: ‘How’s business?’”

The answer in nine cases out of ten, according to the Fox official, reflects more strongly the condition of digestion than of the actual business situation.

And it was this that led the Motion Picture News representative into a conversation that told how a social discussion of early successes suggested to Mr. Fox the idea of having a record compiled of his productions that had been successful at the box office.

Business Picking Up

“How’s business?” always is a question any way, of today, or this week, or this month. It does not indicate progress, or the lack of it.

To accomplish that purpose, perspective must be obtained. The way to discover whether progress is being made is to compare present conditions, for instance, with those of two or three years ago.

As applied to motion pictures, such a comparison will show that business has more than doubled. This fact has been very strikingly illustrated recently in the course of an investigation made by William Fox in connection with releases of pictures on which Mr. Fox founded his present business.

A social discussion of early successes suggested to Mr. Fox the idea of having a record compiled of his productions that had been most successful at the box office. Figures, of course, were not available on exhibitors’ profits, but there were various ways, from the producers’ books, of determining just which pictures the exhibitor had found most generally profitable.

It was the intention at the outset merely to determine accurately what type of pictures had been most profitable to every one concerned—to make a concrete analysis from business experience of the big winners—with a view to the possible establishment of definite guiding principles. Analytical work of this sort is in progress all the time, of course, in big producing organizations; and while some of it fails to develop concrete facts, a great deal of it does result in benefit both to producers and to exhibitors.

Nine in the Lead

An analysis of the data prepared for Mr. Fox showed that nine productions were manifest leaders among those released in the earlier period of his business career. These nine stood out unmistakably—every one had been a winner wherever it had been shown. Repeat bookings and extension of dates proved this conclusively.

Naturally, from this study grew the suggestion that these nine productions be revised, re-printed and again offered to exhibitors. They included some of the best dramatic work of stars who since have won international reputation. They were pictures that could not be duplicated today for less than a million dollars, but which, because all the costly preliminary work had been done, and that cost returned with interest, could now be released at prices which would insure big profits to exhibitors.

Then, some one raised the question about the number of persons who had seen the pictures. And out of a careful study of the situation came the fact that the productions, although already big winners, would be virtually new pictures to a large part of the average audience of the exhibitor today.

The facts, as shown by careful investigation, were thus summarized in a statement which Mr. Fox issued to his associates and the managers of his branch offices:

Old Pictures Now New

“In two years motion picture audiences in this country have increased 100 per cent, so that today pictures which were released two years ago are entirely new to fifty per cent of the theatregoers.”

This estimate, of course, is conservative, because it is based on the presumption that all of those who attended motion picture theatres two years ago saw these nine productions. But exhibitors will concede that no picture ever is seen in an ordinary engagement by 100 per cent of the theatre-going public.

Out of this study and analysis of trade conditions several years ago has come “The Great Nine,” pictures said to be the most compact and thoroughly revised series ever put on the market. A complete staff of trained workers, it is claimed, has been engaged for nearly six months in re-editing the films.

The series includes three pictures each featuring Theda Bara and William Farnum, one featuring Valeska Suratt and two having all-star casts.

The features are released weekly, but on a group basis, commencing with William Farnum in “Fighting Blood.” Second is Theda Bara in “The Serpent,” considered by many her greatest picture. Third is R. A. Walsh’s “Regeneration”; fourth, William Farnum in “The Broken Law”; fifth, Theda Bara in “Under Two Flags”; sixth, “Infidelity”; seventh, Valeska Suratt in “The Soul of Broadway”; eighth, Theda Bara in “The Darling of Paris”; ninth, William Farnum in “Hoodman Blind.”

These features are re-edited, shortened to 4,500 feet and newly printed. They are in reality, the Fox office announces, 1919 editions of the greatest demonstrated film successes. It is felt that older patrons will flock to them because of their known and recognized value, and that thousands who never have seen them will applaud their showing at this time.

Harry Garson to Shuttle Back East Again

After witnessing the premiere of the Garson-Neilan production, starring Blanche Sweet in “The Unpardonable Sin,” at Clune’s Auditorium in Los Angeles, Harry Garson will again cross the American continent for the East.

The ten-reel production of “The Unpardonable Sin” will then have its New York premiere probably early in February.

Several New York theatres have been under consideration by Mr. Garson for some time, but he has not as yet made his choice, it is said.

While in Los Angeles during January, Mr. Garson will give a great deal of his time and attention to the preliminary work of building the new studio, which is expected to be completed this spring.

May Allison Finishes Her “Peggy” Picture

May Allison has finished work in her newest starring vehicle, “Peggy Does Her Darndest,” in which she was directed by George D. Baker under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general, at Metro’s west coast studios in Hollywood.

“Peggy Does Her Darndest,” which follows “In For Thirty Days” and “Her Inspiration,” was adapted by Director Baker from the Red Book story by Royal Brown and photographed by William E. Fildew.

What the General Public Wants

William L. Sherry Gives His Opinion

WHAT is to be the future trend of motion picture production, speaking in the more or less immediate sense?

I confess a certain diffidence in discussing this aspect of the picture industry, for the more intimately one becomes associated with film production and distribution, the less inclined one becomes to dogmatic preachment concerning its whys and wherefores.

My views, therefore, as to the probable trend of public demand in pictorial drama for the coming year are given merely for what they are worth as opinions of an individual intimately associated with the industry, whose interest it is to observe the signs of the times as accurately as may be.

To begin with I think there is no dearth of good dramatic material on the market, and that the complaint we hear of a scarcity of worthy scripts is due rather to the narrowness of the channel through which such offerings are forced by preconception and prejudice on the part of producers and directors than to any general inutility of the material offered. I do not refer in this to the volunteer contributor whose name is legion and whose product is for the most part of doubtful value, but to that great and growing class of professional writers for the screen whose more intimate mixing in the councils of the producers is essential, in my belief, to the sound development of film drama.

For the present at least, and I think for a long time to come, we have done with the war plot and its inevitables of spy, diplomatic intrigue, Red Cross nurse and gunpowder. The American people have had the war brought to their own doors in severe actuality and today we have with us too many thousands of wounded and crippled men who fought the nation's battles in France, to find much glamor in fictional presentments of such great events as Cantigny, Chateau Thierry or the other bloody fields of France and Flanders on which Americans fought and died.

In fact, not only is the war drama passé but picture fans are more and more inclined to look askance at the pictorially tragic in whatever guise. The heartrending story will always maintain a certain vogue, I take it, since a large element in the population is wont to take its pleasures sadly, but if I am any judge of the immediate need of the studio it is for comedy drama of the sort that depends for its appeal upon natural strong situation and plot complication rather than upon any mechanical claptrap.

We in this country are in the throes of a tremendous nervous reaction following the Hohenzollern holocaust. We have scrimped and saved and worried and wondered at the amazing intrigues of our enemies on and off the screen. The national revulsion is toward a lighter, happier vein. We have been surfeited with sadness. Now we crave something that will set us laughing.

So it strikes me that the producer who is fortunate enough to procure comedy-drama, of the sort that moves in swift transition from grave to gay, will find himself for some time in a position to tickle the public palate most profitably.

The present tendency toward pictorial presentment of famous books and plays of the talking stage is one that has certain distinct drawbacks. There are so many instances in which the interest of a popular book depends almost wholly on its dialogue, and in which actual dramatic situation and climax are quite rare, at least from the pictorial viewpoint.

The resultant picture play is too often utterly alien to the book story, its connection therewith being confined to the title and author's name, which carry with them undeniable advertising value, but which do not compensate for the disappointment, not to say disgust of those, who, being familiar with the book story are quite unable to follow its pictorial version.

I am reminded, in this connection, of two recent instances in which large sums of money were paid by producing corporations for the rights to a pair of popular novels. These, having been duly done into scenarios by high-priced writers at an additional heavy cost, at last found their way into the hands of directors who began production with misgivings that proved quite justified.

These unfortunate directors found themselves confronted with the necessity for improvising practically every situation right on the studio floor—situations, forced and unnatural from the very method of their creation—having nothing to do with the book story. In fact they destroyed whatever original resemblance to the book may have existed in the scenario writer's manu-

Commerce Department Thanks Universal

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department, Universal, is in receipt of a letter from the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., thanking him for his co-operation with that department in stimulating a demand in foreign countries for American-made goods. The letter in part follows:

"We will turn our entire organization over to you to help in your work of acquainting other countries with American-made goods and manufacturing methods through motion pictures." Mr. Levey pointed out that Canada had successfully employed the screen in calling attention to the Dominion's great resources and predicted that shortly after peace was officially certified the motion picture will be used by all the great manufacturing countries to promote the sale of their wares. He emphasized that the United States, the home of the motion picture, should at once take steps to exploit our export products. He said that Universal's industrial department has for months been working along these lines with this contingency in view, and replied that he would be glad to place Universal's fund of special knowledge and other resources at the disposal of Washington.

"Sis Hopkins" Rings True to Life

An old-fashioned country store plays a prominent part in "Sis Hopkins," the Goldwyn picture, starring Mabel Normand. It is such an emporium as can be found nowadays only in the smallest villages, and it is such a place that New Harmony is.

Down to the smallest detail, the store is a replica of the kind everyone knows. Hams and gingham, soap and shoes, mackerel and bay rum crowd the shelves and floor. Needless to say, a large stock of stick candy, lollipops and molasses "kisses" are in the glass showcases. Miss Normand said that not since "Joan of Plattsburg" had she enjoyed herself so much. Most people remember the army canteen, around which important scenes in the comedy-drama were played. And the same thing happened to the stock of sweets in "Sis Hopkins" that befell other candies in the former play.

Director Clarence G. Badger and his assistant had their hands full—or rather, Miss Normand had her hands full—of candy.

script. It is needless to say that both productions are foredoomed to failure in case they are ever released, which I regard as unlikely contingency, because previews have made the fact evident that they are as empty of merit as a brace of addled eggs.

To insure a greater measure of certainty in the success of film plays it seems to me that greater care must be exercised in the future in selecting vehicles. Spending large sums of money on the production of books and plays that do not possess intrinsic picturability, merely to make available the name and fame of the author, is a folly that has been too frequently perpetrated.

Jas. V. Bryson Returns to Minneapolis Universal

James V. Bryson has just returned to the Minneapolis Universal exchange as manager after an absence of several years, during which time he has been in the theatre equipment business and in the state rights field.

Mr. Bryson was Universal's first manager at Minneapolis in the days when competition in the film business was as scarce as a moderate salaried star nowadays, and there are few men who have a larger acquaintance among Northwest exhibitors than the incoming executive.

After leaving the Minneapolis exchange three years ago Mr. Bryson became manager of the Los Angeles Universal office, returning to the Flour City a year later to take over the Northwest Theatre Equipment Co., in which he had a financial interest.

After conducting this business for a year Mr. Bryson sold his interest to the United Theatre Equipment Co. and entered the state rights field with "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Brabin Works on New Wm. Fox Picture

Charles Brabin, in point of service one of the oldest directors in the field today, is at present working on a Fox picture from one of his own stories. It is described as resembling in some ways his three-reel Edison picture, "The Stoning," which caused much favorable comment at the time of its release several years ago.

Mr. Brabin's long experience in the field of picture production has established him as one of the most reliable directors of the day. Critics pointed out that his two most recent features, "Buchanan's Wife," with Virginia Pearson, and "The Poor Rich Man," with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne, were endowed with productions of a distinctly superior order apart from whatever merit their stories possessed.

H. H. Hicks, Manager of the Select Offices at Cincinnati, and Albert W. Eden, appointed to the Branch at Seattle, Wash.

Select Makes Exchange Shifts

Harry H. Hicks Transferred from Seattle to Cincinnati—Albert Eden Goes to the West—Business Bigger

TWO changes in its sales force are chronicled in the announcement by Select Pictures Corporation of the transfer of Harry H. Hicks, until recently branch executive in the Seattle territory, to be manager of Select's Cincinnati's branch, and the concurrent announcement that Albert W. Eden has become Select's branch manager at Seattle.

Mr. Hicks' assumption of the management of the Cincinnati territory marks one more advance in the rapid progress which has been made by this young branch executive ever since he cast his lot with Select, at the organization of that corporation. Mr. Hicks started, at the beginning, as manager of Select's Los Angeles branch. A few months later he was in control of the more important San Francisco exchange. Last October he took another step forward and another trip northward on the Pacific Coast and established headquarters in Seattle, with control of the large Seattle territory.

Now Mr. Hicks has advanced again and has been given the administration of the large and rich territory of which Cincinnati is the administrative center. Select's business in Cincinnati is in a most promising condition, and the nomination of Mr. Hicks to be Select's manager at that post is in the nature of another promotion for this man, who in scarcely eighteen months has earned these several promotions with Select.

Pending his arrival at Cincinnati shortly after the New Year, Mr. Hicks is making a brief visit to the home office, having arrived in New York for a series of conferences with General Manager Arthur S. Kane. Select officials feel that Harry Hicks will make as brilliant a success of the Cincinnati territory as he has of the three Pacific Coast branches over which he has previously had charge.

In Albert W. Eden, who has assumed management of the Seattle office, Select feels that it has obtained one of the most valuable men who has ever specialized in Pacific Coast salesmanship. For the past four years, and up to the time of his joining the Select forces, Mr. Eden has been with Fox Film Corporation, and latterly has rolled up a splendid record as that firm's branch manager for the Pacific Northwest.

Changes Announced in Pathe Sales Forces

S. C. Jacques is now manager of the Pathe Cincinnati exchange, succeeding the late F. B. Chase, who was a victim of influenza.

Mr. Jacques was promoted from the ranks. Before his promotion he was city salesman in Pathe's Cincinnati exchange, receiving his training under both Mr. Wessling, formerly the exchange manager and now district manager, and Mr. Chase. His appointment as manager is in line with Mr. Brunet's policy of advancement for those men in the Pathe organization.

Paul H. Tessier, who started in the Pathe organization as a salesman with the Cincinnati branch and was afterward manager of the Pathe Albany office, is back with Pathe after several months with another company, and is now in the Cleveland exchange.

Third Perret-Cassinelli Picture Finished

The third Perret Production, starring Dolores Cassinelli, has just been completed and has been named "A Soul Adrift."

It was produced under the supervision of Leonce Perret and was directed by Mme. Alice Blache, who has announced that she will at once commence the cutting and titling of the production.

Universal Sends James J. Corbett to Coast

JAMES J. CORBETT, Universal's new star, has started a westward movement among the big U's film players and executives by leaving for California studios Sunday, Dec. 29.

Mr. Corbett, accompanied by his wife, left New York on the Twentieth Century Sunday last and arriving at Universal City on Jan. 6 he will begin work on a serial immediately. To date the title for the Corbett serial has not been decided upon, nor has the star's director or his leading woman as yet been chosen, but these details will be completed before Mr. Corbett's arrival on the production lot.

In speaking of Mr. Corbett's serial Universal executives have secured an unusual story and have added many touches that will provide the well-known dramatic star and boxer with plenty to do for about eighteen weeks. Universalites believe that in Mr. Corbett they not only have a star whose reputation is world wide, but a man of physical fitness and dramatic talents well known, and who will have to learn but little in order to do his best work before the camera. Mr. Corbett has been a Broadway theatrical star for over a score of years and has had some exceptional vehicles, including George Bernard Shaw's play, "Cashiel Byron's Profession." Mr. Corbett has played in stock, in drama, light drama, comedy and musical comedy productions on the stage in addition to acting in vaudeville, and his nickname "Gentleman Jim" is as much used in Australia, Europe and Africa as it is in America, where his personal acquaintances number many thousands.

According to Mr. Corbett his one great ambition in the film field is to provide photoplay fans with some athletic stunts that are new, scientific and plausible. Universal executives maintain that the serial Mr. Corbett is to be featured in will give him ample opportunity to use the skill that has made him the greatest exponent of self-defense and of boxing the world has known.

Pathe's Patriotic Serial in Washington

"Wolves of Kultur," Pathe's patriotic serial, is doing good business in Washington, D. C., according to reports made by E. R. Champion, Pathe's branch manager there. Mr. Champion paid a visit to the New Offices of the Pathe last week and reported most encouragingly on the success of the serial in the Capital City. The thirteenth episode of "Wolves of Kultur"—"The Huns' Death Trap"—is scheduled for release January 5th.

Miss Talmadge Gets New Press Agent

Beulah Livingstone, well known in the ranks of women press agents within the motion picture industry, has succeeded Frank V. Bruner as press representative of the Norma Talmadge Company. She assumed her new duties January 1, making her headquarters at the Talmadge studio at 318 East Forty-eighth street, New York.

Miss Livingstone's most recent connection was as personal representative of Olga Petrova.

Chattanooga Books Anita Stewart Film

Frank H. Dowler, Jr., general manager of the Signal Amusement Company at Chattanooga, Tenn., has the distinction of being the first exhibitor in Kentucky and Tennessee to run "Virtuous Wives," with Anita Stewart as the star. He has secured the picture for the week of Dec. 29, the release date.

Tony Sudekum, head of the Crescent Amusement Company in Nashville, was so impressed with the "Broadside" sent out by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the trade, that he ordered a supply of them for his patrons.

C. C. Stewart, Manager of Octagon Films

C. C. Stewart has been appointed general manager of the Octagon Films, Inc., which is handling B. A. Rolfe's serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini. Mr. Stewart has been house manager of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, since their opening. Prior to that time he was manager of the Knickerbocker and the Princess theatres.

Hamilton Brings Films to New York

Gilbert P. Hamilton, of Hamilton and Kern, motion picture specialists of the West Coast, was in New York last week at the Hotel Astor, having brought to the metropolis two productions for the market.

One of the features is a five-reel Western, with Ben Wilson in the chief role. In the cast are Neva Gerber, Rosemary Theby, Murdock McQuarrie, George Nichols and others. It was directed by Ray Clements.

The other picture is a feature starring Neal Hart, one of the most popular of Western types. Hart is generally referred to as a "college bred cowboy" who has been through the mill from start to finish, and lives the parts for which he is cast.

An announcement concerning the star reads:

"There is hardly a man in pictures who has had a more interesting career than Neal Hart. During the Spanish-American War he served on the U. S. cruiser Panther. Later he acted as guide for the professors of the Smithsonian Institute of Washington, D. C., during the exploration of the Spanish Diggins country in Wyoming.

"Neal Hart went into the pictures for the love of the work, and, with his knowledge of the West, it wasn't long before the managers realized this very essential necessity in the production of Western pictures.

"Neal Hart is one of the really Western men who put the real West into Western pictures."

Forrest Stanley Returns to Screen

Forrest Stanley, who formerly appeared on the screen as a Paramount star in Morosco-Pallas subjects, and who portrayed the leading male role in "The Bird of Paradise" on the stage, will return to the screen under the Paramount banner. Mr. Stanley has been appearing on the stage for the past two years. He has been engaged to play opposite Shirley Mason in her second Paramount picture directed by Walter Edwards.

Brunet's Plans for News Reels

Paul Brunet, President of Pathe, Outlines Plans for "The Eyes of the World"—The News Reel

Helene Chadwick in Pathe's "Caleb Piper's Girl"

PAUL BRUNET, president of Pathe, gives in the following interview an interesting history of the News Reel and tells of Pathe's plans along these lines for the coming year:

"Some of the biggest chapters in the history of nations will be written in Europe during the coming year and to accurately and adequately record them Pathe has completed and has now in operation a plan which will leave no important detail unrecorded by the camera in the service of the Pathe News. Our field organization in the Orient has been augmented and some of the best men of the service have been detailed there to perfect the general plan.

"South America has been covered from the Isthmus of Panama to the Straits of Magellan. And with the exclusively organized Pathe service in the United States and Canada, there is no portion of the habitable globe the eyes of the Pathe News cameras will not see.

"When the Pathe Journal was started in France twelve years ago, wide-visioned men saw at once that here was a strong and disseminating medium that must have a tremendous influence on the future.

"Charles Pathe has taken a plaything and made it one of the great forces of the world. And I firmly advance the prophecy that, in years to come the news-cinema will be a world medium, speaking in a universal tongue and appealing to and instructing hundreds of millions of men.

"France has the Pathe Journal, England has the Gazette, Italy the Journal and the United States and Canada the Pathe News, which started August 1, 1911, as the Pathe Weekly. When four years ago it was changed to a daily, it became the Pathe News. The first issue of the news cinema as a regular, fixed service was the Pathe Gazette in England in 1908. The Pathe Weekly, later the News, was the first organized news cinema in America and was started on August 1, 1911. No one who has talked with exhibitors in all parts of the country can fail to recognize the prestige the Pathe News has and the general recognition of its interest and high quality. The prestige that has impressed the entire business steadily has increased since the very beginning of the Pathe news cinema.

"At the outbreak of the war many of the foreign cameramen of Pathe were mobilized, including Mr. Machin, formerly photographic reporter of 'L'Illustration'; Messrs. Maes and Richman, respectively manager and assistant manager of the French Pathe Journal, and makers of the first news reel that was ever shown in the world; Mr. Stucker, who is one of the oldest professionals in the taking of pictures. It is he who photographed the first film containing sensational events that ever appeared on the market. Mr. Ercole, who, in the month of August, 1914, was sent to Russia by Pathe, and Sergeant Camille Legrand, another of the experts detailed to the Orient, who recently passed through New York on his way eastward, is on Pathe's list.

"Here in the United States and Canada the Pathe News is represented by as capable men, trained by long service in covering big happenings. The dean of them is Albert Richard, who has been with Pathe News from the beginning. The coming year to Pathe News in America will be one of both good cheer and promise and confidence of new and wider achievement."

Comedy Prevails in Goldwyn "Oh, Johnny"

Comedy and not melodrama is said to be the prevailing note of "Oh, Johnny!" the Betzwood Film Company's picture, in which Louis Bannison makes his screen debut. It is released through Goldwyn. Even the crooks are said to be not of the sort that are seen in melodrama. They are humorous crooks, who cannot resist giving vent to their comic sense even when they are playing their ubiquitous profession. In short, they are thoroughly Gilbertian thieves.

They have obtained employment at the large country house of the Van Pelt Butlers, who were once well-to-do people, but have become reduced by poverty to all sorts of parasitic devices in order to keep up appearances. They get in by blackmailing the spurious Earl of Barncastle, who is staying at the Butlers' in order to try to marry the pretty and wealthy young niece of the Butlers. In this spurious Earl the crooks recognize a former confederate of theirs, who broke jail in South Africa at the same time they did.

H. J. Klutho advances this as one argument why producers should establish themselves at Jacksonville, only a short way from New York

Florida as a Producing Centre

The Reasons Why, by H. J. Klutho

"BECAUSE producers can retain their offices in New York and yet be in personal contact with their companies in 28 hours. It costs less to produce pictures in Jacksonville than anywhere else.

"Because studio rents are lower and electricity is less expensive by half than in New York or Los Angeles.

"Because props are less expensive and materials used in a studio cost less.

"As to location—Florida has not even been scratched on the surface. The beauty spots of nature are marvelous and beautiful, but must be located.

"The trouble with Jacksonville has been that most Northern companies have used it as a matter of convenience. It has been a stopping-off place only to be visited in case of emergency. When snow and ice and zero weather has the North in its grip, you producers, all of you, realize you must have outdoor scenes. You have heard of Palm Beach and New Year dips in the brim deep and of the wealth and fashion parading the walks and byways of the east coast of Florida. The director and principal actors see where a little pleasure might be mixed with work; even the "prop" man has visions of mixing with notables—and the company goes to Florida. No preparations made for accommodations of its members except probably its principals, no studio space, no locations, no props, no nothing!

"It is in just such a condition that the company lands in Jacksonville. Jacksonville is the largest city in Florida and is Florida's gateway. In order to go to the east or west coast of Florida you must go through Jacksonville. It has an atmosphere of cosmopolitan life; has fifteen-story office buildings and one-story nigger huts and between that, mostly any kind of a background any story may require. It has large docks and a river wider than the Hudson. Its surrounding country has locations marvelous and beautiful. A clever scenario writer can adjust his story accordingly. In the winter it is crowded with visitors from the North.

"As stated above, the company lands here unprepared. The principals find accommodations at the large hotels, but the smaller fry have to look around for board during the tourist season and accept inferior accommodations. This is discouragement number one.

"Probably the sky is overcast, but it is not anywhere near the freezing point. It is clear enough for good photography. But the sun isn't shining just then—discouragement number two.

"Locations are not to be had on an hour's notice because they have not yet been explored as in Los Angeles, where every location man knows every location. You will have to look for what you want—discouragement number three.

"Extras are not as numerous as in New York or Los Angeles—discouragement number four.

"I could count up a few more, but what's the use? The company becomes discouraged because it wasn't managed right. It didn't land right. No modern business concern would handle business in such a childish manner. A lot of money is spent before the company gets down to business. That is bad isn't it?

"If a company considers coming to Florida it should send an intelligent keen observer, who will gather in all data and make all arrangements so that when the company lands it can be located with comfort. No individual is contented if he hasn't a comfortable place to sleep and eat after a day's labor. I have known of some well known producers and directors, principally directors, fly all to pieces because they could not be accommodated at one of the principal hotels, although no notice was given of their arrival, or if notice was given, it was at the last moment. Another "cussed" out the whole State because a few hours auto ride did not produce for him a location he desired. Another because he couldn't find an overshot water wheel in a flat country, although one could have been constructed at little expense. Another because the sky was overcast the day after he arrived and so on.

"Some few winters ago a few important companies came down and were very disappointed they could not lease an artificially lighted studio. Why should they be? Not one of the large modern companies has ever spent enough money to put up a modern studio, either in or outdoors. They haven't spent one dollar here, whereas millions have been spent in California.

"The few Northern companies that have spent a trifle here many years ago have gone out of business and the studios they did build are mere makeshifts as compared with studios in Los Angeles. We haven't had a Griffith or an Ince. The only people that have put their money in studio accommodations are Jacksonville people with a purpose of investment, of course, but also to give better accommodations to visiting companies and induce them to stay. I have put $50,000 in a studio myself—built a large outdoor stage of unique construction and have a fully equipped Cooper-Hewitt lighted studio. But up to now it has not been appreciated by the Northern companies. Some far-sighted producer will some day realize this, bring his company down for the entire winter months and make pictures for a great deal less money than can possibly be done in New York or Los Angeles.

"Here is a bit of advice to producers. If you want to make pictures with good photography and backgrounds during the winter months, and you want to do it at the least possible expense, some three or four companies get together and spend just one-fourth the amount usually spent on the West Coast, on a few modern studios here; bring your companies down and you will find how soon prop houses, costumers and extras will follow in your trail.

Pathe Salesmen Guests at Dinner

Manager W. E. Raynor and his salesmen of Pathe's New York office were the hosts recently at Reisenweber's to a number of the home office force. Dinner was served.

Branch Manager W. E. Raynor was toastmaster and short talks were given by all of the men from the home office and a number of the New York branch salesmen. The home office men who were present as the guests of the exchange were Vice-President and General Manager Paul Brunet, Sales Manager, Fred C. Quimby, Comptroller W. C. Smith, Tom North, editor of the Pathe Sun, and P. A. Parsons and Frank V. Bruner of the publicity department.

The hosts were W. E. Raynor, branch manager; William Marsh, cashier; A. S. Abeles, representing the Hodkinson Features; John Dacey, Leo Braun, R. W. Horn, Harry Lyons, J. W. Weinberg, Max Westebbe, William Westfeldt, Bert Sanford, Milton Kronacher, Jack Sokoloff and B. F. Johnson of the Pathe sales force and William Hollander and Mark Nathan of the American.

The occasion was in celebration of the success of the Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider."

Long Run for Theda Bara Production

M. A. Walsh, Los Angeles, manager for William Fox, reports that "When a Woman Sins," the Theda Bara super-production, has met with such success during a six days' showing at the Garden Theatre that it has been decided by the management to extend the engagement seven days.

This makes a thirteen days' run for the Theda Bara feature at this Los Angeles house.

Thirteen is going to be a mighty lucky number for the Garden, writes Mr. Walsh, with the box-office returns that he reports are piling in for this attraction.

"The Common Cause" Registers in Chicago

BALBAN & KATZ, proprietors of the big new Riviera Theatre in Chicago have nothing but the highest praise for J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The Common Cause."

Here is their wire on results there, which reached the Vitaphone home office:

"Congratulations on your production 'Common Cause.' We opened at Riviera Theatre December 19 for four days' run. Greatest picture we have yet shown, proving to be biggest success of the season. We welcome more productions equal to this."

Booking orders since then have been pouring into the exchanges in ever-growing proportions, according to Vitaphone officials, the first week easily approximating the expected quota. But in the past week that record has been more than doubled.

The experience of every theatre showing "The Common Cause" is declared to have been similar to that of the Riviera. The New Theatre in Baltimore is one of the many important houses that has just acquired "The Common Cause" rights for several days' showing.

Fundamentally strong in its authorship, with the story the result of collaboration by J. Hartley Manners and Ian Hay Beith, and put in scenario form by Anthony Paul Kelly, "The Common Cause" gave Mr. Blackton a big, timely theme to work with.

In Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer the producer declares he found the ideal leads.

Rumor Speculates Upon Plans of Sherry

There are many rumors anent the forthcoming activities of William L. Sherry as the offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, have taken on an unusually busy appearance.

While Mr. Sherry would not give out any statements anent the plans said to be developing he intimated that he would possibly have an announcement to make within a few weeks.

The Sherry Service is now distributed through all the General Exchanges except in New York City where the Sherry offices handle their features direct.

To mark his second anniversary as a member of the executive office force of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, members of the field force and home office staff presented A. S. Rollo, sales manager, S. T. Stephens, general supervisor, and O. R. Hanson, exchange supervisor. It was a testimonial of confidence from every branch in the organization.

"Salome" Ready for Exhibitors

William Fox Will Release "Salome," Starring Theda Bara, on an Independent Basis to All Exhibitors

FROM the Fox Film Corporation comes the announcement that the big production of "Salome," starring Theda Bara, is now available to all exhibitors on an independent basis and for a rental.

The Fox statement declares that: "This pageant-drama, which we consider the greatest of Miss Bara's feature productions, was shown only last October at the Forty-fourth Street theatre in New York and by special road companies in the principal theatres of other cities.

"Its success was instant and of such proportions as to cause the Fox office to feel that it will be even a bigger gold mine for the local exhibitor than 'Cleopatra.'

"The early release of 'Salome' is due in part to the wish of William Fox to make a New Year's gift to the exhibitors of the country. Following the influenza epidemic and the closing of hostilities, these are unusual times, and Mr. Fox feels that, although a score of road companies were still playing 'Salome' as a special attraction with remarkable returns, the exhibitors should have the advantage of the use of this feature now, rather than at a later date."

The many inquiries as to its date of release and the already fine business of "Salome" as a feature attraction, convinces the Fox office that this early release can go far to make up in box office receipts for the influenza losses of the past two months.

Other features, such as William Farnum's "Les Miserables" and the R. A. Walsh drama of prison reform, "The Honor System," went to the exhibitor after establishing their drawing power in leading dramatic houses of the country; they piled up, and still are piling up, large profits to the exhibitor, according to Fox officials.

This system proved most successful, for the country-wide prestige thus established and the great amount of special advertising it was possible to achieve with increased admission charges brought to the exhibitor capacity houses at double and sometimes triple the old box office prices, it is claimed.

Universal Sends King to Cuban Office

Charles R. King, office manager of the New York Universal exchange the past six months, will leave shortly for Havana, where he will assume charge of the Cuban exchange and theatre, succeeding Mr. Lichtig, who has been transferred to Rio de Janeiro. The need of Mr. King's immediate presence there is urgent and he will leave as soon as he is able to procure his passport and other necessary papers, for the ban on travelling has not been entirely lifted through the signing of the armistice.

The Havana exchange controls all Universal activities in Cuba and Mr. King is planning an extensive campaign in connection with his new duties. His forceful personality will be an asset in this, as will his enthusiasm for this new venture.

This will not be Mr. King's first trip to Cuba. He served in the navy during the Spanish-American war and took part in many of the stirring events which mark that epoch in American history, and to him also goes the distinction of being the first man to raise the American flag on Morro Castle, Havana.

Lumber Camp Story, Lewis' Second Select

MITCHELL LEWIS has commenced his second production as Select Series star on the Select Pictures program. "Children of Banishment" is the title of Mr. Lewis' second Select picture. It is a screen adaptation from Francis William Sullivan's novel of the great outdoors and is under the direction of Noval MacGreggor.

For the locale of "Children of Banishment," Mr. Lewis has selected the site of a lumber company in the Yosemite Valley, which is the only lumber company operating within the limits of the Yosemite National Park Reserve. The only entrance and exit to the camp leads up and down the longest and steepest incline railroad in the world. It is 8,000 feet from the base of the mountain to the camp location. The elevation is more than 3,000 feet, varying at times from 78 to 87 degrees. Before the lumber company would allow Mr. Lewis or the members of his company to use the road they were obliged to sign slips assuming all responsibility in case of accident.

In this primitive lumber camp the actors rise at six in the morning, breakfast at seven in the company cook-house and are on location at eight, in order to make the most of the light on the shortest days of the year.

"Children of Banishment" is said to afford Mr. Lewis a part that surpasses his virile characterization of Poleon in Rex Beach's "The Barrier."

"Silver King," January 12

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it will release the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Silver King," on January 12 instead of Thomas H. Ince's "The False Faces," also a special, which was originally scheduled for that date. The Ince picture will be released in February.

Herbert Brenon Engages Marie Doro

Herbert Brenon, who has been in New York a few weeks completing new production arrangements, has signed Marie Doro for a series of productions, and sailed for England last week to begin work.

This arrangement is termed unique in the history of picture-making, and is due primarily to the rumor that English producers have been pessimistic concerning the possibility of entering successfully the American market, and are said to have offered Mr. Brenon unusual inducements to establish a standard for British pictures.

That Mr. Brenon was able to enlist the services of Miss Doro in the enterprise is due to the fact that she is reported as anxious to break away from the traditions which have surrounded American methods of production.

Also, it is said, she cherishes the warmest regard for England, as her stage successes there have been quite as notable as in America.

Miss Doro has appeared in such successes as "Oliver Twist," "The White Pearl" and "The Wood Nymph," and it was not until Mr. Brenon broached his plan for productions in England that she became again interested in picture art.

Dana's New Role Modern Diana of the Chase

A modern Diana of the chase is Viola Dana in her newest Metro starring vehicle, "Diana Ardway," now under production at the Metro studios in Hollywood, directed by Herbert Blache under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

In the case of this Diana the chase is the pursuit of a man, and Miss Dana shows what a "baby vamp" can do when it comes to winning the love of a playwright who never thought he'd love any woman.

Miss Dana's newest vehicle follows "The Gold Cure," "The Flower of Dusk" and "Opportunity."

"Made in America" in Eight One-Reel Episodes Said to Differ from All Its Predecessors

C. E. Shurtleff, of W. W. Hodkinson, Inc.

ASHLEY MILLER'S "Made in America" picture in eight one-reel instalments is declared by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to be decidedly different. It will be distributed by Hodkinson through the Pathe exchanges and is heralded as presenting the war incidents from an entirely new angle.

"'Made in America' is a story with no little dramatic interest and great historical value," declared a Hodkinson official. "It is the first time that the great achievement of this peace-loving nation which transformed its peaceful millions into a mighty war machine has been shown completely and with continuity of action. We believe that it is the first authoritative motion picture review of the making of the American soldier and the creation of America's armies of liberty.

"In producing this motion picture, Mr. Miller has had the cordial endorsement and co-operation of the Government and it will be preserved at Washington as part of the Government records of the great war.

"Mr. Miller and his staff spent several weeks in one of the largest training camps in the world, where, with the co-operation of the military authorities, he was enabled to follow every phase of the training of the soldier. The special permission of Secretary Baker enabled him to go everywhere, see everything and record incidents with the camera which no motion picture director has ever before filmed.

"Nearly for million American soldiers have passed through the experiences shown so vividly in 'Made in America,' and to each of them it will be a record of his personal experiences. To many millions more of the home folks, 'Made in America' will be a revelation, presenting many angles of camp life and training of which the average civilian has little or no conception.

"'Made in America' tells a story that will never grow old, and time will only increase its value to the American people. There have been many photoplays shown, abounding in battle scenes and carnage. Diplomatic intrigue and German spies have embellished melodramatic plots.

"With 'Made in America' Ashley Miller, one of the foremost moving picture directors in this country, joins the ranks of producers. He has embellished it with his artistry and has produced a series of pictures which are remarkable as examples of the highest types of photoplay art."

Exhibitors-Mutual Offices in New York

GENERAL offices of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation are now on Broadway, New York City.

Forty hours after desks were closed at the old "Mutual" headquarters, 220 South State Street, Chicago, they were reopened and business resumed without interruption at 1,600 Broadway, New York City.

The shift of the executive offices of one of the largest distributing organizations was effected without a hitch, and special express cars moved the office equipment in record time.

It was Saturday noon, December 28th, that business stopped at the Chicago headquarters and at nine o'clock Monday morning, December 30, the offices were reopened and in operation in New York.

Quarters had been arranged in advance on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1,600 Broadway. The Broadway side of the floor will henceforth be the executive offices. The New York exchange is located on the tenth floor of the same building.

Decision to remove the headquarters of the company from Chicago to New York was reached by the new officers of the corporation soon after the reorganization of the Mutual Film Corporation under the name of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation.

The moving of the various departments to New York was effected under the direction of A. S. Kirkpatrick, Assistant General Manager of the company. Mr. Kirkpatrick and his staff of department heads arrived in New York on Sunday.

Prizma Master Pictures Handled by World

After a premier showing at the Rivoli Theatre in New York, Prizma Master Pictures began distributing its product through the exchanges of the World Film Corporation.

S. L. Rothapfel declares that Prizma Pictures has finally reached the goal for which the public has waited. He is quoted as saying that he is gladly paying the highest price he has ever paid for a single reel to give his patrons their first view of what he considers the greatest attainment since the inception of the motion picture art.

The first release is "Eilaues Volcano, the Hell Hole of Hawaii."

Remarkable Year for Tourneur

Producing Director Created Three Special Photoplays During 1918
—Hiller and Wilk Market Productions

UNDAAUNTED by threatening and ominous war conditions, Maurice Tourneur elected early in 1918 to organize Maurice Tourneur Productions.

This was after he had first demonstrated his directing abilities through giving to the screen several productions which were depended upon to give him the proper hold upon the fancies of exhibitors and film fans.

In rapid succession he had directed Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird"; the "Prunella" with Marguerite Clark; the four Elsie Ferguson pictures, "Barbary Sheep," "The Rise of Jenny Cushing," "Rose of the World" and "A Doll's House"; some of Mary Pickford's vehicles, including "A Poor Little Rich Girl," and that melodrama, "The Whip."

These are a few of the big photoplays Maurice Tourneur had created since he came to America early in 1914.

But Mr. Tourneur felt that only as an independent producer could he achieve his ideals. So the Maurice Tourneur Productions was organized.

He decided first to produce the famous Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life." Following out his firm belief in the story and not the star, he gathered around him a cast which was essentially a non-star one. Indeed, he selected two young women, practically unknown, Constance and Faïre Binney, to play the leading feminine roles.

All of which brings to mind the statement that Mr. Tourneur discovered such stars as Vivian Martin, Doris Kenyon and Robert Warwick, and that, under his direction, Elsie Ferguson was launched upon her screen career. Mr. Tourneur is credited with possessing that quality necessary to a great director—the ability to find and develop latent talent.

"Sporting Life" proved to be a success so great that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation broke a precedent and purchased the production for special release. This was considered another proof of the merit of the Tourneur system. Many critics pronounced "Sporting Life" one of the greatest melodramas ever presented on the screen.

From "Sporting Life," Mr. Tourneur turned to an entirely different type of production. Witness his quick shifts from the sex analysis of "Barbary Sheep" to the poetic whimsy of "Prunella," from the symbolism of "The Blue Bird" to the out and out melodrama of "Sporting Life."

"Woman" was Mr. Tourneur's second production. Here the producer was working with an idea that had been developing in his mind for years. But none of the commercial producers had been willing to take a chance with it. Fearlessly the producer went ahead. Briefly, "Woman" traces the development of femininity through the ages, showing her destructive and constructive, her degrading and uplifting influence upon history.

The premiere of "Woman" at the New York Rivoli was declared to be one of the real triumphs of the screen year.

With the premiere of "Woman" Mr. Tourneur decided to release the offering through the open market. Hiller and Wilk treble his productions.

Mr. Tourneur turned to melodrama again and produced the late Jacques Futrelle's romance, "My Lady's Garter" as his third production. The exploitation of this big detective-mystery drama will shortly be launched. However, "My Lady's Garter" is said to be even greater than "Sporting Life."

Upon the recent completion of "My Lady's Garter," Mr. Tourneur decided to go to the coast for the winter. This to gain a bigger canvas upon which to work, for he had always felt limited in the East. Mr. Tourneur took over a portion of the Goldwyn Culver City studios, closed his Fort Lee studios, and departed for the coast with his staff.

Gold Coin M. P. Company Is Formed in New York

A company to produce features from five reels upward has just been formed and incorporated in New York state. M. Resnickoff is president and treasurer, Sidney M. Goldin is vice-president, and M. May is secretary.

The Board of Directors of the new producing corporation includes Frank M. Wandell of Wandell and Wandell, 261 Broadway, New York City, and James A. Farrell of James A. Farrell Real Estate Company, 826 Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn.

Sidney M. Goldin besides being vice-president is also the director-general, and he has produced features for Universal as early as 1913, it is said, when three-reelers were in vogue. Mr. Goldin has been associated with G. M. Anderson and Carl Laemmle, and produced "The Robbers," Schiller's masterpiece.

"Petrosino" and "Bleeding Hearts" are some of his earlier productions which many of the old-time exhibitors may recollect. He will begin his first production for the newly organized Gold Coin Company about February 1, and it is reported that a studio lease has already been secured for a period of three years.

A seven-part drama of psychological and timely interest is heralded as the first production to be offered, and it is reported that two well-known Broadway stars have already been engaged by Mr. Goldin.

President Wilson Selects 8 Bray Subjects

Charles Hart, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, cabled from France this week for eight cartoons from the Bray Studios, Inc. The shipments were ordered to be given immediate attention.

It is announced that these cartoons were ordered after selection by President Wilson, who expressed his desire of showing them to his guests as evidence of the work of America's artists in caricature work for reproduction on the screen.

J. R. Bray, president of Bray Studios, Inc., has made series of cartoons bearing upon the war, and it is said these subjects carry a powerful "punch." The President is said to have chosen eight of these subjects.

Fox to Film in Florida

William Fox announces that the next Theda Bara production will be filmed in Florida. Miss Bara, Director J. Gordon Edwards and the entire company will leave shortly for the South to start work on "Creation's Tears," as the new picture is titled.

The story is by Neje Hopkins, author of "The She-Devil," and the scenario by Adrian Johnson. It has a South Sea Island setting.

Miss Bara will play a princess of one of the islands, and the tale, said to be intensely dramatic, deals with her infatuation for a handsome young missionary.

Goldwyn Rounds Out Frederick Feature

SEVERAL surprises are said to be in store, both for the public and the profession, in the first picture made by Pauline Frederick for the Goldwyn Corporation. The title of the play is not yet announced, but the story is founded on a play by one of the best known and most experienced dramatists in America, a play that was successfully produced on Broadway last September.

The screen version was made by Willard Mack. He also acts an important role in it, the first leading character he has done with Miss Frederick since they were married. It is not the part of the hero, however, as Mr. Mack is essentially a character actor.

While the play is an unusually vivid and swiftly moving drama, full of action and excitement, it does not belong to the ordinary type of screen melodrama. It is a drama of character in that character dominates plot; the most thrilling episodes happen as a direct result of the conflict of the various characters instead of the characters being twisted around mechanically to conform with the exigencies of the plot. In other words, the people in the play are real human beings and not the wire-pulled puppets that sometimes cavort on the screen.

Under the able direction of Hobart Henley work on this picture is now almost completed. The release date and the title will be announced shortly.

Belgian Baby as "Prop"

A Belgian baby is said to be the most important property used in making the story of "Life's a Funny Proposition," William Desmond's latest picture, which was made by Jesse D. Hampton for release through the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Baron Dewitz Establishes Salon Cinemarama

Baron Hrolf Dewitz, Danish regisseur, has installed at 11½ West 37th Street, New York City, what he terms a "Salon Cinemarama."

The "Cinemarama" is heralded as a new type of motion picture, only one of which will be produced annually. This is a new development, according to the Baron, and differs sharply from the commercial form of motion pictures in that all the fine arts are incorporated in the making of it in contradistinction to the so-called factory made picture.

There will be no studio or plant. The Salon will take the place of both studio and plant and also serve as an office. No stars are to be exploited by Baron Dewitz, as he believes that the business of selling stars is fallacious.

The first scenario is ready and is described as a real play of dramatic force interspersed by spectacular effects of a novel and artistic order.

The announced policy of the Salon is not to offer its product for sale. Cinemarama are not made to sell. The Salon will exhibit its product in a manner adequate to its own policies and ideals, according to announcement.

Chas. A. Taylor Finishes State Rights Feature

The big feature which has been under production for several weeks at the Charles A. Taylor studios in Edendale, California, in which Mr. Taylor, the old melodrama man, is presenting a new star as yet unnamed, has been finished, and is now undergoing the final treatment in the cutting room.

It was made for the state rights market.

A national prize contest is just about to be launched, for the purpose of having the public name the "Mystery Girl" who is featured in the production.

A total of $5,000 is to be divided among the winners of the contest.

Film Gets Library Co-operation

Unique Exploitation Among Libraries for "Little Women" Has Achieved Results Says Paramount-Artcraft

RESULTS obtained in the unique co-operative exploitation campaign, conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on behalf of "Little Women," the Paramount-Artcraft Special have been unusually satisfactory, according to a Famous Players-Lasky official.

The thousands of special letters sent to the librarians, school teachers, ministers and others interested in motion pictures, are said to have obtained for the exhibitors showing this photoplay an unusual amount of co-operation, making it one of the most successful box-office attractions released by Paramount-Artcraft in many months.

Although no reply was requested, it is stated that many librarians have notified the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that they would be glad to co-operate in every way possible to make the showing of "Little Women" in their community a great success.

Many of the librarians are said to be offering the use of their bulletin boards to the exhibitors in making announcements of the coming of "Little Women," and are co-operating with the exhibitors in reaching the thousands who have read Louisa M. Alcott's famous story.

The following letter from Mary P. Wiggin, librarian of the Danbury, Conn., Public Library, is described as indicative of the co-operation the libraries are giving the exhibitors as the result of the exploitation campaign:

"We have already put in orders for some new copies of the book in order to meet the demand that the production of the film version is sure to create, and will do all that we can, as a public institution and through personal influence, to arouse interest in the picture. It is certain of success, however, on its own merits."

This letter was written after a consultation with the manager of the Empress theatre of Danbury, with whom the Danbury Library is co-operating.

Henry M. Gill, librarian of the New Orleans Public Library, is another leading librarian who is lending his support to the exploitation campaign launched for "Little Women" by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. His letter is as follows:

"I shall be pleased to give all the library publicity I can to the fact that 'Little Women' will soon be produced as a moving picture. I congratulate you upon the choice of such an excellent subject."

Pathe Adds Luster in St. Louis

Artistic and Commodious Quarters Installed for Exchange in Plaza Hotel Building—Branch Managed by Dustin

"THE new home of the St. Louis branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is a splendid Christmas and New Year present to us," remarked E. W. Dustin, chief of the branch, as he looked about the imposing quarters at No. 3308 Lindell Avenue.

"Every employe is just as proud of the office as Paul Brunet, our Vice-President and General Manager, who has sent us heartiest of greetings, and they realize fully that any other organization to outdo Pathe in equalling this exchange, will have to design a building of special structure; and then they would not have a thirty-foot ceiling.

"When completed, it will be without question, the most commodious and artistically arranged cinema centre in the United States."

The premises were originally intended for a lavishly appointed cafe, but owing to objections on the part of one of the heirs and owner it never has been occupied. The "salon," as it is called, occupies about the center of the Plaza Hotel building, is very spacious with a thirty-foot ceiling from which depend six chandeliers.

In the center of the floor space is a fountain, about thirty feet in circumference, with a double basin at the top of which is a Grecian mythological carving in marble, representing water nymphs at play. The fountain is the work of a Venetian sculptor and is a "copy" of an original by Canova. A school of gold fish can be seen in the depths of the lower basin, and, when the fountain is illuminated presents a very beautiful sight.

One enters the main entrance on Lindell Avenue, and immediately gets the impression of a banking institution, it is said. On the left, a stairway leads up to the balcony where are located the City Salesman's desk, the Hodkinson and American representatives.

On the right is the Manager's office and the Booking Department, and, passing down the railing, one arrives at the Stenographic and Accounting Departments. Thence, on and turning to the left, the visitor arrives at the Poster Department, separated from the other portion of the building by a brass railing.

Turning to the right one can see the Shipping Department and the large especially constructed film vault,—capacity 5000 reels.

"One Woman" Shows Worth as Propaganda

Although Select Pictures' special attraction, "The One Woman," was not originally intended as official propaganda, there is every reason to believe that it will serve as a strong element in combating the dangerous influence that everywhere is tearing at the sacredness of the marriage tie, as exemplified in the recent orders of Russian Soviets establishing the so-called Bolsheviki free love bureaus throughout the former Russian Empire.

Two Reel U. S. A. Series Attracting Attention

The Government new two reelers, the U. S. A. Series, each dealing with some important phase of the world war in connection with the participation of the United States, is declared to be attracting widespread attention among exhibitors, and is said to be proving a box office attraction of high value.

The first of the series, "If Your Soldier's Hit," was released December 23, throughout the country. This picture illustrates the efficiency of the American Medical Detachment and the work of the Field Hospital Corps, showing the various details of how the wounded are rescued on the firing line and taken to advanced dressing stations, thence to the field hospital and finally to the base hospital.

The second picture of the series, "Wings of Victory," released January 6, is the full and complete story of the air program of the United States.

Tarzan Romance Does Well in South

The Majestic Amusement Company of Memphis, Tenn., which has taken over the Lyric Theatre, formerly the Klaw & Erlanger Theatre, in the Tennessee city, wanted a special attraction to mark the Christmas day opening of the house under its new management and system. Accordingly Mr. R. C. Tarlton, the president, and C. F. Bridges, the secretary and treasurer of the company, called up the Big Feature Rights Corporation in Louisville, Ky., over the long distance telephone and booked "The Romance of Tarzan" for five days, beginning Christmas day. This company controls the six leading picture houses of Memphis, and the success they had with "Tarzan of the Apes" causes them to feel certain of the results they will get from "The Romance of Tarzan."

At the Lyric, Messrs. Bridges and Tarlton will run pictures and stock alternately, showing only the big special productions.

Former Gaumont Man at Front

Pell Mitchell, Editor of Gaumont News, Receives Interesting Letter from Former Cameraman

PELL MITCHELL, editor of Gaumont News and Graphic, is in receipt of a letter from a former cameraman on the staff of the Gaumont News Service, now a lieutenant in the Signal Corps—Lieut. Leon H. Caverly. Lieutenant Caverly was the first American photographer to be sent to France. His letter to Mr. Mitchell follows:

"Just a few lines to wish you a Merry Christmas, in hopes it will reach you in time; now that the war is finished I find things pretty dull, not that I do not have anything to do, for so long as we keep headed for Germany there is much good material for both movies and stills. When will we get home? is the question we are all asking and find no answer. I have little hopes of seeing the good old U. S. A. before next June or July; possibly not then. At that time I will drop in on you and give you all the news covering the many months I have been away. I was the first photographer to reach France, but I certainly hope that some other holds the record when it comes to going back.

"During my stay over here I have seen the photo unit grow from a few men to a department, having nearly five hundred men engaged in the work of recording Uncle Sam's share in the World's War. It has all been a great experience to me, besides the satisfaction of having in a very small way done my bit, so am not sorry I came over. During the drive at St. Mihiel I lost my assistant still-photographer, he being the first to be killed within the photo unit. Since then one other was blown to atoms and several injured, so you see we can claim to being soldiers as far as danger is concerned.

"How much the public at home have seen, owing to censorship, I have no way of knowing, but I do know that there is little pertaining to warfare that has not been shot by both movie and stills.

"Recently I was promoted to Corps Photographer, and as such have charge of all photo units within the corps. Have been recommended for a captaincy, so hope to return wearing two bars instead of one. It is a great game and I like it. When I get back will be in the market for an honest-to-goodness job. As I have complete outfits for both movies and stills of my own, hope to land something that will allow me to travel—Japan, India or South America preferred. Any tip you can give me will be greatly appreciated."

"Cannibals of South Seas" for Indianapolis

MARTIN JOHNSON'S picture, "Cannibals of the South Seas," will attract the attention of patrons of the well-known Circle theatre of Indianapolis for two weeks, commencing January 12.

Announcement of this unusually long booking has created no little comment among exhibitors, owing to the prestige enjoyed by S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle, as his selections and advertising methods have attracted considerable notice.

This present booking achievement is said to mark a new record for the Circle, with the exception of "The Birth of a Nation," and one or two others of the same calibre, and has brought added confidence to officials of the Exhibitors' Mutual, distributors of the Cannibal feature, that they were correct in their opinion that the film would draw big.

The nature of the picture offers a special sort of advertising. When used consecutively for two weeks it raises several points. That Mr. McCormick will utilize them successively is not doubted, but the manner in which he does it will prove interesting.

He will be stimulated in putting over the final installment by the fact that these reels contain the incidents connected with the capture of Martin Johnson and his young wife by the vicious Nagapate.

Massive Sets for First S and L Film

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, organizers of the S. and L. Pictures, and who have under production the first of the series of productions to be made by this organization under the direction of Ralph Ince, declare the outstanding feature of the picture is the elaborate settings which have been furnished the star, E. K. Lincoln. Charles Chapman, an expert technical director, supervised this phase of the production.

The picture is nearing completion at the Bacon-Backer studios, 38th Street. Mr. Ince is personally supervising the direction. Announcements concerning the release date will be made shortly.

Kansas Society Seeks Kane as President

A UNIQUE compliment has been paid to Arthur S. Kane, who is General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation. It is not in his capacity as an executive of one of the important firms in the motion picture industry that Mr. Kane has been favored, but in his qualification as a prominent son of Kansas. For the distinction received has been conferred by the Kansas Society of New York, of which body until recently Arthur S. Kane was not a member. It was, therefore, peculiarly pleasing and gratifying to him to have a committee from the society officially inform him of its desire to number him among its members and of its intention, contingent upon his willingness, to create him its president.

There had arisen in the Kansas Society a vacancy in the president's chair due to the death of its incumbent. It was necessary to elect a president for the unexpired term, ending January 20, 1919—with an eye also to the presidency incumbent during 1919 and ending January 29, 1920. To Mr. Kane was given a choice of the two terms. It must be explained that January 29 is the calendar date upon which the territory of Kansas was admitted into the Union as a state, and therefore the annual dinner of the Kansas Society is always celebrated upon this date. Over this dinner presides the president whose term expires with that function. Having in mind the possibilities of a dinner in this present January, when two-thirds of the world is feeling its happiest over the consummation of a peace long desired, Mr. Kane chose the unexpired term rather than the forthcoming year of presidency. He has therefore been elected president of the Kansas Society, and will preside over its annual banquet on next January 29. The banquet will be held at the Hotel McAlpin and will number among its more than one hundred guests many persons of distinction in social, business and political circles.

Will Film Exploits of "Lost Battalion"

CARLE E. CARLTON, Crest Pictures Corporation, announces that arrangements are under way for the production of a sequel to his serial, "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieut. Bert Hall, the American Ace. The subject matter of the contemplated production will be the adventures of Col. Whittlesley's "Lost Battalion." Lieut. Hall, according to the announcement, will be featured in this production, also and Mr. Carlton expects to have the services of Lieut. Col. William Thaw, also an American Ace.

Mr. Carlton left for Chicago to make final arrangements for the production. Before leaving he said:

"There are war pictures and war pictures. By this I mean those pictures which merely portray a repetition of battle scenes, or those which show the glorification of the noble deeds of our soldiers and the brave exploits of America and her Allies. "War pictures with a real plot will remain as popular as ever. The more so because thousands of boys are now coming home every week and the talk in home circles for some time to come will be personal war adventures. This means added publicity for the war pictures, or better, for the pictures with a war atmosphere or a war background.

"I feel so strongly on the subject that I am arranging to have a picture made on the subject of Col. Whittlesley's "Lost Battalion." For this picture I expect again to have the co-operation and assistance of Lieut. Bert Hall and also, very likely, Lieut. Col. William Thaw.

"As for 'A Romance of the Air,' this picture at its initial showing at the Rivoli Theatre played to the biggest receipts of any feature picture shown there for the previous three months, and this fact alone should prove conclusively my assertions cited above."

Special Composition for "Stars of Glory"

LEONCE PERRET, producer of "Stars of Glory," a patriotic drama, starring E. K. Lincoln and Dolores Cassinelli, has engaged Henry S. Gerstle, prominent composer of music, to prepare a special orchestration to accompany the showing of this feature. The announcement of the initial showing of this production has been delayed on this account, Mr. Perret announces.

He announces that the complete orchestration has been completed but that he is desirous of having a composition that will be equally as effective in the smaller theatres, which haven't the facilities for putting on the complete composition.

Mr. Gerstle, the composer, whose works include some of the most successful classic selections, was inspired by the production to compose a march which he has named "The March of the Stars of Glory." He has included this in the orchestration for the film. The score will be suitable for rendition by an orchestra composed of any number of instruments and includes a special piano and organ score for use in theatres where only the organ or piano is used. He hopes to complete the music in about a week, meanwhile Adolphe Osso is proceeding with the arrangements for the initial showing of "Stars of Glory," the details of which will be announced shortly.

"Sahara," Starring Glaum, Is Nearly Finished

"Sahara," the first of the Louise Glaum feature productions is rapidly nearing completion. According to those associated in the making of it, including the star, and C. Gardner Sullivan, "Sahara" will be the photo-dramatic sensation of the new year.

The important dramatic role opposite Miss Glaum is taken by Matt Moore, of the family of film stars.

Exhibitors Highly Praise Universal Serial

New Jersey exhibitors are enthusiastic about Eddie Polo's latest Universal serial, "The Lure of the Circus," according to reports received at the New York offices.

Among the many commendatory letters received by Joe Brandt the past week were the following:

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
Gentlemen:

Just a few words in reference to your serial, "The Lure of the Circus." I wish to state that I am very well satisfied with same and I must say that from a box office view it certainly has got me some real money. Thanks for your advice in booking this attraction, as I have never run serials before.

Yours truly,
LOUIS BOLLINGER,
Summit-Hippodrome,
West Hoboken, N. J.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

We have played three episodes of "The Lure of the Circus" with Eddie Polo and have done the biggest business with it, as an attraction, we have ever done with a serial. We sincerely hope you will follow this picture up with one as great an attraction.

First Run Houses Get Ford Weekly Subject

The appeal and the heavy exploitation of the Ford Educational Weekly and its previous popularity under former independent distribution in 3,000 theatres are now causing under Goldwyn distribution its installation in the largest theatres of the nation, it is announced.

Important first runs reported in the last week include Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum and Randolph theatres, Chicago; the entire Ascher Brothers' chain of twelve theatres in Chicago; Graumann's million-dollar theatre in Los Angeles, the largest picture institution on the Pacific Coast; the twenty-four metropolitan district Marcus Loew theatres in Greater New York, and the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, and several hundred other theatres whose ownerships rank at the top in the motion picture industry.

"Salome" Registers Also in Smaller Theatres

At Port Richmond, on Staten Island, the Empire theatre was one of the first to book "Salome." It played the big Theda Bara super-production two days, following which Messrs. Allen Brothers and Peyser wrote to the Fox offices in New York:

"'Salome' was a clean up from every angle; capacity houses on both days—which is unusual here—and satisfied patrons, who came to us unsolicited and told how much they enjoyed this attraction. So many are clamoring for a repeat booking that we will have to give you a return. Two-day pictures in our town are usually losing propositions, but 'Salome' was different. Our brother exhibitors who do not book this beautiful feature for any particular reason are doing themselves and their patrons an injustice."

Cecil B. De Mille Back in Los Angeles

Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky studios, returned to Los Angeles after a short stay in New York. He was accompanied to the Pacific Coast by William C. De Mille, the playwright, and Edgar Selwyn, producer and playwright.

"While in New York Mr. Selwyn told me of the plot of a play he was writing for the stage," said Mr. De Mille. "'You're wrong,' I said to him, 'that play is not for the stage at all—it is for my next Artcraft production.'"

"So I kidnaped Selwyn and that is why he came to Los Angeles with me. He had agreed with me that the plot was for the Artcraft program before our conversation had ended.

"He boarded the train with us, and all the way westward on the train we were engaged in making the story into a photoplay. This does not mean that Mr. Selwyn, who puts the 'wyn' in Goldwyn, has severed his relation with that concern, nor that he has given up his stage work, but merely that he has written a wonderful story which I am most anxious to produce."

Relative to the many rumors that the De Milles were about to sever their connections with the Famous Players-Lasky Company, Mr. De Mille said:

"That story was made out of whole cloth. Our relations have always been absolutely harmonious. You may brand any statements to the effect that my brother and myself are leaving the organization as absolutely false."

Concerning his activities while in the East, Mr. De Mille said he had purchased the photoplay rights to two big stage successes which will be produced for Artcraft, one of them to be produced probably following the filming of Mr. Selwyn's story.

Mr. De Mille also said that the trip East had opened his eyes to the future possibilities of the industry. "In the five years that I have been producing," he said, "I have never found conditions more satisfactory, nor promising a more brilliant future for the entire industry. I am also overjoyed to be back in sunshiny California."

Zena Keefe Star of First Arden Picture

Zena Keefe, who at the age of fourteen was playing the ingenue role opposite Earle Williams in Vitagraph pictures, is the star of Arden Photoplays, Inc., first production, "The Challenge Accepted," distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Edwin L. Hollywood, who received his training under James Young, directed. Chester Barnett, who has been leading man for many of the screen's best female stars, is leading man for Miss Keefe.

John Hopkins has the role of the villain. Sidney D'Albrook is given the role of the disgruntled soldier. Warren Cook, Charles Eldridge, Joel Day and Russell Simpson are others appearing in important roles in "The Challenge Accepted."

Machine-Made Versus "Special"

Sydney Garrett Says He Has Ideal "Special" for Foreign Market in S and L Series

SYDNEY GARRETT, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., who purchased, recently, the exclusive foreign selling rights to the series of special productions of the S and L Productions, of which Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin are sponsors, associates this transaction with "an auspicious beginning for the introduction abroad of big features that can be honestly referred to as 'specials,'" as he so aptly puts it.

Mr. Garrett continued:

"Directed by Ralph Ince, starring E. K. Lincoln and produced from the best available plays, books and original scenarios, I am of the opinion that 'S-L Pictures' will do much towards making motion picture audiences in foreign countries realize the vast difference between the machine-made program feature and the out-of-the-ordinary offerings. I am more than pleased at the deal recently consummated between Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin and myself which gives me an opportunity to distribute their series of 'specials' in countries exclusive of the United States and Canada, inasmuch as it comes at a time when the conditions of the foreign market are peculiar, to say the least.

"Now that England, France, Italy, and other leading foreign countries are about to resume the manufacture of their own films, a spirit of friendly competition must arise between these countries and America. From now on the efforts of producers in the United States should be concentrated in the filming of pictures which from the standpoint of author, star, director and story can be properly classed as 'specials.'

"Purchasers in foreign markets, as well as exhibitors, must look more and more to this country for the source of their film supply. Due to the peculiar circumstances existent through the war, America has made a real place for her films abroad. The popularity of her stars in certain countries equals that which they enjoy at home. America is in an enviable position as regards the foreign market for motion pictures. In order to fully understand and appreciate the requirements of the foreign market, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin held several conferences between their organization and my own before turning the crank on the inaugural picture. It would be well for all makers of American pictures to follow out this idea when considering the necessities of foreign film buyers. They should make a special effort to give their pictures an international appeal by utilizing only those stories which will prove of interest to all nationalities."

Independent Announces Release Schedule

BACON-BACKER FILM CORPORATION announces that its production of "A Woman's Experience," starring Mary Boland, which enjoyed a prerelease showing at the Rialto in New York, will be distributed as the third attraction of the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series by the Independent Sales' Corporation through the Film Clearing House.

"Life's Greatest Problem," the J. Stuart Blackton production, written by Anthony Paul Kelly, and featuring Mitchell Lewis, was the second attraction of this series; and "The Littlest Scout," Paula Blackton's five-part story of country life, starring little Charles Blackton, is scheduled as the fourth attraction in the Ten-Twenty-Thirty series.

The placing of these productions with the Independent Sales' Corporation, which distributes through the Film Clearing House system of offices throughout the country, is taken to indicate that J. Stuart Blackton and the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation were quick to recognize the opportunity offered independent producers to find an immediate market for their productions without burdening themselves with the tremendous expense and attendant worries of exploitation and distribution.

The first release under the "Ten-Twenty-Thirty" policy was Evelyn Nesbit and her son Russell Thaw in Julius Steger's production, "Her Mistake."

Although the Independent Sales' Corporation will confine the physical distribution of its pictures exclusively to the Film Clearing House, it by no means follows that the latter corporation will confine its operations exclusively to the attractions of the Independent Sales' Corporation.

Ford Serial Gets Advertising Campaign

LOUIS BURSTON, the producer, and Hiller & Wilk, Inc., selling agents of "The Silent Mystery," the new Francis Ford serial in fifteen episodes, are in the midst of an extensive advertising campaign in the interest of this serial.

Every city of note in the country is being "covered" with a wide variety of paper, ranging from the twenty-four sheet down to the one sheet. A generous trade paper campaign is under way, and no medium through which this serial can be brought before the exhibitors and public has been overlooked in the producer's and agent's efforts to be convincing in narrating the possibilities of what has been termed by those who have seen it "a corking good mystery drama."

The twenty-four sheet embodies the atmosphere, tone and tempo of the serial. It transmits instantly to one the sense of mystery and creepy awe with which the picture is replete. As one big litho man put it the other day, "the stuff is there."

The critics and press praised it highly. Mr. Burstont stated, in speaking of the reviews, "that they couldn't have been more satisfactory if I had written them myself."

The Old and the New Year

As Seen by George Spoor of Essanay Film Mfg. Co.

WHILE the past year has proved more or less unsatisfactory to the motion picture industry, yet in no way has it been fatal, and I am convinced that the trade as a whole will quickly recover from any ill effects suffered. In my estimation the coming year will bring with it a new prosperity.

The war and a national epidemic added their share of troubles to internal conditions that were in themselves in a transitory stage. But the motion picture industry was not the only one to suffer from the external causes, and I am sure that this was borne with a complete understanding and a patriotic zeal by all producers, distributors and exhibitors. It would not be seemly for us to complain at any slackening of business, with our boys fighting in France, and I believe that any sacrifices that were entailed by those in the motion picture business were cheerfully accepted.

Now that the war is over, however, I believe that the new year will open up with an excellent prospect for all concerns operating on a sound business basis. There has been no lessening in the demand of the public for good pictures, and I do not believe that there ever will be. The motion picture business is a real and distinct art, just as is that of the stage, and has come to stay for all time.

Not that I think there will not be many changes in the system of producing and distributing pictures. These changes have been going on all the time and now are still more rapidly formulating. By changes I mean the getting away from the more or less lax system of former years and down to solid business principles. The motion picture business developed so rapidly that the conditions that surrounded it were in many ways unavoidable.

Now that competition has become so keen and public taste more critical, an economy in operation must eventualize. I do not mean economy in the sense of cheaper pictures, rather the opposite. Pictures must be better and fewer. The market has been flooded with mediocre or inferior pictures and I do not believe there will be any place for these in the future. The cost of producing such pictures can be eliminated entirely.

Just as much will be spent in the making of good pictures as ever, and possibly more, but not wasted. Every manufacturer knows that there have been scores of little leakages in their studios, but these are gradually being wiped out.

This economy on broad lines will come through more carefully developed plans in all work of production, a concentration of distributing systems, and a centralization of processing work.

Personally, I am particularly interested in the latter as I know to a certainty that through the Spoor-Thompson laboratory method of processing films, I have obtained something that the trade has been seeking for years.

The need for a centralized shipping point has long been recognized. Chicago is a terminal point for every railroad of importance in the country and what is more natural than that the distribution of positive prints should be made from this city. This opens the possibility of doing away with much of the delay and excessive cost of shipping due to congested traffic and high express rates.

Also has there been a great need for uniform and equable processing of all parts of the film. Under the old methods of processing in short lengths various parts of a reel were developed unequally, the development being dependent on the judgment of the human eye of more than one person, which was bound to vary. Under the new method of developing film in one thousand foot lengths all variance is done away with.

And when the new method of developing not only produces a higher quality of positive prints, but at the same time actually reduces the cost by a very substantial amount, it is bound to be adopted.

But in all phases of the industry economy is setting in, although as I have stated it is an economy by eliminating waste and not at all through the cheapening of the pictures.

"Lightning Raider" Serial Is Launched

AFTER months of preparation and the utilization of every method of exploitation known to the picture industry Pathe's new Serial "The Lightning Raider" with Pearl White as the star, was launched.

On January 5th the first Episode entitled "The Ebony Block" was released simultaneously in every city in the United States, and will be continued for fifteen weeks at each theatre.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., believes that "The Lightning Raider" is not only the best Serial it has ever put out but that this picture reaches the top notch of motion picture serial achievement. This opinion is said to have been voiced by experts and printed by a majority of the trade reviewers who have seen advance showings.

When Exhibitors start "The Lightning Raider" they are expected to reap the benefit of the great exploitation campaign on this Serial and the interest already aroused is said to be sufficient to crowd their theatres every day this Serial is shown.

The name of Pearl White as star of a Serial is declared to be enough in itself to pack any theatre, but Pathe claims that it has not been satisfied to sit back and depend upon the drawing power of a popular star.

The first advertising campaign for a Serial ever instituted in the Saturday Eve-

Film Biggest Troop Ship

The former "Vaterland," now the "Leviathan," is the biggest troopship in the world, and number 39 of the Gaumont News, released December 17, shows the return to New York of this monster ship with 10,000 Americans troops on board.

That number of the News also contains effective photographs of the Southern Commercial Congress Convention in Baltimore, which was featured by a great naval pageant.

Other subjects in that issue show ex-Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, turning over his office to his successor, Hon. Carter Glass; Governor Manning of South Carolina, and his charming wife, parents of six sons fighting for the Allies; the battle cruiser "North Carolina," first of our warships equipped for bringing troops home, and many other topical subjects.

Smallwood in Charge of Metro Laboratory

Ray Smallwood, chief of Metro's photographic department, has arrived in California from New York, and under Maxwell Karger, director general, has assumed charge of all the camera and laboratory work at the company's new plant in Hollywood.

He found five companies at work on the new stages, but is using the old laboratories for the present, as the new ones are not yet completed.

Mr. Smallwood will be joined by his wife after the holidays and they will take one of the justly-famed Hollywood bungalows.

ning Post with its ten million readers, is now running and backing up "The Lightning Raider" simultaneously with a tremendous billing campaign embracing every center of population in the United States.

In consequence Pathe officials assert, there is no doubt but that ready made audiences were awaiting the Exhibitor when he released the first Episode of this Serial on January 5th.

The cast of "The Lightning Raider" in addition to Miss White includes Warner Oland the screen villain who has been in many previous Pathe Serials as a bad man including "The Fatal Ring" with Pearl White and "Patria" with Mrs. Vernon Castle.

Hatch Gets Territory from Pioneer

Frank Hatch, Pittsburgh, announces that he has purchased the Pennsylvania, West Virginia and southern New Jersey rights to the Pioneer Film Corporation's production of "Wives of Men." The Pioneer Film Corporation reports good business in other territories where this picture has been shown.

Pioneer reports good sales on its production "Little Orphan Annie," adapted from the work of James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet.

Calvert's Fourth Keeney Release Ready

"Marriage for Convenience" is the title of Frank A. Keeney Enterprises' latest production, starring Catherine Calvert. It is now ready for release. It will be distributed in the territory composing New York, Northern New Jersey and Western Connecticut by the William L. Sherry Service exchanges in these territories, and throughout the other domestic territory through the exchanges of the General Film Company.

A recent private showing of "Marriage for Convenience" was given this week. Prominent exchange men and exhibitors from the immediate neighborhood attended, pronouncing the picture one of Miss Calvert's best. The star portrays the character of a Southern society belle. The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon, scenarioized by Bennet Musson and produced under the direction of Sidney Olcott. This is Miss Calvert's fourth starring vehicle under the Keeney management.

Leonce Perret Moves To Pathe Studio

"A Soul Adrift," the third of the Perret Productions to be produced by Leonce Perret, in which Dolores Cassinelli is the star, has been completed at the Metro Studio and Mr. Perret and his entire staff have moved to the Pathe Studio, where they will commence shooting "The Thirteenth Chair" immediately, with Mlle. Yvonne Delva as the star.

Cameraman Alfred Ortlieb, Technical Director John Birkel and "Utility Georgetown" as Miss Duchesne, Mr. Perret's secretary, has come to be known as "all go with Mr. Perret."

United Features Play Chicago

Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon's First, Booked at Ziegfeld's, Chicago, for Indefinite Run

DEFINITE announcement of release dates of its star features, "The Light of Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum, and "Adele," with Kitty Gordon, is followed by the announcement from United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., that contracts for bookings on these features were signed this week by J. A. Berst Organization, whereby "The Light of Western Stars" will enter upon an indefinite run at the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago, commencing January 28. Supplementary to the national billboard campaign of United, exploiting its stars, a billing campaign has been started in Chicago in connection with this engagement at the Ziegfeld. "A Man in the Open" will be Dustin Farnum's next picture, following "The Light of Western Stars." "It is more than the equal of any production I ever appeared in," is the star's opinion. A private presentation was given at the Brunton Studios last week. Ernest G. Warde directed. Fred Myton made the adaptation. Mr. Farnum is supported by Lamar Johnston, Claire Du Brae, Joseph Dowling, Irene Rich and Herschel Mayall in the principal roles. The lighting effects in "A Man in the Open" are said to be entirely new to the screen.

President Berst has not yet selected a main title for Kitty Gordon's feature to follow "Adele." It is stated at the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, where the production was recently completed, that this six-reel drama is unusual as to story, acting and scenic investiture. "It is the best picture I have ever made," was the statement from Director Wallace Worsley.

Miss Gordon has the role of a woman whose sole interest lies in material things, fun and frivolity and the shallowness of her social life. How her husband leads her to a realization that love and service means more than her hitherto frivolous pursuits, and how a clergyman makes a great sacrifice to bring about the desired change of thought are incidents in this story of plot and counter-plot, love and hate and self-sacrifice.

During the action of the play Miss Gordon appears, it is reported, in twenty different gowns. William Anthony McGuire wrote the play.

Miss Gordon is supported by Mahlon Hamilton, M. Lawson Butt and Kate Price.

Florence Reed's first United feature recently completed by Tribune Productions, Inc., and which is set for release after the Gordon and Farnum initial vehicles, is in process of cutting and titling. No announcement has yet been made of the title. Concurrently with her stay on Broadway, Miss Reed has commenced work upon the second of the six super-pictures she is under contract to star in for United.

Discussing the source of supply of first-class material in the nature of strong plots and comedy-dramas suitable for Florence Reed, Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon, and in response to inquiries from prospective contributors, President J. A. Berst issues this statement:

"It is useless to send hackneyed plots. What we desire is material to suit our stars, original plays or book plays presenting high-class plots along new and original lines. What we want for Farnum are strong, unusual plays of the West along the lines of "The Light of Western Stars" and "A Man in the Open."

Warner Film Reports Exhibitor Success

EXHIBITOR reports on "The Kaiser's Finish" indicate that it is making big profits for theatres in representative communities in every section of the country.

A. Warner, in charge of territorial sales for the eight-part special state right's production, has a number of telegrams and letters from exhibitors describing the results of local showings.

Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville, Tenn., wired: "'The Kaiser's Finish' is a great picture. In fact it is the best war picture we have so far played."

Mr. Lytle, manager of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Tex., declared that for him the picture was a "clean up," playing to tremendous business during its entire engagement there.

Hendley Brothers, of the Vogue Theatre, Columbus, Ga., wrote that they used it to meet extremely strong competition, and did an exceptional business.

Mr. Depkin, manager of the Wizard Theatre, Baltimore, Md., had the front of his theatre repaired the day after it opened. Crowds fighting to get in had to be dispersed by the local police, but the lobby was wrecked before they were stopped in their efforts to rush the ticket takers.

Walter Johnson, manager of the Parkway Theatre, Roseland, Ill., wired Harry Weiss, manager of the Central Film Company, of Chicago, that "The Kaiser's Finish" paid him a big net profit on a two days' run.

Books First Nationals

Leo Keiler, president of the Arcade Theatre Company, in Paducah, who was in Louisville, Ky., recently, closed with the Big Feature Rights Corporation for practically all the pictures of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Extended Runs on "Mickey"

With Big Advertising Campaign Back of It, "Mickey" Making Big Success, Reports W. H.

EXTENDED-RUN bookings and the scope of these bookings on W. H. Productions Company's "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand, are concrete examples of the success which this picture is having throughout the sections of the country where it has been booked.

Reports from territories where "Mickey" has already been played state that it is breaking box-office records and that it is proving the greatest success and most popular picture that has ever been shown in that locality. Unsolicited letters are received daily by the exchanges handling this picture praising the splendid results "Mickey" has brought and asking for return dates.

"Mickey" has either played or been booked in some of the largest and best theatres in the country. The Loew houses in New York City have seventy days' booking. It is having a second run in the Proctor houses. The following theatres have booked it for a week's run: Regent, Paterson, N. J.; Victoria, Harrisburg, Pa.; Majestic, Erie, Pa.; Lyceum and Plaza, Bayonne, N. J.; Rialto theatre, Washington, D. C.; Trent, Trenton, N. J.; Empire New Brunswick, N. J.; Merrill, Milwaukee, Wis.; Mishler, Altoona, Pa.; Keith's Boston theatre, Boston; Strand, Hartford, Conn.; Strand, Lynn, Mass.; Orpheum, Malden, Mass.; Strand, Worcester, Mass. The Strand of Newark, N. J., ran "Mickey" for two weeks, breaking all records, it was reported.

The Wisconsin Film Corporation, of Milwaukee, which is handling "Mickey" in the Wisconsin territory, is in receipt of the following letter from the manager of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee: "It is with great pleasure that we can inform you that we did over $5,400 on a 15c. admission price, which is remarkable, and you know the newspapers were carrying full page ads, warning the public to keep out of the theatres on account of the 'flu.'"

The manager of the Eighty-first Street theatre wrote: "We played it ('Mickey') four days and it did a splendid business each day. On Sunday it broke all records."

The advertising campaign that has been waged in support of "Mickey" is unique in that it does not cost the exhibitor any money to take advantage of the campaign. The exhibitor has at his disposal, free of charge, window displays on the main streets of his town, by the leading five and ten cent stores, Columbia graphophone dealers, Aeolian and Vocalian dealers, and the other music dealers. Through their headquarters in this city these stores are notified when "Mickey" will be played in their locality, so that prior to the showing they arrange window displays and co-operate generally with the exhibitor.

Supplementing all their advertising matter, W. H. Productions Co. are furnishing to the salesmen and to the exhibitors, a short sales talk, outlining in detail every angle of the publicity campaign. For the second run man, and for subsequent runs, a sales talk is also furnished, pointing out the benefits to be reaped from the advertising and publicity already planted in the town as preliminary work.

Sawyer and Lubin Get Exclusive Scenes

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, S and L Productions, are accredited with a "sure enough" photo "scoop," by S and L publicity director. These gentlemen quietly stepped into the Ritz-Carlton Hotel on the evening of December 28 and "scooped" several thousand feet of exclusive scenes of the ball given by the elite of New York for the benefit of the Free Milk For France Fund in the Grand Ballroom. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin had made previous arrangements for the exclusive picture rights to this affair.

Six Sun-Light Arc Lights were installed in the Ritz-Carlton under the direction of Mr. Sawyer and six cameras were used to "shoot" the scenes. E. K. Lincoln, star of the S and L Productions series, Clara Joel and Grace Darling appeared in several of these scenes which will be used in the forthcoming feature, now under production, starring Mr. Lincoln.

Arrangements were made prior to the picturizing of the ball at the Ritz-Carlton by Mr. Sawyer to make a complete separate film of the event, appropriately cut and titled, to be sent as a souvenir of the occasion to Marshal Foch and his wife in France.

Fleet's Welcome "Shot" by Gaumont

Gaumont's December 26th release of Gaumont's Graphic presents a wide variety of interesting war notes, chief among which is the welcome accorded our fleet in New York harbor by Secretary of the Navy Daniels. The bluejackets are shown marching up Fifth Avenue in review before the Secretary and Admiral Mayo.

Other subjects are: Intimate views of Lafayette's birthplace, which has been turned into a home for war orphans. "With Our Boys in France" is the title which introduces scenes of the Sammies pushing on to Potsdam. King Victor Emanuel is shown reviewing American and Italian troops.

Rolfe Injects Showman's Ideas

Is Said to Have Removed Only Objection Some Exhibitors Hold Against Serials — "Master Mystery" Books Well

THE element of showmanship, which B. A. Rolfe contends must be a guiding consideration to every producer in his activities, is said to be conspicuously evident in the editing and cutting of "The Master Mystery," the Rolfe super-serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king.

Exhibitors who have objected to serial productions on the ground that the stories in them are difficult to follow will no doubt discover that "The Master Mystery" has been so intelligently put together that it can be followed as easily as the most carefully cut feature.

The first episode of "The Master Mystery" tells the basis of the plot in a brief but comprehensive foreword before the action is begun. Each episode thereafter begins with a short, illuminating synopsis of the plot already shown, followed by pictures duplicating the final action of the previous episode. Thus, if a film follower has missed two episodes, for instance, he can easily pick up not only the thread of the story from the short synopsis at the beginning of the third episode, but also understand the meaning of the big scenes which occur in the early part of the third episode through the repetition of some of the action from the second installment.

Another instance of the element of showmanship brought into the serial is shown by the manner in which each episode is brought to a close. As an example, one episode pictures Houdini falling into the clutches of his enemy's emissaries, who, after binding him in an electric chair, leave one of their number to turn on the current while the others hurry away to capture Houdini's confederates. The action of the episode shows Houdini squirming violently in the death chair in an effort to free himself; then the scene is cut and the action changes to a close-up of the hand of the emissary slowly moving upward toward the electric switch. As the hand nears the switch the iris begins to close and only an instant before the fingers touch the switch the scene ends.

Vinnie Burns, Now

June Daye, well known as a leading woman and screen star for Lubin, Biograph, Crystal and other companies, has changed her name to Vinnie Burns, which is her legal name. Miss Burns is playing a prominent part in Doris Kenyon's latest release, "Wild Honey."

Educational Releases Its "Homecoming" Film

The educational Films Corporation of America will release on January 31 a two-reel picture entitled "Bringing the Boys Back Home." The inspiration of the picture came in a letter from Charles M. Schwab: "To keep the boys properly clothed and fed 'over there,' we need ships. To bring the boys back home, we need more ships. In helping us to build these ships now, labor has an opportunity to do its full patriotic duty by the men who offered their lives to their country."

Writing under date of November 30 Mr. Schwab's angle was his need of 50,000 more shipbuilders to construct the returning transports. More than half the American Expeditionary Forces went by foreign-owned vessels. They will come back by United States owned ships. And this supplying of the ships to bring 'em back was and is the job of the workers at Hog Island, which the picture records.

Herbert E. Hancock made it from an original scenario for the Young Men's Christian Association, and the Y. M. C. A. has chosen Educational as the medium of release. Whilst its primal inspiration was to help labor recruiting, events of the last sixty days have given it an universal interest. Mr. Hancock is the official director of the association's motion picture bureau. He is the producer of the Y. M. C. A.'s popular "Around the Clock" series.

Louisville Sees "The Kaiser's Finish"

Macauley's Theatre, Louisville, Ky., has booked "The Kaiser's Finish" for a week's run, according to Lee Goldberg, manager of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, which has purchased the territorial rights for Kentucky and Tennessee and will advertise the production to as great an extent as they would a big road attraction.

Extra twenty-four sheet stands, a number of special stunts, and an unusually large amount of paid newspaper space will be included in the campaign.

Inquiries Concerning First S and L Film

MESSRS. SAWYER AND LUBIN, organizers of the S. and L. Pictures, who have under production the first of the series of features starring E. K. Lincoln, report that exhibitors throughout the country are showing a keen interest in the star's series. Testimony to this is given by the numerous inquiries that are coming daily to the offices of S. and L. Pictures.

Announcement as to the distributing plans or the date of release of the first S. and L. feature have not been made, but Mr. Lubin gives a hint as to the interest that is being shown in the forthcoming Lincoln feature in the following interview:

"While the E. K. Lincoln special has not been completed, innumerable inquiries from every section of the United States have been received relative to the distribution of the first production. Some of the biggest buyers of state rights in the field, together with one or two distributing organizations which handle the best features of the market, have expressed the desire to make sales arrangements before the S. and L. picture is finished. This indicates the confidence of the entire market in the recently formed organization.

"Several of the leading exhibitors of the country whose houses present only the biggest features, have written me expressing a desire to be the first to present E. K. Lincoln in the series of productions of which he is the star. They are unanimous in the belief that a feature bearing the name of Ralph Ince as director insures its excellence to the public from every angle. A detailed account of our plans as to distribution, subject matter of first production and all other details will be given soon."

"The Echo of Youth" Nears Completion

"The Echo of Youth," the new picture Ivan Abramson has written and is now directing for the Graphic Film Corporation at the Biograph studio, is forging rapidly ahead and the photographic end of it will be completed in about three weeks.

Grace Darling and E. K. Lincoln Are Co-Players in S-L Productions

Supply a Demand, Says Hiller

President of Hiller and Wilk Declares
Good Picture Material Is Scarce
—In Position to Know Public Wants

THAT with the air filled with rumors of amalgamations and combines the real test of showmanship of the industry lies in the state rights field, is the opinion of L. L. Hiller, president of Hiller and Wilk, Inc.

"It is our aim," explained Mr. Hiller, "to supply a demand, not to foist on the market a picture that the producer happens to think is good. To do this we like to begin our supervision of the picture, not when it is ready for the market, but even before it is produced. That is to say we consult with the director on the choice of his play or scenario and on the general outline of the production. By doing this we are able to advertise a picture before it is made, while it is being made, and after it is completed. As a result, the picture is 80 per cent sold before it leaves the studio. In fact by watching the public demand for certain big stories and stage successes, the word of a reliable broker will sell the picture upon the mere announcement of its title and director.

"The only reason that our business is not twice as large as it is at present is that we cannot find enough pictures of quality, pictures that we are willing to give our full endorsement.

"It is physically impossible for a director to make more than four to six good big special features a year. Motion pictures are an artistic and not a mercantile product. You cannot order them turned out by the wholesale.

"Because we are in close touch with the marketing conditions all over the country we are in a position to say what the public wants. When we undertook to handle the serial 'The Silent Mystery,' we did not set out to create a demand for a serial. We saw the opening for serials and then supplied the right pictures.

"The big special production finds its best market in the state right field. Placed on a program it is lost. It never receives proper exploitation. But to win recognition, it must be advertised and presented in a showmanship way. It must receive special publicity, not to bunco the public into believing that it is good, but to draw full attention to its merits and points of interest. In other words, it must be handled pretty much the way a stage play is presented.

"The state right market has had a lot of abuse. It has been used as the 'quick clean-up' field for mediocre pictures, put out by persons who simply want to make a little money quickly and easily, without regard for their future standing in the industry. A death of worth-while productions and over-advertising of the poor ones are the two evils of the market.

"Too many pictures represent what the producers want. Too few represent what the public wants. Too many directors feel called upon to film stories that any motion picture patron could tell them are not salable. We hear a lot of talk about applying business principles to the motion picture industry. The fundamental business principle is to give the public what it wants.

Special Service Section on

"The Heart of Humanity"

THIS picture would not have been understandable without the great war that has just come to an end. In that sense it is a war picture. It is a war picture in the sense that it includes many battle scenes, that it pictures the suffering from the desire of the Hun for world domination. But with that said "The Heart of Humanity" ceases to be a war picture and comes the great idyllic picture poem of the spirit that made nations sacrifice their hundreds of sons that a better world might be born.

You have all the elements here to gain the sympathy of every person in your entire sections, for it is a great love that dominates the whole picture, the love of mother for her sons and theirs for her, of the love for country, of the love for little children, of the love of men for women—the purest, best elements in life standing out as its great theme. We have remarked that this picture could not have been understood without the conflict, for now we have seen things that we have never dreamed of happening and we have emotions laid bare that were before only half suspected.

Therefore you want to first thoroughly understand what "The Heart of Humanity" is about and then if you want to get the most possible out of it you want to go to it with a big splash, but at the same time with the dignified, human energy that will carry it through for you. If you are simply content to treat this as an ordinary war picture you will lose an opportunity to not only get new dollars into your box office, but to make new patrons.

WE are calling especial attention in this Special Service Section to the musical score. It is one of the things that you want to watch. When you have a feature that is gripping at the heartstrings all the time a great deal of the power of your presentation will rest in your music. And therefore we advise you, as the first thing that you do after arranging your booking is to start your orchestra, your organist or whatever musicians you have to work on their rehearsals. The better the music with this offering, the greater impression you are going to leave on your audiences, the greater investment this production is going to prove in bringing new patrons to your house.

Put everything that you do with this picture on the very highest plane. Go out and do things with it that you have never done with any other picture and we believe that the result will be that you will do more with all pictures hereafter.

Keep away from anything that is cheap and trite.

Broadway advertises newspaper verdicts

Let the "stunt" stay at the other fellow's house. Don't let it come near yours.

Talk the picture, frankly, sincerely. Tell as much about it as you can. You need not be afraid of giving anything away or losing anything of the pulling power. In fact the more heart interest that you get into your exploitation means a great deal not only for the opening business, but for the acceleration of word of mouth advertising.

And why?

POSSIBLY they haven't gotten to your city yet, but they are here in New York, men walking the streets, hobbling about in uniform, with a leg missing or an arm gone or a Hun sabre wound across their faces. Men and women rush forward to greet them—for they are our heroes. And there are other heroes who have paid the supreme price and who are dreaming under the poppy fields of Flanders and the devastated lands of France.

And there are thousands of mothers and brothers and fathers and sweethearts and sisters in this country who grieve for them, but not without a thrill in the heart, not without something better coming into their souls, not without a thankfulness that, after all, we have been permitted to have a part in the Glorious Victory of the God of Hosts.

This picture tells you and your folk who have a golden star on their service flag they can smile up at the heavens knowing that you have given a sacrifice that means enduring life—that they have died that the heart of humanity might beat on.

You are appealing to the love of those that will never be seen here again. You will be appealing to our love and admiration of those who have come back maimed. In short you will be appealing to the best in every heart, and so your exploitation should be built on the level of nobility.

WHILE it is no province of these Special Service Sections to pass on the quality of the pictures themselves, but rather to show you how to make the most out of them, you have a remarkable opportunity in the wonderful notices that have been accorded "The Heart of Humanity" in the New York daily papers. In fact, they have been so strong that the advertising section in this issue has been practically confined to what these papers have said.

After the preliminary advertising at the Broadway theatre the campaign was practically confined to quoting extracts from the local papers, and we would strongly advise you to use these in some of your advertising, though we would first get over the actual appeal of the offering. Then make an especial effort to get the newspapers to review this and use these opinions for your later displays.

Use a line:

"Sweetwater agrees with New York. Here's what the New York papers said:"

Then quote some of them, and follow this with:

"And Sweetwater says:"

With your local opinions following.

MOST of you exhibitors know the appeal that Dorothy Phillips has in your communities. Her name should be used very prominently in your displays, but you should not be content with merely her name and the title of the picture.

Some of the New York papers have declared that this picture places Alan Holubar in the first rank of the producers of the country, but we wouldn't bank too much on the meaning of the simple name of any director in your own section.

There is a very strong cast, including well known names, and there are thousands and thousands of people used in this offering, with spectacular effects, striking battle scenes and some of the most striking night fighting and aeroplane shots that have been shown in pictures.

All of these things are points to be brought out, but remember that all about you in your own home town there is humanity.

So appeal to its HEART.

Scene where Nanette stabs herself on the entrance of her husband, whom she believes to be the Hun who had sought to attack her, and her decoration by a French general

Love Appeal of a New Sort In This Picture

BEFORE you start in to exploit this picture we would advise you very strongly to put yourself into the "after the war" spirit. We really believe that the fact hostilities have stopped will give you a better grip on the story and will aid you in doing more intelligent advertising than if you were content to treat this merely as a war production.

We repeat that the war is only the setting for this offering, even though it would have been impossible without our realization of the great conflict and its meaning. It is not an excuse for the war, but a typification of the spirit that made Belgium resist the Huns at Liege and Namur, that sent every son of France into the fight, that inspired Britain to her every resource and that brought us into the field with nothing to fight for but—HUMANITY.

Before we were in the war the greater part of your audiences applauded the soldiers of the Allied countries who were shown in the news weeklies and in such other pictures that were being produced at that time. When the American eagle spread her wings to sail at the Boches the spirit grew to one of frantic enthusiasm. We gloried in the deeds that they were performing, we thrilled with martial pride, we gloated with the heroes.

But the war is over and it has been left for that relaxation to bring out the reason for it, to tune our hearts to the throbs of them, to realize that we have not won a mere material victory, a conquering of a people, a transcendent battle flag, but that we and our allies have given the blood of our peoples for HUMANITY.

AND the story of this picture is as simple as the faith that knew no hesi-

In a village in the heart of the Canadian forests lived the Widow Patricia and her five sons, one of them away from her at the time. And there was Nanette, the beautiful young American niece and ward of the good Father Michael, beloved of all the parish, whose living saint he was.

We are shown the simple lives of these people, the sons going about their work, the Angelus, the faith in God, and the happiness of them. And back from his trip to the bigger world comes John, the oldest of the five brothers and betrothed to Nanette. But with him is a traveler whom he has met, Oscar Strang, apparently a young naturalist, but of the sensuous German type, whom we will meet later. There is a touch of the spirit of him revealed when Nanette is praying at her little shrine in the forest and Strang comes, with lust writ on him, and tells her that there is no power but might.

Spring comes and John claims Nanette as his bride, but she is still in her wedding gown and the villagers are celebrating when a courier dashes in with the news that Britain has gone to war to defend the sanctity of Belgium. But there is nothing of the slacker among the sons of the Widow Patricia. Paul, Jules and Maurice rush forward to enlist. John holds for a time his bride in his arms and then goes to do his duty, Nanette's smiles of encouragement yielding only now and then to her tears. Louis, the youngest, is persuaded much against his will to remain at home with his mother to protect her.

AT the beginning of the second week's run of "Heart of Humanity" at the Broadway the New York Times devoted its Sunday column on the motion picture to comment on the few titles and the splendid manner in which Director Holubar had set incident against incident without any necessity of explanation. And so now we are taken to the battlefields of France. We see Maurice dying in a shell hole where he is serving with his brother, but the grief is assuaged to a degree when there comes a child to Nanette to replace the son. The mother's heart of humanity is beating with the spirit of the higher things. Then Louis, the lad, goes not that he may avenge the death of his brother, but that he may take his place—for humanity.

In the snow-clad mountains of Italy this youngster gets his fatal wound and a little later Jules is killed and with each one of these notices to the mother we see the heart growing stronger under her wonderful sacrifices. But Nanette in hearing from her husband the story of "the refugee children shattered in mind and body," she hears the call of humanity from the fields of Belgium and France. Her heart is torn between the duty to her child and to the children of the world, and we are shown by a deft piece of direction—the mere scene of her own child nursing eagerly at a bottle—that she is able to leave him to the care of her grandmother.

And "over there," after a brief meeting with her husband, we are shown her as a Red Cross worker inspiring scenes that bring the handkerchiefs out of the woman in front of you and the man next to you.

Just after her arrival, though unknown to her, John, who is an aviator, is brought down by the Germans and placed in a prison just at the rear of the trenches. In the meantime Louis, the fourth of the brothers to pay the supreme sacrifice, falls through a treacherous "kamerad" trick of the Huns.

THEN starts the great Hun advance—Nach Paris. They shell the village in which Nanette is working with the lonely children. The town is caught in a barrage. There are dramatic scenes as she seeks to rescue the children, and as the most of them are driven away to safety she remembers that one has been forgotten and goes into the shattered building for the baby. Then the Huns come and with them Strang, who has meantime been revealed to us as a Prussian, Lieut. von Eberhard. He finds Nanette alone with the child and sees an opportunity to satiate the lust aroused when he saw the girl in the Canadian woods. A terrific struggle follows. He is annoyed by the crying of the child that Nanette has come back to rescue and hurls it to its death.

"Like the string of a fine violin," Nanette's reason suddenly snaps, but she has the cunning to elude the Prussian for the moment, though he is battering at the door, and while she is praying to the Mother Mary he sees a danger which she holds in readiness to kill herself to prevent dishonor when the door shall have been burst through.

But in the meantime John has escaped. Arrayed in German uniform and armed with a slain Hun's rifle he arrives just in time to be sent by a dying Red Cross nurse to the relief of her sister, whom John does not know to be Nanette. There follows a bitter fight with the Germans. He wins, comes upon the Prussian trying to break the door through, and himself smashes the entrance only to have Nanette, thinking him the loathed Prussian, drive the dagger into her bosom.

But she recovers. As she lies in the hospital being decorated by a French officer the Americans come. Back to her Canadian home she goes. She is greeted by the cheering natives, but they fade from her eyes, for the sight of her own—her boy—is before her. And then comes peace and victory. The great heart of humanity has gone out to the stricken world and has won. There is an allegorical scene where we see the Christmas feast, and the four dead brothers in their flag-bedecked seats of honor at the table—just a moment of it—and the old mother.

We have devoted much space here to the telling of the story, because the understanding of it is essential, but we would strongly recommend that the exhibitors who are to show this picture read the full story published in the special plan book issued by Jewel Productions.

THERE are many striking scene pictures with this offering that bring out the spirit of it, and we would especially recommend the use of those in which Miss Phillips appears. But to get the most out of the offering we believe that more ought to be said. In fact, this is a picture with which you can afford to take twice your

PLAY IT STRONG

WE would advise the exhibitor to go to unusual advertising both in the newspapers and on billboards with this picture, but the straight legitimate sort of advertising, and none of the "stunt" stuff.

There is press book issued on this production which we especially recommend to every exhibitor because it gives a complete idea of the way to bill this.

Accessories include half, one, three six and 24 sheets and window cards, herald, slides, etc. There are special ads in one, two and three column sizes, a stock cut of the star and sets of 11 x 14 and 22 x 28 scene pictures from the production.

Every exhibitor intending to show this should get in touch with his exchange at once.

ordinary space—use a striking half tone and then employ a somewhat extended selling talk.

One striking one is contained in one of the few titles in the offering. It reads:

"Love can never lose its own.

"Love is the mentor of all creation.

"Love is that golden link which unites the sweethearts of the world.

"Love sends the soldier to fight and die for his country.

"Love of the mother for her children binds the throne of God to his footstool upon the earth.

"These and greater loves than these are centered in

"The Heart of Humanity."

Here is another selling talk that we would recommend:

"Do you know that the story of the great war is not merely the story of the bursting shells, the gallant charges over the top, or even the sufferings of the victims of the Hun?"

"It is a story of LOVE—of the love of the mother who was willing to give all of her sons.

"Of love of the boys who died with a smile on their faces with the thought that they had paid their duty to their country and that they had done honor to her that bore them—

"Of the love that persuaded a bride to give her husband to the conflict and then to hear the call of the children of all humanity crying aloud and go to them that she might cheer their persecuted little soul and wipe away their tears with smiles—

"Of a love that moved all true men, that stirred the heart of motherhood, that gave the nobleness of our women—

"You have an idea of how the war was won, for your heart, too, has beaten to the noble strain. You have an idea, but you have yet to see it pictured—

"In 'the Heart of Humanity.'"

RIGHT now there are a lot of pictures that you are told to play as victory pictures. We wouldn't advise that direct angle on this one. We would prefer to play it as showing the reason why victory had to come to our arms—because we fought for humanity.

We wouldn't say that this as a heart-appealing picture, for the title should carry that; but we would outline it enough to show that fact without the bald statement. Here are some shorter lines that carry the same meaning:

"'It is God who calls my sons to save humanity,' said the Canadian mother, and four of them gave their lives. And yet her heart was glad because she knew that they still lived, that they had fallen on the battlefield, but that they lived forever in the heart of humanity."

Music and Dignity Are Highly Important Here

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the biggest things in putting over a great picture is the music. At the Rialto and the Rivoli, S. L. Rothapfel never puts on an unusual production until hours have been spent in the orchestration. D. W. Griffith never lets one of his pictures go out without a carefully prepared score. And the same man who prepared the music for "The Greatest Thing in Life" has not only arranged that for "The Heart of Humanity," but he has himself conducted the orchestra with it at the Broadway theatre. He is James C. Bradford. Exhibitors will do well to put emphasis on this score printed on another page. It's worth while engaging extra men for your orchestra with this production. We can strongly recommend this as one of the best scores that we have heard played.

As a prelude Victor Herbert's "Love Theme" is used running into the introduction of the picture. From thence on the first thousand feet had Canada as the local, and here the musical setting is principally French-Canadian. Walton's "Call of the Angelus" is effectively used during the Angelus scenes. There is a tragic number, with mystery predominating for the scene at the shrine between Nanette and the German, the intermezzo from "Goyescas." With the announcement of the war the orchestra crashed into the andanto grandioso movement from the "Il Guarany" overture.

SUCCESSFUL scenes leading up to the actual battle called for much skill in the musical setting, and there is an intricate series of descriptive numbers used. Most of this music is of the very militant character, but it has been so carefully arranged that we would advise the exhibitor from changing any of the selections.

One of the most effective numbers in the whole score is the one used each time the news comes to the mother of the death of one of her sons. Here the dirge from "Robespierre" is used, and on the third bar a trumpet, muted, sounds "Taps," and at the same moment a bell tolls. It is an effect that brings tears to every eye.

For the mother theme H. T. Burleigh's "Little Mother of Mine," which was introduced in this country by John McCormack. There is a large amount of clever child stuff in the picture, and here we have such selections as "The Slumber Boat," "Sleep, Little Baby of Mine," Brahms' "Lullaby" and "Poupee Valsante." For the lighter war scenes there are some of the best-known selections that have come out of the war. One original composition played is "Roses of Memory," by Barnard Hamblen, which is used as the eldest son is seen looking at the photograph of his wife and baby.

Among the final numbers is "March of the Allies," by Mr. Bradford.

KEEP anything of the freakish out of your lobby. You do not need anything of this sort to get the business. Use pictures of Miss Phillips, cut-outs of the 24 sheets and striking pictures of this sort. In the January 4 issue we printed the complete lobby display that is being used at the Broadway theatres and we could suggest none more in keeping with the picture than this one. Here the love idea was kept dominant with Cupid effects and pictures of Miss Phillips with her arms outstretched and hosts of little children coming to her through the poppy fields of Flanders. Rich hangings were used at the sides. These give "class" to the display.

If you use the circular letter plan write a dignified letter to the patrons, telling them what this picture is about. Do not use the question form asking "what you would do," but go ahead and outline the story. The people will appreciate your calling attention to this special offering. You don't have to make the slightest attempt to take them.

Put this offering on a high plane and then go to it as a real special.

You will know that there is a greater call in the world than self, mere glory, or even the pride in country—the call of Humanity that moved the world's heart to battle, and to VICTORY."

WE wouldn't do anything that is likely to confuse this production with any other picture that has come out of the war or with the war as a background. We would make the point stand out exactly what it is. And we would take advantage of the fact that the advertising that will come after you have shown this for the first time will probably be most powerful advertising—the word of mouth. Hit it a big wallop at first and then follow up with the opinions.

For the shorter matter call this:

"The love story of the war."

"If you do not know why mothers gave their sons willingly, why wives sent their men into battle with a blessing, why the brave men met death with a grin, you will know after seeing this picture."

"The war was the chant of civilization, the victory the triumph song of humanity. You will understand why after you have seen this picture."

This striking twenty-four-sheet can be used for cut-outs for the lobby

Coming Program Offerings

Greene Names January Films

Month Brings Two Paramount-Artcraft Specials and One Each from DeMille and Griffith—

Brady Film Included

IN announcing the January release schedule of Paramount and Artcraft features Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of distribution, calls attention to the release of two Paramount-Artcraft Specials, a D. W. Griffith Artcraft production and a Cecil B. DeMille Artcraft production and declares that this makes it one of the most notable single month's outputs in the history of the organization.

William A. Brady's picturization of Louisa M. Alcott's "Little Women," directed by Harley Knoles and filmed in and about the old Alcott home at Concord, Mass., was released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special January 5. Before its purchase by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this picture had already enjoyed a week's run at the Strand Theatre, New York, and was reported as enthusiastically received.

The same day Pauline Frederick reappeared on the Paramount schedule in "Out of the Shadow," adapted from Ernest W. Hornung's story, "The Shadow of the Rope." Eve Unsell wrote the scenario and the picture was directed by Emile Chautard.

The third picture released on the 5th was "Jane Goes A-Wooing," a Paramount production with Vivian Martin as the star. The story and scenario are by Edith Kennedy and George Melford directed.

On January 12 Fred Stone will be seen in his second Artcraft picture, "Under the Top," a story of circus life by John Emerson and Anita Loos with scenario by Gardner Hunting. Donald Crisp was the director.

"The Silver King," the Paramount-Artcraft Special in which William Faversham is starred, with Barbara Castleton as leading woman, is also released on that date. This production, directed by George Irving, is a picturization of the famous melodrama by Henry Arthur Jones and Henry Herman in which Wilson Barrett was the original star. The scenario is the work of Burns Mantle. The same day is scheduled "The Secret Garden," Lila Lee's third Paramount picture which is an adaptation by Marion Fairfax of Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel. G. Butler Clonbough was the director.

"His Parisian Wife," Elsie Ferguson's newest Artcraft picture, by Eve Unsell, is scheduled for January 19. Emile Chautard directed. "The Dub," by Edgar Franklin, with scenario by Will M. Ritchey, is Wallace Reid's new Paramount vehicle scheduled for the same day. The direction was by James Cruze. John Barrymore, in the second of his present series of Paramount pictures, also appears the same day. The picture was directed by John S. Robertson and is an adaptation by Charles Whittaker of Max Marcin and Roy Atwell's play, "Here Comes the Bride."

The 26th witnesses the release of D. W. Griffith's Artcraft production, "A Romance of Happy Valley," described by the producer as "a page from the book of life." A cast including Lillian Gish, Robert Haron and George Fawcett, is featured. The same day Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft picture, "Don't Change Your Husband," is released. This is by Jeanie Macpherson and is a sequel to "Old Wives for New," and presents an all-star cast. Wallace Irwin's Saturday Evening Post story, "Venus in the East," scenarioized by Gardner Hunting and directed by Donald Crisp, is the other release for the 26th. Bryant Washburn is the star of this Paramount picture and the support includes Anna Q. Nilsson and Margery Wilson.

Hodkinson Changes Name of Picture

"Fighting Through," it is announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is the new title given "The American Spirit," starring E. K. Lincoln and produced, directed and written by William Christy Cabanne. "Fighting Through" will be released on Hodkinson Service through Pathe Exchange, Inc., on January 27th.

The story is that of a young Southerner who has been taught by his Confederate grandfather to hate the North as an enemy country. This attitude is disapproved of, but tolerated, by his friends until a certain episode in his life that makes him appear in the role of a coward before his fiancée. He then faces social ostracism, but manfully fights through overwhelming difficulties and gloriously redeems himself.

Goldwyn Names Seven Ford Weeklies

Prints of the first five releases of the Ford Educational Weekly are in all Goldwyn offices and are ready for trade showings and for pre-releases wherever desired. These releases, at the rate of one each week, are as follows: January 13, "What Uncle Sam Will Do For Two Cents," the fascinating story of the Post Office Department; January 20, "The Truth About the Liberty Motor," a pictorial record of the production of the Government's war-time airplane engines; January 27, "Hang It All!" the unusual picturization of the making of wall paper; February 3, "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas," showing the work of the great Hog Island shipyards; February 10, "Canada's Mountain of Tears," a picturization of Mt. Edith Cavell; February 17, "Where 'The Spirit That Won' Was Born," a Washington's Birthday release, showing historic Philadelphia, Valley Forge and Mt. Vernon; February 24, "Rough Stuff," a picturization of the carborundum industry.

"Fighting Through" Is Scheduled

"Fighting Through" is a William Christy Cabanne production starring E. K. Lincoln and for distribution on January 27 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Cabanne is also responsible for the direction and story of "Fighting Through," which is a red-blooded story of love and adventure.

Lots Have Read It

Famous Players-Lasky estimate that ten million persons have read "The Hope Chest" in the United States alone. Mark Lee Luther was the author and in the Paramount production released December 29 Dorothy Gish is the star.

Paramount Names Current Short Subjects

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's schedule of short subject releases for the month of January includes a wide variety.

January 5 includes the newest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "Camping Out," and also the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the subjects being "Training War Birds," "A Trip to the Leeward Islands" and a "Bobby Bumps" cartoon by Earl Hurd. The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue is "In a Manila Wrapper."

January 12 the Mack-Sennett's "Cupid's Day Off," with Ben Turpin, Charlie Lynn and Alice Lake. The Paramount-Bray Pictograph has "Sugar Growing in the West Indies," "Individual Oil Wells" and a cartoon. The subject of the Travelogue is "In the Cane Fields of Calamba."

January 17 there is a Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg comedy "Impropaganda," Olin Howland and Eleanor Masters being featured. On this date Burton Holmes introduces "Celestial Contrasts," while the Pictograph offers more "Travels in the West Indies," and another subject in the series of "Perilous Occupations."

Charlie Murray, Bert Roach, Marie Prevost and Phyllis Haver are the featured players in the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Never Too Old," which is released January 26. "Canning Scenery" is the Burton Holmes Travelogue subject for that date, while the Paramount-Bray Pictograph will feature "The Passing of the Cannibal," "Training Women for Canteen Work" and a Hurd cartoon.

In addition to these short subjects the following features will be released in the Success series: January 5, "The Traveling Salesman," with Frank McIntyre and Doris Kenyon in the leading role; William Farnum in "The Sign of the Cross;" Dustin Farnum in "Captain Courtesy," and Mary Pickford in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow."

New Year's Schedule on Vitagraph Program

Vitagraph announces its releases for the week of December 30th, as follows: The Blue Ribbon features, in five parts, are "The Captain's Captain," featuring Alice Joyce, from the story, "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper," by James A. Cooper; Tom Terriss directed. The second episode of "The Iron Test," "The Red Mask's Prey," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, and a Big "V" special comedy, in two parts. "Bums and Boarders," featuring Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock.

"Smiling" George Walsh in "I'll Say So"

William Fox's current Victory Picture, starring George Walsh, is titled "I'll Say So"; and, it is said, that in this offering "Smiling" George interpolates more pep and enthusiasm than in any other work of his for the screen. The author, George Spence, has provided a script, brim full of typical Walsh stunts, and the former college athlete hits the high spots of daredevilry before the camera.

Metro Names First 1919 Screen Classics

"WHY GERMANY MUST PAY," a historical novel of the screen, with an all-star cast, is Screen Classics, Inc.'s latest announced patriotic feature to be completed, following "The Great Victory," "Wilson or the Kaiser," "The Fall of the Hohenzollerns."

It will be exclusively distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation, starting some time in January.

The picture is described as a depiction of the crimes of Prussianism against humanity, Maxwell Karger's story being adapted by June Mathis and A. S. Le Veno. Charles Miller, who had the direction of "The Great Victory," directed the latest production.

Accuracy as to costuming, the events screened and the likenesses of world famous statesmen, soldiers and other celebrated men who have figured in the war has been carried out in the smallest detail and incident in this spectacle, according to its sponsors.

The story of "Why Germany Must Pay" is based on indemnity, the background of the war being used to bring home to every one what is uppermost in the mind of the world today.

A young Alsatian, Conrad Le Brett, is forced to fight at the beginning of the war on the side of Germany, though his soul revolts at the hideous acts of brutality of the Huns.

Wounded, he is sent to the Brussels hospital, where that noble soul, Nurse Cavell, tries to save the lives of the men of all nations. She is shot by the command of Von Bissing for aiding an American girl to escape from his advances.

Conrad goes home on furlough, to find that his little sister, Vilma, has suffered at the hands of a Prussian officer in the enforcement of the Kaiser's proclamation. He escapes to America, and returns with the lads in khaki to avenge his sister and assist in the glorious fight against might. The climax of the story is described as unexpected and thrilling.

Creighton Hale plays the young Alsatian. Vilma, his sister in the play, is played by Florence Billings, a talented ingenue. E. J. Connelly, the character actor, who starred in George Ade's "Colonel Covington" and other Broadway plays, gives the interpretation of Le Brett's grandfather. Frank Currier, Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Earl Schenck, Margaret McWade and H. C. Carvill are seen in the roles particularly adapted to their talents.

The picture is said to not merely chronicle past events of the war, with its moving fiction skilfully interwoven, but fore-shadows what they expect will take place at the Peace Conference.

Serial Heads Pathe Program for New Year

THE outstanding feature of Pathe's program for January 5th is its serial, "The Lightning Raider," featuring Pearl White. The episode serving as the New Year's offering is titled "The Ebony Block." Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, describes it to be "the culmination of all that is best in serial drama on the screen." Warner Oland is in chief support of Miss White in the serial.

During the same week Pathe offers the little comedienne, Gloria Joy, in one of her two-reel comedies, "I Want To Be a Lady." In this offering little Miss Joy impersonates a mature liliputian.

The Rolin comedy presented during New Year's week shows Stan Laurel, the English comedian, in "Do You Love Your Wife?" The comedy has been endorsed by the National Association of American Housewives.

The Post Travel Series No. 26 gives intimate views of modern Japan. The Official War Review No. 28 deals with the activities of the American, French, English and Italian armies.

Vitagraph News Bits

Jimmy Aubrey, one of the first stars to appear in Vitagraph Big-V comedies in the Los Angeles studios of the Vitagraph company, has returned and will resume his work with Vitagraph. He will produce under the direction of J. A. Howe. With the arrival of Aubrey on the Pacific coast, three Big-V companies will soon be at work at the Vitagraph studios.

"The Enchanted Barn," a Bessie Love subject for Vitagraph, was finished under the direction of David Smith. J. Frank Glendon is her leading man. Work will be started immediately on her next picture, it is said, which will be titled, "Her Wishing Ring Man." It will be a comedy drama, the nature of which has not been made public, except from what one may infer from the title.

William Duncan has begun production on the eighth episode of the "Man of Might," the big serial he is filming for Vitagraph, and incidentally in which he is the star. Also R. M. Bradbury has reached the thirteenth episode of "The Iron Test," another Vitagraph serial, starring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

Earle Williams has completed his newest picture for Vitagraph under the direction of James Young. It was originally called "The Aviator's Honeymoon," but its releasing title will be "The American Ace." Grace Darmond was his leading lady. Director Young announces that it is one of the best pictures he has produced.

At the Ince Plant

The new Ince studios at Culver City will be formally opened on Jan. 1, according to announcement this week by Thomas H. Ince. On Jan. 4 a special opening ceremony will be held, in which the mayors of four adjacent cities—that is, including Culver City, Los Angeles, Santa Monica and Venice—will take a part. Mr. Ince will be master of ceremonies. Following the formal opening, which will take place in the afternoon, a big dance will be held on the new studio's floors on the night of Jan. 4, which are 75 feet by 180 feet.

In connection with the day's events one of the streets near the studios will be rechristened, it is announced, and will thereafter be known as Ince boulevard.

Lieut. Al Wilson, aviator stationed at the Government Balloon School at Arcadia, will fly to the studios from the balloon camp and during the afternoon he will describe circles in the air over Culver City, spelling out the name Ince. The city officials of

THEY'RE OFF AGAIN!

Production Work Slows Down to Hail Holidays

IN the general preparations for holidays production work at the various studios was not so brisk. "The Coming of the Law," with Tom Mix in the leading role, was completed at the Fox studios.

Madge Kennedy, who arrived recently in Los Angeles, began production of her first picture for Goldwyn in the west during her present trip to the coast. Reginald Barker has begun the filming of Rex Beach's latest story, "The Brand," and Tom Moore started production on a new play that is yet unnamed.

Jimmy Aubrey arrived from the East and will begin immediately the production of Vitagraph-Big V comedies. "The Enchanted Barn," with Bessie Love, was completed, and Miss Love will soon begin production on a new picture called "Her Wishing Ring Man."

The producing forces at the Lasky studios reported more or less inactivity, and no new productions were begun or old ones finished at the Universal plant.

The approaching holidays caused a slackening of production at other smaller studios, it was reported.

Culver City have fashioned a huge key, and this will be presented to Mr. Ince some time during the day. It will represent the keys to the city and a welcome from the city to Mr. Ince to once more return to the vicinity to produce his pictures.

Charles Ray has finished production on his new picture for Thomas H. Ince, titled temporarily "The Busher," and he will be one of the Ince players to begin a new picture when the Ince working forces begin production at the new Culver City studios. The play just finished by Ray is a baseball story, and while it is now called "The Busher" the title may be changed when the subject is released to the exhibitor.

Dorothy Dalton, Ince star, has finished her latest picture, "The Accursed Town," under the direction of Victory Schertzinger. The story is a heavy drama and was written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Miss Dalton also plans to start a new production at the Ince Culver City studios.

Fox Studio Doings

Winfield Sheehan, general manager for William Fox, who has been in Los Angeles about ten days, announced this week that he will return to New York the first of the New Year. He plans to leave Los Angeles on Jan. 1. Before departing for the East Mr. Sheehan said he would doubtless make some important announcements.

"The Coming of the Law," a Tom Mix production for William Fox, which was directed by Mix, was finished this week. In one of the final scenes Mix leaped from a horse and badly sprained a leg. This makes the third or fourth time that Mix has figured in an accident this year.

Information that William Farnum will return to Los Angeles in February was received at the Fox studios in Hollywood this week. Mr. Farnum is in Florida working on his present production.

Here and There

The rumor that has been in circulation in Los Angeles that Olive Thomas, former Triangle star, had signed a contract with Select, was confirmed by Jack Pickford, her husband, who is now producing at the Brunton studios. Mr. Pickford said that Miss Thomas' new contract stipulated a salary of $2,500 a month. He said further that she will in all probability produce her pictures for Select in the west. At the present time she is in New York seriously ill with influenza.

The first picture that Alma Rubens will produce under her new Roberts-Cole contract will be "Diana of the Green Van." This is said to be the $10,000 prize story written by Leona Dalrymple. Miss Rubens recently left the hospital.

S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli of New York, has returned to the eastern metropolis. He came west with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and was here about a week.

The D. W. Griffith production, "The Fall of Babylon," one of his superproductions, will be shown at Clune's Auditorium at the conclusion of his present play, "The Greatest Thing in Life," according to announcement from the Griffith studios. In the meantime the master producer is mapping plans for a new production on which he will begin work at an early date.

Production on "Boots," the latest vehicle in which Dorothy Gish is being starred, continues and the play is now about half finished. Richard Barthelmess plays the male lead.

What About Your Projection Room?

THE following questions were asked of me a day or two ago by a man of broad experience in the equipment end of the motion picture industry. He had read Mr. O'Brien's letter published in this page in the January 4, 1918, issue and had been much interested:

"Do you realize the true situation and the actual conditions which exist throughout the territories which I have been covering for the past few years? Do you realize that the projectionist is not the only man who will not stay in the projection room any longer than is absolutely necessary? Do you realize that in a large percentage of the theatres the managers absolutely refuse to even enter the projection rooms under any circumstances? saying, 'Jim has entire charge; see him. I'm too busy.' This is a pure case of shame—passing the buck to a man whom he is hiring to produce that which he sells to the public and yet he is ignorant, or claims to be, of the conditions under which this man, Jim, works."

This is a shame, yet the lack of ventilation, the lack of conveniences, the overlooking of repairs, the cramped space in which to work and the thousands and one other things which should be taken care of by our theatre men are overlooked with a shrug of the shoulders and a—"Ask Jim." This is not the case in the majority of houses, but the percentage in which it is, is large enough to make us, and should make the industry as a whole, sit up and take notice.

In certain cities the conditions under which a man is allowed to work have been laid down, so that the extreme disadvantages are not possible, yet, even with these local laws they could be entirely eliminated. The projectionist knows that he must work for a certain number of hours each day for the house in order to draw his money. When the last film is off the projector and ready to go back to the exchange he is through. He has absolutely no desire to stay around and experiment on improvements or clean up the "coop" in which he has been caged. Fresh air is what he wants and nothing can hold him.

What does all this mean?

1. It means the exhibitor is not getting efficiency.
2. The results on the screen are not what they should be.
3. His equipment is not being properly cared for.
4. He has a disgruntled member of his staff who may cause trouble.

5. He is losing patronage. His receipts are falling off. "Spend money to get money"—is the motto which these members of our industry should tack up on the wall opposite their favorite resting place. It is not a case of "throwing good money after bad," for equipment which is worth while in the first place is worth keeping up at all times. A theatre which is capable of making money can only be at its best when the result on the screen is the best possible.

On the same basis a man to do his best cannot be continually bothered with indigestion or some other ailment equally wearing on the nerves. This means that a projectionist in order to do his best must have air, cleanliness, good tools and encouragement from the man for which he works and this can not be given if the theatre man does not take pride in his projection room.

Don't misunderstand me—I do not mean that the small house with from seven hundred seats down should have a "double room and bath" for the operator. I do mean, however, that the projection room which is in the house, whether it is reached by a ladder or a carpeted stairway, should be in the very best condition possible. It is said that certain dimensions should be a minimum, but in old houses this is impossible and should not cause any worry. There are two things, however, which should be in every projection room no matter how large or how small, how old or how new if good screen results are desired:

1. Complete and modern equipment or at least thoroughly repaired and renovated mechanisms.
2. An up-to-date and adequate ventilating plant.

The first should be the pride of the theatre man. It means his bread and butter. It can be bragged about. It can be advertised. It will bring the people into the house. It may mean purchases. It may mean merely repairs and replacements. Ask your projectionist today what he needs to make his projection room an up-to-date work shop where he can turn out the results.

In the second place, a ventilating system should be enforced by law. No theatre man has the right to ask a human being to work in a room where he refuses to go himself. It may be hot—you can't eliminate heat, but the authorities can eliminate the drawing into the projection room of stale air from the auditorium. They can force the theatre man to draw out the dust, smoke and gases which emanate from most projectors and is kicked up from the floor of projection rooms. They can force cleanliness by inspecting and they should do it and every theatre man in the country knows they should.

I went into a moderate size house not long ago where the projection room was small—almost cramped—two projectors, a motor generator set, rewind and other devices. The walls had two coats of paint, battleship gray. The cement floor was painted. The tools were hung on the wall in a rack. Smoke stacks had been set in the lamp house and ran into the ventilating pipe with a fan continually sucking out the vitiated air. An air inlet entered the room at one corner continually blowing in fresh air, which was drawn from the roof by a suction fan. Glass was placed over the ports to keep out the auditorium air. The room was warm, but a pleasant place in which to work and the projectionist was happy, and what is more the picture on the screen was elegant. The theatre was and is prosperous.

How is your projection?

Questions

Motor Generators for Series Arc Operation

THE direct current arc is more efficient for projection purposes than the alternating current arc; it is steadier (has less tendency to flicker) and is practically noiseless. It is unquestionably the best arc for projection purposes in those theatres having large seating capacity with the more difficult problems of projection to solve.

Investigation shows that sixty per cent of the moving picture theatres are so located that only alternating current is available. Therefore, in order that these theatres may have direct current for the projection lamps, apparatus for changing the alternating current to direct current is necessary. The improvement in the picture resulting from the use of the direct current arc warrants the additional investment necessary to effect the change.

The change to direct current is not only desirable but should be made in such a manner that the losses will be reduced to a minimum. An arc operating from a constant voltage source of direct current requires a steadying resistance in series with it, and the use of a steadying resistance, no matter how small, results in a dead loss.

What is commonly known as a motor-generator set is two machines, a generator and a motor, coupled together and mounted on a common base.

The sets are shipped completely assembled and require only proper installation, filling of the bearings with oil and proper motor generator connection to the supply and lamp circuits before putting in service. It should be understood that these are special machines, for use only on picture projection arcs, and cannot be used for ordinary constant voltage purposes.

The complete equipment consists of the motor generator proper, two short circuiting switches, one for each picture machine, and the panel on which is mounted the instruments and field control rheostat. All single phase outfits are equipped with proper starter; for the larger multi-phase outfits a starting compensator is furnished.

INSTALLATION

The motor generator should be installed in a clean, dry, well ventilated location, and, if possible, near to the lamps which it is to operate. Oftentimes a small room adjoining the projection room is provided for the motor generator, but in some cases where such arrangement cannot be made the machine is installed in the basement of the theatre. Inaccessible locations should be avoided, as such locations will result in the machines being neglected, allowed to become dirty and perhaps damaged.

It is not necessary to provide foundations for these motor generators, but the floor on which they are placed should be firm and free from vibration.

The machines are shipped clamped to a pair of wooden skids which form a foundation for the boxing. The machine should, if possible, be left attached to these skids until it has been conveyed to the location which it is to finally occupy. It is preferable that all wiring should be done before the boxing is removed from the machine as the boxing will be effective in keeping the machine clean.

As soon as the machine is unboxed the name-plate should be inspected to see that the volts, cycles and phases marked on the name-plate of the motor agree with those of the circuit on which the machine is used. The name-plate of the generator marking also indicates the volts and amperes which the generator is designed to deliver, and this rating should agree with that specified in the order. It should be remembered that the direct current arc for motion picture projection requires less current than the alternating current arc, 25 to 35 amperes at 55 volts being usual for the direct current arc corresponding to 40 to 60 amperes at 35 volts for the alternating current arc.

The motor generator should be run only on circuits where the variation of either frequency or voltage from normal does not exceed 5 per cent. Where both frequency and voltage vary, the sum of the variations must not exceed 8 per cent.

If for any reason the generator or motor must be taken from the base in order to install the motor generator, great care must be exercised that the machines are properly lined up to give a uniform air gap when the motor generator is reassembled. If this is not done bearing trouble will occur, due to the set being out of line. Dowel pins are provided on the generator end. To remove these hold the squared head of the pin with a wrench and tighten up the nut, which will pull out the pin. Be careful that any liners found under the feet are carefully replaced in their proper place. Should the coupling be taken apart, it must be assembled carefully, making sure that the halves fit properly.

WIRING

The wiring should be sufficient size so that the line drop from the machine to the lamp will not exceed one volt, or 2 per cent of the voltage when the machine is delivering full load current to the lamp. If too small a wire is used the lamp will be robbed of some of its voltage and give poor light.

FUSES

The lamp side of these machine does not require fuses, as the generators are so constructed that they will protect themselves against overload current when the arcs are short circuited.

INITIAL STARTING

Before starting the set see that it is perfectly clean and that the brushes move freely in their holders and make good contact with the commutator. In case of ball bearing or ring type bearing, oil according to instruction tag on mechanism.

Be sure that the oil wells are clean and filled. These machines have overflow gauges with hinged caps. The oil wells should be filled through the overflow gauges rather than through the hinged covers in the bearings. This method will prevent waste and annoyance from overfilling of the oil reservoirs.

The thin oil furnished for the moving picture machines, sewing machine oil and similar light oil are not heavy enough. It is better to purchase a can of "light dynamo oil" and keep it for the motor generator.

See that the armature turns freely in the bearings, and that the machine is level.

Make sure that all connections are tight and agree with the diagram of connections for the outfit supplied.

When starting up see that the armature starts to rotate in the direction marked on the coupling. The direction of rotation of two-phase motors can be reversed by interchanging to line leads of the same phase.

In the case of single and three-phase motors it is only necessary to interchange any two line leads of the motor.

Immediately after starting, see that the oil rings revolve freely and carry the oil up to the shaft. Always keep the oil at the proper level in the well—that is, nearly to the lip of the overflow gauge.

No. 2—Horizontal Type Motor General Series Arc. Made by General Electric Company

OPERATION

In starting up the motor generator have the switches at the lamps open. If a single-phase outfit, close the main-line switch and move the starting arm on the starting box from the "off" position to the split segment, which will introduce the necessary starting coils to cause armature to start to rotate. When the armature has attained nearly full speed, the starting arm should be moved quickly over to the last segment, where it is held by a latch controlled by a relay magnet. If the voltage fails the relay magnet will release the latch, allowing the starting arm to automatically return to the "off" position, stopping the motor.

The arm of the starting box should never be left in starting position longer than one minute; usually much less time will suffice.

When the power companies do not require the use of starting compensators in connection with the two and three-phase outfits they should be equipped with double throw starting switches, which have only one side fused. When starting up, the switch should first be closed to the unfused side. When the speed of the armature is up to normal the switch should be quickly changed to the running side (fused side).

To start up a motor generator where a starting compensator is used see that compensator arm is in the "off" position and close the main switch; the compensator arm should be thrown into the starting position with a quick, firm thrust and held there until the machine comes up to speed (about 20 or 30 seconds), and then, with one quick, firm movement, the arm should be pulled over into the running position, where it is held by a lever engaging with the low-voltage release mechanism.

Never in any case should the motor be started by "touching"—that is, by throwing the starting arm into the starting position and quickly pulling it out a number of times. Such plan of "touching" does not make the rush of current at starting less, but, on the contrary, it produces a number of successive rushes in place of the one which it has been attempted to avoid and, what is often a more serious matter, causes the contact fingers to be so badly burned that it is necessary to replace them.

To stop the machine open the main switch. The compensator arm should automatically return to the "off" position on the opening of the main switch. If it does not, throw it over to the "off" position by hand.

STARTING FIRST LAMP

When the speed of the machines is up to normal and the starting box or switch is in running position and the rheostat handle set as marked by the white arrow, short circuit the one lamp by means of its short circuiting switch. Then close the lamp switch and bring the carbons together so that they barely touch; then separate them about $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch, gradually increasing the separation as carbons heat up until proper length of arc is reached. The direct current arc should be from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch long, or about twice as long as an alternating current arc. Adjust the generator field rheostat until the proper amount of current is flowing.

If carbons are held together too long the machine voltage will be automatically reduced to zero, so that the arc will not have sufficient voltage and will therefore break when carbons are separated. Should this occur, keep carbons apart about 10 seconds until machine voltage can automatically build up again; then strike the arc as directed above.

The switchboard panel, having instruments mounted on it along with the field rheostat, is very useful and the proper current can at all times be accurately maintained. As the machine warms up, the handle of the rheostat may have to be moved one or two buttons from the mark to maintain the desired voltage and current.

If the circuits are all connected as shown in the diagram, the polarity should be indicated, the upper carbon being positive. Should the upper carbon be negative and the instrument on the panel read backward, the trouble must be corrected. See that all connections are made as indicated on the diagram.

The polarity must come correct if the connections are made in accordance with the diagram of connections and the armature of the set rotates in the direction marked on the coupling.

STARTING THE SECOND LAMP

To start the second lamp bring the carbons together to close the circuit, close the lamp switch and open the short-circuiting switch. This puts the two lamps in series, the current from the first lamp flowing through the second lamp. The arc at the second lamp is adjusted in the regular manner while both lamps are burning.

When ready to change over from one lamp to the other bring the carbons of the first lamp together and close its short-circuiting switch, continuing the projection on the second lamp.

It has been found in practice that the following scheme gives the most satisfactory results.

A minute or two before the end of a reel of film is reached bring the carbons of the second lamp together, close its line switch and open its short-circuiting switch. The current for the first lamp flowing through the carbons of the second lamp causes the tips of the carbons of the second lamp to heat up to a white heat at the tips without actually drawing an arc. Since the tips of the car-

No. 5—Control Panel Vertical Type

bons are heated up by this scheme, a normal arc is easily and quickly secured when it is time to change over to this second lamp.

Care must be taken that the two lamps are not both burning any longer than is necessary, as the motor generator is not intended to carry both lamps continuously. The ammeter on the panel will show the current flowing through the arc when either one or both lamps are burning; the voltage is automatically increased by the machine to compensate for the increased drop due to the second lamp, and the current is held practically constant.

CARE AND CLEANLINESS

It is important that all parts of the machine be kept scrupulously clean. Oil should not be allowed to collect either on the machine or on the floor about it, and the machine should, as far as possible, be kept free from dust. When the coils of a machine are allowed to become dirty and oil soaked it reduces their insulation strength and eventually causes them to burn out. A small hand bellows will be found convenient for removing dust from the armature windings.

BEARINGS

The oil wells should occasionally be cleaned and new oil supplied. They should be filled through the side filling hole and not through the top of the bearing, for if filled from the top the oil is likely to flow out through the ends of the bearings into the windings.

Only good grades of oil, free from dust and sediment, should be used, for poor oil containing sediment will greatly shorten the life of the bearings. Immediately after starting see that the oil rings revolve freely and carry the oil up to the top of the shaft. Keep the oil at the proper level in the well—that is, nearly to the lip of the overflow gauge. As soon as the bearing linings become so worn that the rotor is in danger of rubbing against the stator, a new set of linings should be inserted. To remove the bearings, take out the set screws in the bearing housing, lift the oil rings and drive out the bearings with a wooden block of the same diameter as the bearings. The bearings are a light driving fit in the housing and must be handled carefully. When repair bearings are supplied for the alternating current motor the set screw depression is already in the bearing, but the direct current generator bearings, which regulate the end play, are supplied without being previously spotted. They must be spotted before being put in place, using a $\frac{1}{8}$ -inch drill, and spot drilling for the tip of the set screw the same distance from the end of the bearing as in the bearing replaced.

COMMUTATOR AND BRUSHES

It is very important that the brushes make perfect contact with the commutator, and to secure good contact it is important that both brushes and commutator be kept clean and free from carbon dust and dirt.

To secure proper commutation and proper operation the brushes must occupy the correct position on the commutator. This proper position of the brush yoke has been determined at the factory while the machine was on test and is indicated by corresponding chisel marks on brush yoke and frame. It is very important that these marks, indicated by white lead, should be in line to secure satisfactory operation of the machine.

If the brush-holders should become loosened or moved in any way, they must be carefully reset so that they make the proper angle with the commutator. They must also be spaced around the commutator so that the distance from tip to tip of the brushes is exactly the same. Care should be taken that the brush-holders are securely fastened at an even height $\frac{1}{8}$ inch above the commutator.

When replacing worn down brushes the new ones should be fitted to the commutator by means of fine sandpaper, carefully pulled under the brush in the direction of rotation, being held tight to the contour of the commutator. It is recommended that one extra set of brushes be kept on hand to save time in replacing. They will, however, not be needed until the original brushes have worn down to approximately $\frac{3}{4}$ inch long.

The brushes furnished on the motor generator are of the proper grade to give the best results, and only brushes furnished by this company should be used.

If brushes are inspected once a week and all gum cleaned away from the brushes so that they move freely in the brush-holders, much longer life of brushes and commutator will result. If the pressure is too heavy the wear of both commutator and brushes is excessive. If the pressure is too light the contact is not properly made between brushes and commutator and sparking may result. The proper pressure of the springs on the brushes is sufficient to insure good contact between brushes and commutator.

A dirty commutator can be best cleaned by rubbing with a clean cloth saturated with kerosene or machine oil. To keep the commutator in good condition wipe it from time to time with a piece of canvas lightly coated with sperm or machine oil. Lubricant of any kind should be used sparingly.

If the commutator begins to cause trouble at any time due to roughness it should be given immediate attention. Any delay will aggravate the case and may result in undue sparking, heating and consequent troubles. The roughness may be removed by polishing the commutator with a piece of very fine sandpaper by pressing it against the surface of the commutator with a block of wood shaped to the curvature of the commutator face. In using the sandpaper (emery cloth should never be used) it should be moved back and forth along the surface parallel to the shaft to prevent grooving the face of commutator. When sanding is finished, the commutator surface and brush faces must be wiped carefully to remove any copper dust and grit which may have adhered to them.

If the commutator has been allowed to become very rough, it may be necessary to grind it down to a true surface, using a small piece of fine sandstone. In using this it should be steadied against the brush-holder (properly protected) or other steady rest. Brushes should be lifted from the commutator while grinding it. After grinding, polish with fine sandpaper.

If the above treatment does not remedy the trouble it will be necessary to tighten the commutator segments and turn down the commutator. The commutator should be trued by taking off the lightest cut possible, using a sharp tool and high cutting speed. Following the operation of turning down the commutator, the mica between the bars should be carefully cut below the surface bars. Next remove the tool marks from the surface of the commutator with a very fine sandpaper and then blow all the copper dust and chips from in and round the commutator bars, making a final inspection to see that in no place does the copper dust or chips bridge over the mica from one bar to the next.

The truing of the commutator should be required only after a long period of service if the machine has been properly cared for and should be done only by some one familiar with such work.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

Musical
Equipment*The American Organ in the Motion Picture Theatre*

AN American organ is a free-reed instrument similar in its general construction to the harmonium, but with some important differences. In the first place the reeds in the American organ are considerably smaller and more curved and twisted than in the harmonium, and there is a wider space left at the side of the reed for it to vibrate, the result being that the tone is more uniform in power, and that the expression stop when used produces much less effect. The curvature of the reeds also makes the tone softer. In the American organ moreover the wind-channel or cavity under which the vibrators are fixed is always the exact length of the reed, whereas in the harmonium it is varied according to the quality of tone required, being shorter for a more reedy tone and longer for a more fluty one. Another point of difference in the two instruments is that in the harmonium the wind is forced outward through the reeds, whereas in the American organ, by reversing the action of the bellows, it is drawn inwards. The advantages of the American organ as compared with the harmonium are that the blowing is easier, the expression stop not being generally used, and that the tone is of a more organ-like quality, and therefore peculiarly adapted for sacred music; on the other hand, it is inferior in having much less variety of tone, and not nearly so much power of expression.

These instruments are sometimes made with two manuals; in the most complete specimens the upper manual is usually furnished with one set of reeds of eight-feet and one of four-feet pitch, and the lower manual with one of eight- and one of sixteen-feet, those on the upper manual being also voiced more softly for the purposes of accompaniment. A mechanical coupling action is also provided by which the whole power of the instrument can be obtained from the lower row of keys. Pedals, similar to organ pedals, are also occasionally added and provided with reeds of sixteen- and eight-feet pitch. The names given to the stops vary with different makers; the plan most usually adopted being to call them by the names of the organ stops which they are intended to imitate; e. g. diapason, principal, hautboy, gamba, flute, etc.

Two recent improvements in the American organ should be mentioned—the automatic swell, and the vox humana. The former consists of a pneumatic lever which gradually opens shutters placed above the reeds, the lever being set in motion by the pressure of wind from the bellows. The greater the pressure, the wider the shutters open, and when the pressure is decreased they close again by their own weight. In this way an effect is produced somewhat similar, though far inferior, to that of the expression stop on the harmonium. The vox humana is another mechanical contrivance. In this a fan is placed just behind the sound-board of the instrument, and being made to revolve rapidly by means of the pressure of wind, its revolutions meet the waves of sound coming from the reeds, and impart to them a slightly tremulous, or vibrating quality.

The principle of the American organ was first discovered about 1835 by a workman in the factory of M. Alexandre, the most celebrated harmonium-maker of Paris. M. Alexandre constructed a few instruments on this plan, but being dissatisfied with them because of their want of expressive power, he soon ceased to make them. The workman subsequently went to America, carrying his invention with him. The instruments first made in America were known as "Melodeons," or "Melodiums," and with various improvements suggested by experience, was first introduced by Messrs. Mason and Hamlin of Boston, about the year 1860. Since that time, it has obtained considerable popularity both in American and in this country.

A variety of the American organ was introduced in 1874 by Messrs. Alexandre under the name of the "Alexandre Organ." In this instrument, instead of the single channel placed above the reeds there are two, one opening out of the other. The effect of this alteration is to give a quality of tone like flute-stops.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Waters of Venice," by Albert Von Tilzer. It is acknowledged as the most remarkable dance and concert waltz of the decade and is unique in its adaptability to dance or concert work. (Artmusic Co., 145 W. 45th St., New York.)

2—"Belgium Waltz" (Valse Belge), by Michael Massart. A dance master work from the pen of this gifted foreign composer. A tribute to plucky little Belgium. (Chappell & Co., 185 Madison Ave., New York.)

3—"No Conversation Fox-Trot," by Charles Previn. Dance with phenomenal success into "The Girl Behind the Gun" by Donald Brian and Cissy Sewell. Already a New York hit. This Fox-Trot will be the joy of the jazz-hound and a treat to trotters. It's a ripping dancing number with perfect rhythm. Will be to fox-trots what "Missouri Waltz" is to waltzes. (Chappell & Co.)

4—"I've Got the Blue Ridge Blues"—Fox-Trot. One of the greatest dance numbers ever published. (J. C. Remick, 227 W. 46th St., New York.)

5—"Valse Pathétique," by M. L. Lake. A ravishing slow waltz containing every melodic and effective qualification necessary for achieving thorough and complete popular success. The number consists of a languid, dreamy, first strain, splendidly contrasted by a bright and catchy second theme, and a plaintive trio, developing a stirring climax, together with the recurrence of the earlier pathetic strain, bringing the waltz to a very effective close. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Square, New York.)

6—"A Balkan Episode"—Characteristic, by R. Gruenwald. Mr. Gruenwald has no superior as a composer of characteristic music; and, besides, it is exceedingly practical. This also is a good photoplay number. (Oliver Ditson Co., Boston, Mass.)

7—"Victory Waltz," by Sidney Baynes, composer of "Destiny." This famous composer's name if affixed to any composition immediately leaves no doubt as to its merit. (Boston Music Co., 26 West St., Boston.)

8—"Dream of the Ball"—a new "Joyce" waltz. Valse intermezzo by Archibald Joyce, composer of the celebrated "Dreaming," "Charming," "Passing of Salome." (Leo. Feist, 237 W. 40th St., New York.)

9—"I Ain't Got Weary Yet"—Fox-Trot by Percy Wenrich. The new gang song by the authors of "Where Do We Go from Here, Boys?" (Feist Edition.)

10—"Birds and Butterflies," by Paul Vely. A dainty intermezzo capriccioso, depicting the very essence of spring-time and flowers, with the delightful humming of the birds of the air. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., New York.)

11—"Hunkatin"—the only characteristic original and amusing Half-Tone Intermezzo One-Step ever published. Written by that well-known and reputable musician, Sol P. Levy. (Belwin, Inc.)

12—"Watch, Hope and Wait, Little Girl"—is one of the biggest Fox-Trot hits of the day and all leaders will be featuring it shortly. (Broadway Music Corp., 145 W. 45th St., New York.)

13—"My Pavo Real Girl"—Fox-Trot by Ben Black. That beautiful melody with the Spanish flavor just off the press, in new dance arrangement. (Feist edition.)

Schirmer Novelties

THE house of G. Schirmer, whose publications are well known all over the world, have just issued a series of new numbers for piano solo which are original and are of great value to all those who are striving to musically interpret the film correctly.

1. "Aubade Printaniere," a molto allegro composition of a light character, portraying the spring morning with the chattering of birds.

2. "Danse Gracieuse," a moderato grazioso movement, exceptionally well written and most appropriate for scenes of a light character.

3. "Mountain Mood," by Christiaan Kriens. A composition by this composer always means a novelty of exceptional musical merit. The number is slightly difficult but a very interesting and clever one for the pianoforte.

4. "From My Garden," a suite of five summer idyls, by Rudolf Friml, entitled "Muriel," "Memories," "Lotus-Blossoms," "Fire-flies" and "Solitude."

5. "Courtships," another interesting composition by Rudolf Friml which even surpasses his famous "Melody" and "Intermezzo." The first movement is a moderato grazioso of a light character, the second being an andante of a melodious character.

6. "Scattering Leaves," an allegro giocoso portraying the rustle of scattering leaves of an Autumn forest.

7. "Jeannette," by Hugo Riesenfeld. It is beyond any doubt that Hugo Riesenfeld, the musical director of the Rialto and Rivoli orchestras of New York City, is a musician who is capable of writing a good number and who has experience enough to write only such numbers as would be in demand by every motion picture piano player in the world. The number is a characteristic caprice and exceptionally well arranged, embodying a wealth of music.

8. "Meditation," by George Drumm. A large introduction followed by an andante cantabile of exceptional tonal beauty, the third movement being a three-fourths larghetto, finishing with an andante climax, is a number which is of great value to organists in portraying scenes of sacred or pathetic character.

New Vandersloot Publications

THE editor of these columns is in receipt of several new publications by Vandersloot Music Company, and after trying them out, finds that they are of exceptional value to the motion picture musician. As the purpose of this department is to help leaders in acquiring the most appropriate music for their use, the editor considers it his duty to inform all musicians of the following excellent compositions:

1. "SLIDING SID."—An excellent one-step of comedy character with original trombone work.

2. "WHEN I DREAM ABOUT THAT SOUTHERN HOME OF MINE."—A song most appropriate for love scenes and for creating an atmosphere around the old Southern plantations.

3. "YANKEE BOY."—An up-to-date patriotic composition which gives evidence of becoming one of the most popular songs issued during the war.

4. "COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF."—A 6/8 military march of brilliant rhythm written by a composer of international reputation, Mr. F. H. Losey.

5. "IN THE SHADOW OF THE DESERT PALM."—A typical Oriental ballad, composed by Mr. Will E. Dulmage and words by E. J. Meyers.

6. "NONA."—A melodious waltz song most appropriate for garden and reception scenes.

7. "GENERAL PERSHING."—A march song composed by Carl D. Vandersloot; a composition of brilliant military snap portraying the vim of our famous General.

8. "THE FIGHT IS ON."—A 6/8 march of military character with a very snappy and well arranged trio, most appropriate for military scenes, weeklies and tropical reviews.

Sousa's New March

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA has just written a new march, "When the Boys Come Sailing Home," the lyric of which was written by his daughter Helen. There is a saucy humor in the song and the kind of graceful melody which only Lieutenant Sousa knows how to make popular. There is every assurance that all the bands in the Fifth Avenue parades will soon be playing it as a step-quickener, and it is likely to become a dangerous rival to the famous and much-loved "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Harold Flammer, the publisher, has dressed the piano score in becoming garments of Victory.

"The Heart of Humanity," with Dorothy Phillips

(Jewel—9 Reels. Directed by Allen Holubar)

THE question has been often asked: "What is a good picture?" Perhaps the best answer that could be given, as it applies to the dramatic sort of subjects, would be, "The one that is built upon a story of current interest representing life as it is, and appeals to the deeper emotions." "The Heart of Humanity" is based on these fundamental principles.

It is true that it is a picture based on a war story; and, as the war has ended and the necessity for stimulating our will towards victory has ceased to exist, it can no more, nor can any such stories, be classed as being of "current interest."

But you cannot judge this production by the ordinary five-reel war picture standard, for the reason that it has been produced on so enormous a scale, that it lifts itself bodily out of that class. Besides, there is another reason why you should judge it differently: it will give satisfaction commensurate with its magnitude: Firstly, because the human element prevails throughout the entire length of the story, affecting the emotions, not here and there, but continuously; secondly, because every situation, every incident, whether intended to produce artistic, spectacular, thrilling, or whatever other effects, has been put there to promote the one main object—to stir the emotions and awaken the sympathy; and lastly, because the players, as well as the material factors, have been handled by the director so masterly, that, had this drama occurred in life, it would have been enacted no more realistically.

The first three reels are devoted to describing the serene life of a picturesque Canadian village. A family of six, consisting of a mother and five sons; also the good Father and his niece, betrothed to the eldest son, form the central figures. Content and happiness reign over the whole village. On the day the couple is married, war breaks out. All five brothers answer the call to arms. The rest of the story deals with the war in France, and the young wife's going there as a Red Cross nurse.

The war scenes are realistic in the extreme. In some of the battles, tanks, flame-throwers, scouting and bombing airplanes, machine guns, hand grenades, guns of large and small caliber, and almost every known instrument of destruction is used at the same time, to back up row after row of men going "over the top"; and in the midst of the din of the battle, the whizzing bullets, and the bursting shells, the sight of each falling hero urging his next comrade to "carry on!" causes an electric current to run through your body. The mimic warfare is so realistic that you become a participant, rejoicing at every achievement of the friendly troops, and suffering in common with them at each temporary setback. Now and then a scene is "cut in," showing the mother back home bravely bearing the loss of each son, without so much as a tear. Her heroism fills your heart with admiration; and you feel compassion for her loss. Really, the spirit that has made victory possible dwells in this picture.

There are strong spots in it, but at no time are they gruesome, hardly a drop of blood being shown. The desired object sought—to expose German barbarism—has been attained without the use of any repelling close-up scenes.

The comedy element has not been overlooked. It does not occur very often; but when it does occur, it is in harmony with the other elements, causing hearty laughs.

The work of Miss Phillips is sincere and convincing, therefore it needs special commendation. So does that of Eric Von Stroheim, who, as the German officer, is extremely realistic. Mrs. Margaret Mann, as the mother, is splendid. Mr. Stowell is a very good hero.

On the whole, this production is an achievement, of which any director should feel proud.—P. S. Harrison.

"Kilauea Volcano"

(Prizma—One Reel—Released Through World)

ANY exhibitor who believes he knows the last word in scenics and who has not seen this initial release of the Prizma Natural Color pictures, had better turn over a new leaf and indulge in another thought. That single reeler will cause just about twice as much comment as a five-reel feature because it introduces a natural color process that is surely an artistic success whereas the subject chosen to be so photographed is of vast interest in itself. The Kilauea Volcano, known as the Hell Hole of Hawaii, a huge, bubbling pot of molten lava and flame, ever seething and ever forming new and weird figures, makes a striking, almost awe-inspiring display when photographed in its natural colors. Jets and spouts of flame are seen intermingled with the shifting mass of lava.

It is a wonderful sight—this reel—from its opening to its close and any and all exhibitors would do well to book it and give it the benefit of advertising. It is well edited and the titles show intelligence and occasional bits of humor that make a rare combination.—Peter Milne.

"FOR FREEDOM"—FOX

Farnum Picture Looks Like Good Stories Are Scarce

JUDGING from this picture, one comes to the conclusion that there is scarcity of stories, a condition which is hardly attributable to the producers for its existence. It stands to reason that William Fox, who is willing to pay a big salary for the star, will not stop short of any expense in securing the right kind of a story for Mr. Farnum; and, as long as human skill has not developed to the point of writing new successes each time, you have to accept the occasional weak ones as they come.

"For Freedom" does not come up to the standard of Mr. Farnum's late contributions. Although he is given the human part, his sacrifice to save others is beyond logic. It is improbable that, however good at heart a person may be, he will go to such extremes in real life, as does the hero of this story; but the star's real, not imaginary, winning personality, will help, I am sure, to pull it over, especially among the Farnum fans. They will be willing to excuse the inconsistencies, as long as he is the hero, and as long as he does no small trick to deprive him of their sympathy. The patriotic element will also help a great deal.

In view of the perfection of the studio-made battle scenes, a little better care should have been exercised in staging the trench fighting in the last two reels. Weak ones cannot escape the searching eye of the present day spectator, because there are too many good ones produced nowadays, with which to compare them.

The picture is clean.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Originality of plot, excellent treatment and acting of an unusually high quality are elements which the picturegoer has in store for him in "For Freedom," a feature in which William Fox presents William Farnum on of week at the theatre. In "For Freedom" the authors, E. Lloyd Sheldon and Florence Margolies, took for their theme the convict's viewpoint in regard to the war. An interesting slant on the world struggle, to be sure. Should a man, convicted of a crime under the laws of his state, be allowed to fight under the colors on the field of battle? Or should he be kept idle in prison? This is the predicament which faces Robert Wayne in "For Freedom," and the manner in which the authors have developed their story around him makes a photoplay of absorbing quality.

It is hardly necessary to add that William Farnum makes of this role one of the biggest and strongest of his wonderful career before the camera. As may readily be seen, the part makes for big emotional opportunities and these the actor grasps with all the varied ability that is at his command. His characterization develops into one which compares favorably with his Jean Valjean in the picturization of Victor Hugo's famous "Les Miserables." And Mr. Fox assembled a truly fine supporting cast for the star. Included in it are two well-known leading women, Ruby De Remer and Anna Lehr, while G. Raymond Nye, Marc Robbins, Herbert Frank, C. Albertson and John Slaven take other important parts.

The film was produced under the direction of Frank Lloyd, a guarantee of its sure dramatic quality and faithful realism as to all details.

THE STORY

Robert Wayne is a highly honored citizen of a small, yet rich, manufacturing town. His sister, Edith, is the wife of Herbert Osborne, one of the principal stockholders in a company which a big trust is attempting to buy out. Stratton, a representative of the trust, appears in the town in an attempt to put the deal through. He sees that it is useless to attempt to work through Osborne so he lays his plan through Edith. The day before the stockholders are to vote, Osborne is called away. He leaves his proxy in the power of Wayne. Stratton lures Edith to an inn some distance from the town, then leaves her and notifies Wayne of her predicament over the 'phone. Wayne hastens to rescue her and so misses the meeting. As a result, the company passes into the hands of the trust.

Stratton has warned Edith not to talk, threatening her with production of her letters to him. Wayne goes to get these letters in the city and, in the struggle with Stratton, the black-mailer is killed. Keeping his silence and assuming another name, Wayne goes to prison. When the war breaks out he asks for parole with the stipulation that he will enlist. Previous to his departure for Europe he meets Mary Fenton, a Red Cross worker, and falls in love. At the front, Wayne acquires himself heroically, and in rescuing a comrade is himself so severely wounded that he is invalided home.

He attends a reception given at the Fenton home in celebration of Germany's surrender. He proposes to Mary and she accepts, but the first person to hear the news is David Sterling, Mary's uncle, who granted Wayne his parole. He objects. Edith refuses to allow her brother to sacrifice himself further in her behalf and confesses all, thus exonerating him.

SUGGESTIONS

If desired, you can advertise this as a drama of a man's sacrifice for his sister's sake, or as a picture which raises the status of a convict in war time. While, if the first course is followed, you will run no danger of losing patronage that might fight clear of war stuff, it is quite apparent that the latter angle is the most original. So far as we can recall, there have been no pictures taking up the spirit of patriotism from this slant. Its originality, therefore, is a thing that will stand out if you properly advertise it. With war as a background, any story can get over, providing that story is human, and if you bring out this convict idea with respect to the war you will doubtless attract considerable attention. The catch lines have been written for you with this idea in view. Get all the punch into your advertising that is possible and you will be able to get considerable by working Farnum up in this role.

Farnum, it is unnecessary to add, is a fine attraction in himself. You also have Ruby De Remer and Anna Lehr, two well-known leading women, in the supporting cast. Don't neglect them. And Frank Lloyd, a director who has many big successes to his credit, should be mentioned in all billing.

CATCH LINES

A film which raises the question as to a convict's status in time of war. Should he be allowed to serve his country on the field of honor?

Robert Wayne served a prison term for a crime committed in defense of his sister's honor. When war came he asked opportunity to serve his country! A convict on the field of honor!

William Farnum's characterization of the part of Robert Wayne, a man convicted of murder but paroled that he might fight for his country, ranks with his always-remembered Jean Valjean in "Les Miserables."

He was a war hero—but an ex-convict! Did this make any difference to Mary Fenton, who loved him? Was her love for a cross of honor man to be dimmed because of his term behind prison bars? See "For Freedom"—a play in which William Farnum is at his best.

William Farnum supported by two noted leading women—Ruby De Remer and Anna Lehr—"For Freedom" is a dramatic photoplay you can not afford to miss.

Lavish Production Marks Anita Stewart's Return to Screen

TO say that the audience that greeted Anita Stewart's return to the screen Dec. 29 at the Strand enjoyed "Virtuous Wives" would be putting the facts mildly. From the very introduction, an introduction in the way of a scene between Father Time and a baby who talks of the career before her as a sophisticated debutante might, it was well entertained and well rewarded for its collective struggle for seats. This introduction which causes a laugh and creates an eager interest for what is to follow, exemplifies the interesting manner in which George Loane Tucker has treated Owen Johnson's story from beginning to end.

It is a story of sophisticated society, a society that persists in skating over the thinnest ice. And while Mr. Johnson's plot is too fluffy to be worth much in a dramatic way, under the hand of Mr. Tucker, the peregrinations of Amy Forrester in society take on a fascination that holds the interest admirably well.

The film has been lavishly produced, revealing a combined sense of artistry and extravaganza that is always enjoyable. Miss Stewart is delightful to look upon and measures up to requirements in the leading role, while Conway Tearle, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper and Edwin Arden give superlative support.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

The attraction for the week of — at the — theatre is considered something of an event in photodramatic history. It is called "Virtuous Wives" and many patrons will remember it as Owen Johnson's famous serial story of society life which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine only a short while ago. The film is notable for this story it possesses alone, but when one stops to consider that it marks Anita Stewart's return to the screen after an absence of nearly a year, the full importance of the picture may readily be grasped. Miss Stewart, the heroine of so many successful Vitagraph pictures of the past, returns to screen as a First National star—a colleague of Charlie Chaplin, it might be added, in order to establish the importance and standing of the name of First National.

In "Virtuous Wives" she has the role of a young wife who occupies herself during an enforced period of separation from her husband by flirting with the various men who surround her as so many satellites. It is merely innocent, "virtuous" flirting, as Irma Delabarre, her model and pattern, takes particular pains to tell her. No harm will come of it. But some harm does come. And it comes chiefly because the husband in the case happens to be a sane, hard-headed man. We are not going to attempt to tell this fascinating story in detail. It is told so well on the screen that we feel certain none of our patrons will miss the chance to see it.

Miss Stewart appears radiant in the principal role and is supported excellently by Conway Tearle, Mrs. DeWolf Hopper, Edwin Arden and William Boyd. The film was given an exceptionally lavish production by George Loane Tucker.

CATCH LINES

Marking Miss Stewart's return to the screen—a production lavish and startling in every detail—the story of a society that delights in skating over the thinnest ice—it's THE story of the year—don't miss it.

What is virtue in a wife? Amy Forrester and Irma Delabarre thought they had found it. But it took something bigger than they expected to bring them to a real sense of honest virtue.

Anita Stewart is charming in the role of the young wife who lets the adoration of many take the place of the love of one—her support is brilliant from first to last, including, as it does, Conway Tearle, Mrs. DeWolf Hopper, Edwin Arden and William Boyd.

Adapted from Owen Johnson's great serial which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine—prepared for the screen and directed by George Loane Tucker, one of the foremost directors of the day—it is a picture in which a sense of artistry and a sense of extravaganza constantly vie for first honors.

The story of two women who had too much money—a near tragedy awoke each to a real sense of love and honor—a sense of what a real home meant.

THE STORY

Amy Forrester, who has been one of the leading debutantes, is the wife of Andrew Forrester, a man who, for twenty years, has known little but hard work. They have settled in a modest apartment of fourteen rooms and three baths and Andrew sees near the time when he can devote more attention to the wife he loves. But enter the Delabarres who alter the face of the situation slightly. Maurice Delabarre is a steel magnate, anxious to absorb Forrester's company and bring him into his own firm at a salary of fifty thousand a year. Andrew is inclined to rest content with his twenty-five thousand yearly income so Maurice hits through Amy. He invites the Forresters to spend the week-end at his country estate which, if it were in the old world, would be called a castle.

Mrs. Irma Delabarre is a woman who delights in flirting with the type of man usually referred to as a "lounge lizard." But Andrew looks upon her as a model of feminine perfection. As a consequence he decides to accept Delabarre's offer that Amy may become a social factor of equal importance to Irma. But to accept the offer he is obliged to go West and spend a year in the mines. And while he is away Amy follows Irma's footsteps and takes up the practice of being a "virtuous wife"; that is, flirting with as many men as she can without taking any of them seriously. She incurs Irma's jealousy because she steals her pet, Monte Bracken, and, notified, Andrew returns post haste to denounce his wife.

He finds her considerably changed, a butterfly, content to bask in the adoration of many, almost to the exclusion of accepting the sincere love he offers. Andrew discovers the true character of Irma and also wakes up to the fact that he hasn't paid sufficient attention to his wife. He announces to her that he will return to the West in an hour and that if she will she may go with him. But unforeseen events interfere. The Delabarres' boy climbs in a motor boat and loses control. As he is carried swiftly over the lake Amy hears his cries and goes in her craft to his rescue. The boy is obliged to jump into the water to save himself and is rescued by Amy. Near death's door, his condition results in the reformation of Irma and a reconciliation between her and her husband.

And soon afterwards Amy arrives in the West, determined that she shall again rest in the arms of a real man—her husband.

SUGGESTIONS

To enumerate the advertising possibilities contained in this feature would require considerable space—more than allowed here. Remember these things:

It is Anita Stewart's first picture in a year and that she has a large following waiting her return.

The picture's title is, without exception, one of the best, if not the best that has ever been placed on a film.

The story ran for ten months in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Owen Johnson, one of the best known writers of the day, is its author.

George Loane Tucker, one of the best known directors of the day, adapted and directed it.

Such well-known celebrities as Conway Tearle, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, Edwin Arden and William Boyd appear in Miss Stewart's support.

The production is as lavish as any ever seen on the screen in a subject of this sort.

The story, dealing with high society, presents a fascinating phase of it.

First National has supplied the exhibitor with an excellent press sheet and excellent advertising material for all branches of exploitation.

Get hold of it. And then go the limit!

"IN THE HOLLOW OF HER HAND"—SELECT

All Things Unite to Make This an Alice Brady Triumph

ALICE BRADY has appeared in many pictures modeled as a setting for her emotional acting, but it remains for "In the Hollow of Her Hand" to establish a mark that for sheer suitability and highly dramatic and sustained action, stands considerably above that reached by all previous pictures. And this is due to the facts that as well as being an ideal vehicle for the star it is a drama treated with the utmost skill from all angles.

The George Barr McCutcheon story, which forms the basis of the action, was handled with a degree of sure dramatic perspective and refreshing originality by Charles Maigne, who arranged and directed the picture. He starts off with a situation that immediately arouses curiosity and with each successive development of the story he has deepened and broadened this curiosity, so that when the body of the action is reached, the interest is at its utmost height.

A reading of the synopsis will show the novel angle from which the story has been treated. Of the cast, much of praise can be said. Miss Brady's performance is highly sustained and always effective. Myrtle Stedman gives a characterization that is sure and telling. Percy Marmont is a hero of a vastly interesting and "different" type. The settings are superb and show some artistic shots, while Leo Rossi's camera work has much to commend it.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Hetty Castleton was employed merely as a pawn of revenge by Sara Wrاندall—it was her mission to ruin the life of a man—but love came and found a better way.

A story of the eternal triangle with a different twist—it will make you sit tight through its sheer dramatic force and its startling developments.

Prepared for the screen and directed by Charles Maigne, one of the leading artists of the day.

Alice Brady has had many an emotional role but she has never appeared to such advantage as in "In the Hollow of Her Hand," a George Barr McCutcheon story.

Sara Wrاندall held Hetty Castleton in the Hollow of Her Hand until Hetty saw that her silence meant tragedy—then she spoke and her words startled and thrilled.

AD TALK

"In the Hollow of Her Hand," a Select picture starring Alice Brady, will be the piece de resistance of the theatre's bill on of week. This production was made from a story by the popular George Barr McCutcheon and presents a version of the eternal triangle that is, to say the least, original in treatment. As scenarioized and directed by Charles Maigne, Miss Brady's new director, the story takes on a sure dramatic quality, a sustaining force that the spectator will find irresistible. Mr. Maigne is a director who follows no conventional school of picture production. His product is always marked by refreshing originality of treatment. He has the inborn ability to derive the most from all sorts of material and "In the Hollow of Her Hand" he has quite surpassed all former efforts.

Miss Brady's emotional ability is directed toward worthy ends indeed in her portrayal of the character of Hetty Castleton, the young English woman, who, finding herself the innocent victim of a man's deceit, kills him. Nor is her supporting cast of any mean ability. Myrtle Stedman has an important role as the wife of the murdered man who introduces Hetty into his family with the hope of revenge and she handles it with the skill of the trained artist that she is. Percy Marmont as the artist, Brandon Booth, the man who understands and loves Hetty, creates another one of this easy, pleasing characters with which picturegoers are so familiar.

The picture is laid in a variety of handsome and pretty settings, this applying to both interiors and exteriors. The photographic work of Leo Rossi is to be referred to only in words of the highest praise.

THE STORY

Sara Wrاندall is summoned to a road house some distance from the city to identify the body of her dead husband. The summons comes as a great shock to her and so too does the news she hears regarding the late Mr. Wrاندall's escapade. It appears that he entered the place with a woman and that later he had been found dead and the woman gone. Sara starts back to the city in her car and while crossing a bridge notices another woman, her clothes torn, her hair disarranged, her eyes wild. Intuitively she knows that she is the other woman. She takes her in her machine and drives her back to the city. She learns that she is Hetty Castleton, a woman of English birth. Sara invites her to make her home with her and Hetty accepts, even knowing that Sara was the wife of Wrاندall.

Wrاندall had come from a family of prudes and Sara plans a bitter revenge. She succeeds in throwing Hetty and young Leslie Wrاندall much in each other's company. The young man becomes infatuated but his love is not returned. It is Brandon Booth, an artist, whom she loves. Booth is a man who instinctively understands and his admiration and love for her know no bounds. Much to Sara's chagrin Hetty turns Leslie down. Her temper getting the better of her she insists that she marry him or stand to be exposed in her affair with Wrاندall. But a detective employed by the senior Wrاندall saves Sara the trouble. He believes he has found the woman who committed the murder. He believes she is Sara. Hetty, however, tells the truth and her own story of the manner in which Wrاندall led her to believe he was unmarried. The Wrاندall family are shocked but believe Hetty in the right. They leave Sara alone while Hetty finds comfort and love in the arms of Brandon Booth.

Are you getting the benefit of Alice Brady's great stage success, "For Ever After?" This play has run in New York for many weeks and is of the type that attracts the visitor. There may be those from your town who have seen her in this piece. Try carrying a line to the effect that she is starring in this play in New York. The results may not be measured perceptibly at the box office, but at least you will have the satisfaction of lending dignity to your advertising by so doing.

"WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE"—AMERICAN

A Rapid Action Western for William Russell's Latest

WILLIAM RUSSELL has never been seen in an offering in which the action is so rapid as it is in "When a Man Rides Alone." The first thing that attracts your attention is the magnificent rugged country that forms the background of the opening scene, which, with the picturesque hills and the lofty mountains in the distance, form a sight that is extremely enchanting. It actually looks like painting, adding no little to the entertaining values. Throughout the entire length of the photoplay, the same artistic taste is shown in the selection of the locations.

The story deals with Mexican outlaws and Texas Rangers, in which a love affair between the hero, the Chief of the Rangers, and a Spanish senorita, the proud daughter of proud ancestors, is logically interwoven. The humanitarian motives of the Americans, even when dealing with Mexican brigands, are adequately depicted, thus winning your sympathy for the hero and eventually for the heroine.

With a little more care on the editing a one hundred per cent picture would have been the result. The nature of the theme, of course, presupposes plenty of shooting and some killings, therefore, it is better suitable for those audiences that like the Western type of photoplays.—Released through Pathe, Jan. 19.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

William Russell in the western photoplay dealing with the Texas Rangers and their enemies. A magnificently strong story by Stephen Fox—a writer who has given of his best to the screen.

The bandits posed as Mexican gentlemen before an old gentleman of the range. He fought with them against the gallant Texas Rangers until he discovered the truth. Then he turned into the right path and threw all his weight in the scales on the side of justice.

See William Russell as William Sykes, chief of the Texas Rangers—his greatest outdoor role—a part in which he appears to singular advantage—a real fighting part—a part which no other actor could undertake with such success.

AD TALK

William Russell will be seen as the star of "When a Man Rides Alone," the American feature which will hold the place of honor on the theatre's bill on _____ of _____ week. This is Mr. Russell's latest photoplay done for the American company, and, as advance reports indicate, it is a western picture of a far from ordinary character. The men in this story, the Rangers of Texas, of which William Sykes (William Russell) is their chief, are men who lead the most obscure of lives along the ranges, through the forest reservations of the west and on the border lines between the United States and Mexico. The daily routine in their lives consists of adventures that would make startling reading if ever published, but so remote are they from all forces of civilization that seldom do any of their exploits reach the public through the printed page.

Stephen Fox, author of "When a Man Rides Alone," has taken one of these "daily routines" in the life of a Texas Ranger and has written around it a photoplay of a quality that puts the great majority of western pictures well in the shade. The adventures of William Sykes, who is obliged to fight a band of outlaws who have convinced a respectable Mexican gentleman and his daughter that they are law abiding citizens form the nucleus of the action. A mere outline, however, cannot do justice to Mr. Fox's complete work. It must be seen to be appreciated.

Mr. Russell appears to splendid advantage as Sykes, and his supporting cast, recruited from the best in the ranks of the American stock company, includes Carl Stockdale and Lule Warrenton.

THE STORY

William Sykes, known as "Captain Bonfire" of the Texas Rangers, is assigned to the duty of guarding a mule-back shipment of high grade ore and becomes involved in a fearful mixup with a band of outlaws. They waylay the shipment Indian fashion and the Rangers are nearly put out of the running altogether. Sykes himself is sore pressed, but with his few remaining followers gives pursuit of the bandits.

The robbers take refuge at the hacienda of an old gentleman Mexican ranger of proud Spanish ancestry. He opens his doors to them on hearing their story that they are pursued by enemies of the commonwealth of Mexico. Thus, posing as peaceful miners and ranchers, they gain the freedom of his home.

Later the marauders sally forth from the ranch to do battle with the Rangers. They invite the Mexican gentleman and his daughter to hold their enemies at bay while they escape to a wild mountain region, known only to them. The Mexican is successful in keeping the Rangers off until the others have escaped, but soon after he discovers his mistake when he meets William Sykes.

The daughter, who had previously attempted to kill him and who had become almost hysterical in protecting those whom she believed to be her true countrymen, sees the worth of the man she had fought, and all her hate turns into admiration, respect and love for him.

As a consequence the Mexican gentleman and his daughter ally themselves with the Rangers, and before the story has ended Sykes and his followers have succeeded in bringing the bandits to justice, chief among them their leader, known as "The Vulture."

SUGGESTIONS

It is to be hoped that the exhibitor is cashing in on the William Russell personality and the high class brand of pictures that the American company is releasing with him as the star. Box-office reports generally indicate that he is ever rising in the popularity of the public, in some localities even outdrawing other much more highly publicized stars. If this is the case in certain localities it is certain that he has the "goods" and that, if properly exploited, he will become an equally lucrative proposition for exhibitors in other parts of the country.

Recently Mr. Russell has been confining his efforts to comedy and in this line of production he has gained an even greater reputation. In "When a Man Rides Alone," however, he reverts to the western type of photoplay and scores a distinct success.

In advertising this picture bring out the fact that the star plays the role of a Texas Ranger, a character always attractive and appealing with the great majority of photoplay patrons. Play up the attractiveness of the settings, dwell on the fact that the action is out-of-doors from first to last and that the bigness of the play is not limited to the four walls of any confining building. Get this impression of the picture's bigness, its strength, its artistry and its unusualness into your advertising copy. And this you can very well do, particularly when the title is considered, a title which creates an atmosphere of bigness all of its own.

To suggest the story, or an incident of it, is always a good plan. Try it on this picture too. It is one which lends itself to this sort of advertising.

"THE WAY OF A MAN WITH A MAID"—PARAMOUNT

Here's Good Example of "Better Story" We Hear About

IN the midst of all the red hot arguments and the endless discussions about how to get better stories, and consequently better pictures, it would be well for us to turn our eyes to such offerings as this one. Perhaps we could get some lessons from it. It is not always the big, complicated story that makes the best picture; the simple one, that which has been taken from real life—its better side, has furnished many a good one. There is plenty of material there.

"The Way of a Man With a Maid" is a simple but human story, presented in a human way. It is about a young clerk working for twenty-one dollars a week. He is in love with a girl, but his small salary can't go far. His desire to have her, however, gives him determination to conquer all obstacles. His pluck wins him the position of a manager, eventually marrying the girl.

There is plenty of clean, wholesome comedy all the way through the picture; not the kind that will make you roar from laughter, but the kind that penetrates all the way through. You can't help loving the characters, because they are just human. There is not one incident, not one of the humorous situations that could not or have not happened in real life.

A pleasing feature is also the fact that the hero and the heroine are lovers no older than to be real and natural.

On the whole, it is a delightful offering.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

Play this as the comedy it is and don't neglect your star nor his leading woman, Wanda Hawley. Anything that will suggest the romance of the young man who endeavors to set a fast pace on his small character, will suffice to build advertising around. In this character lies your appeal. As it is altogether human and as the author has treated her man in a logical, convincing and appealing way you have considerable material with which to work.

The story is taken from the Saturday Evening Post and while this fact alone does not suffice for any great spread of advertising, you might arrange some original copy by securing an issue of the paper in which the story appeared, using this as a background for your ad copy.

AD TALK

Comedy of a superlative order will be offered in "The Way of a Man with a Maid," which comes to the theatre on of week, with Bryant Washburn as the star. Yes, this is one of those good old-fashioned comedies in which romance and humor are delightfully intermingled. You who have been crying for pictures of this sort, you who have been kicking about the superfluity of war pictures and of spy pictures and of pictures which deal with life so all-fired, gosh-dinged seriously, take heed. For you "The Way of a Man with a Maid" was made. Here you have your chance to put aside dull care and to laugh outright—the German spy is relegated to his niche in the deep and dark recess of some dungeon where he most assuredly belongs.

As for Bryant Washburn, you have already met him through his recent "The Gypsy Trail" and through those delightful Skinner pictures by which he achieved his present fame and popularity. In "The Way of a Man with a Maid" he appears as a clerk who draws down the princely sum of twenty and one dollars per each and every seven days. A fair salary for a start, to be sure, but not so very fair when its possessor insists on taking ten-dollar taxi rides and more or less expensive dances and supper parties with a pretty and blonde stenographer! Just how this young clerk manages to increase his income until he is able to steal the blonde lady away from a fat broker who admires her greatly, makes vastly interesting and funny entertainment.

And when we tell you that Wanda Hawley is the stenographer, how much more entertaining the outlook is!

THE STORY

Arthur McArney is a shipping clerk receiving the handsome salary of twenty-one dollars a week. Arthur would like very much to be a man-about-town but he finds it rather a hard proposition when the content of his weekly pay envelope comes into view. One night, however, he proceeds to step out with Olsen, a friend from a rival firm. While out, which is in the Purple Gondola restaurant, he meets Elsa Owenson, a beautiful blonde stenographer and he is smitten right at the start. Elsa is profusely courted by Sankey, a fat and wealthy broker. But on this particular night Arthur wins out and takes Elsa home. The taxi fare is a matter of ten dollars and considering that Arthur only has four and a watch the chauffeur must needs be satisfied.

But thereafter Arthur has trouble in being a rival with Sankey. The night life sets a pace that is too great for him. And furthermore his job demands attention and a little night work now and then, which seriously interferes with his pleasure. Then one day Sankey calls him a "three-dollar-a-week clerk with run down heels." While dancing, Arthur glances in the mirror and sees his run-down heels. And he doesn't have to feel in his pocket to make sure about the three dollars. As a consequence he mortgages himself for two hundred dollars' worth of salary and buys a complete new outfit. The first night he goes to put it on he is called to work by his boss. But that very night he receives a promotion in position and in salary—a nice new salary of four thousand a year—so later he goes to the party, finds Elsa, informs Sankey that his tie is crooked and escorts his wife-to-be home in a ten-dollar taxi ride that he can pay for.

CATCH LINES

The way of this particular man with this particular maid was summed up in his effort to lead a five-thousand-a-year life on a twenty-one-dollar-a-week salary! Rather hard lines but he managed it and came through with colors flying at the finish.

Mr. Young Man, have you ever been caught with a ten-dollar tax bill staring you in the face and only three dollars hiding in your pocket? Probably you have. We've all been half-room boys at one time or another. The trouble with Arthur McArney was that this was his perpetual state of affairs. See "The Way of a Man with a Maid" and enjoy the best comedy that has been around in a long time.

Bryant Washburn as the young clerk who attempts to be a banker's rival on twenty-one dollars a week! Wanda Hawley as the young lady who causes this bold step. Could there be a more delightful combination? And need we tell you what becomes of the banker?

The banker said that his heels were run down. Arthur bought a new pair of shoes and then told the banker that his tie wasn't straight. And he laughed last.

"WIFE OR COUNTRY"—TRIANGLE

A Good Idea, But an Ordinary Picture

THE principal thing this picture does is to bring the hero to a tight situation. He has to decide between loyalty to his country or to his German wife, who is a spy.

Although his wife loves him sincerely, she does the bidding of the German spies under penalty of exposure. Eventually the husband finds her out, but, being under moral obligation to her, because her influence had pulled him out of the low level he had sunk by drink, he is at a loss what to do; but she puts him out of the difficulty by drinking poison. He thus becomes free to marry the heroine, the girl he sincerely loves.

As a quality, this is just an average program picture. The nucleus of the story is substantial, but its development into a plot is weak. Non-critical audiences, perhaps, will derive a great deal of enjoyment out of it; the critical ones, on the contrary, may be inclined to pick it to pieces.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

In which a man struggles to decide between duty to his country and a gratitude and sympathy for the woman who caused his regeneration—a story of absorbing quality.

Harry Mestayer, the popular stage and screen star, seen in the leading role, is also author of "Wife or Country."

An all-star cast of Triangle players, including Harry Mestayer, Gloria Swanson, Jack Richardson and Gretchen Lederer.

When it came to choosing between wife and country, Dale Barker was torn by a tumult of emotions—should he turn the woman who made a man of him over to the government authorities because she was an enemy agent? Happily a kindly Fate intervened and made its own decision. See this absorbing drama at the theatre.

In which a man struggles between patriotism and love. Which triumphed? You know when we tell you the man was an American. But see "Wife or Country"—a spy play with something big back of it.

AD TALK

The predicament that faced Dale Barker was just this: His wife, Gretchen, had been proven a member of a band of German spies, operating to undermine the efficiency of the United States Government. Clearly his duty to his country demanded that he turn her over to the authorities. But something withheld him from taking this course. It was not love, Dale did not love Gretchen. In fact he never had loved her in all his married life with her. He had taken her as his wife out of a sense of sympathy and gratitude, for it had been she who literally lifted him up from the gutter where drink had brought him. So on the one side urged patriotism; on the other a mingled feeling of gratitude and sympathy that demanded his share of attention.

How Dale Barker was relieved of making this decision by an unseen series of circumstances is graphically depicted in the latest Triangle play, "Wife or Country," which comes to the theatre on _____ of _____ week for a run of _____ days.

This struggle of conflicting emotions makes a drama of admirable quality, one which makes the ordinary spy play melt into comparative insignificance.

Special interest is attached to "Wife or Country" because of the appearance of Harry Mestayer, the Broadway star, both in the leading male part and as author of the story. Gretchen Lederer, Gloria Swanson, Jack Richardson and Charles West are seen in Mr. Mestayer's support, each player well interpreting the role offered his respective talents by the author, and star. The picture was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

THE STORY

Gretchen Barker, wife of Dale Barker, an attorney, has become enmeshed with German spies in the United States through circumstances not in her power to prevent. Her fear of discovery grows when Dale gives up his law practice and assists the government in running down agents of the enemy. And her fear is augmented by jealousy. She sees the growing fondness of her husband for his secretary, Sylvia Hamilton. Gratitude and sympathy, more than love, hold Dale to his wife, for it was she who made a man of him after drink had done its worst to break him. Sylvia, rather than widen the breach between husband and wife, leaves Dale's service. Gretchen, her jealousy getting the better of her, secures her a position in Dr. Stahl's office. Stahl, head of the German agents, frames it up to appear that she is a spy and causes her arrest.

But Sylvia has had her eyes opened through her duties in Stahl's office. And when the Secret Service interferes she well realizes that she can prove her innocence by turning over a list of Stahl's "clients" to the authorities. This, however, she does not wish to do, for among the persons listed is Gretchen Barker. But despite her efforts the list comes to Dale's notice. He is shocked regarding the disclosures made concerning his wife. He is swayed first by his clear duty to his country, which would mean turning his wife over to the government and a sense of gratitude for her.

Gretchen, however, solves the whole problem. She realizes that her husband really loves Sylvia and, despising herself and wanting to see the man happy, she takes poison. After a lapse of time Sylvia and Dale find happiness in their true love for one another.

SUGGESTIONS

Your selling argument for this picture rests in the struggle of the man to decide between wife and country. Triangle has provided you with a title that sums up the entire substance of the punch of the play and any additional lines that you may use should dwell on this same fact. This is an angle that has not been seen in the spy plays and you can play it up as original and truly dramatic material.

If you have been playing, the Triangle program right along lay stress on the cast for, judging it from the Triangle angle, it is all star. Gloria Swanson has appeared in many five-reelers as a star in her own right. Jack Richardson and Gretchen Lederer are well known and Harry Mestayer, a recent Triangle acquisition, is a well known Broadway player. You can get an original angle in your advertising by mentioning the fact that he also wrote the story.

treated and you can promise an evening of entertainment of an unusually sustaining order. Play Miss Brady's performance up well, for it is one of her best.

You will find Myrtle Stedman in the supporting cast and playing an important role. Use her name, as the old timers will remember her frequent appearances in the Morosco pictures. Percy Marmont also deserves mention.

You could arrange some attractive advertisements by carrying out the suggestion of the title in your copy. The palm of a woman's hand for the background would suit, with just the lettering across it. Or you might find a picture of Miss Brady among the stills in a pose of fear. This could be worked into the ad so it would appear as if she stood in the hollow of the other woman's hand.

Nice Romance Set Against Background of Sane Spy Drama

IN this romantic drama, laid against a background of spies and their plotting, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley appear to advantage. It was derived from the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Huge, Black, One-Eyed Man," by Kenyon Gambier, and tells of a young American who sought German spies in England, the while he himself is suspected of being one of them.

It must be said in defense of the picture, however, that the spy angle has been convincingly treated and contains none of the crude melodramatic tricks that we so often find in such pictures. In addition, the romance of the young people provides a charming story that is set in backgrounds of field, forest and stream that are a rare delight to the eye and which provide a convincing English country-side atmosphere.

The hero's identity is kept a secret through the greater part of the film and an appreciable vein of suspense is secured through this practice.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Jan. 13.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Was he a spy—was he just a fool—or was he playing for something beyond the vision of the various residents of the English seacoast village? Charles Conant, American millionaire, has them all guessing in "Love in a Hurry" and unless we miss our guess he'll have you guessing, too.

The latest Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley romantic drama—a delightful adaptation of a delightful Saturday Evening Post story.

Directed by Dell Henderson, the man who gave us "The Road to France" and all the recent Blackwell-Greeley comedies.

The German spies accepted him as one of them—the British Secret Service men put their O. K. on him—Lady Joan accepted him as a real man. Who was Charles Conant? Was he an American millionaire, a mere muleteer, a German spy, a British operative? All these questions puzzled the natives of the English seacoast town where he landed one day like a bolt from the blue.

AD TALK

The _____ theatre will present the latest World Film release, "Love in a Hurry," on _____ of _____ week. This is the current picture featuring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley and was adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story, "The Huge, Black One-Eyed Man," by Kenyon Gambier. Saturday Evening Post stories have been converted into pictures with considerable frequency of late, but it must be confessed that seldom has a plot of such suspense, mystery and charm been transposed from its pages to the celluloid reels. It tells the story of a young American who shipped as a muleteer on a transport carrying a large number of mules to England. When he lands on the other side he is suspected as a spy, particularly as he takes great pains to avoid the authorities.

Lady Joan Templar, a young woman who has an American mother, helps him out of various of his difficulties and gives him a position of gamekeeper on her estate near the town. From here on the plot takes on additional interest, an interest fraught with many scenes of mystery and romance. How the American proves himself loyal to the cause of the Allies by cleverly tricking a band of enemy spies bent on securing a valuable shipment of titanium and how he wins out in the lists of love over a rather stubborn English constable provides an entertainment of the most engrossing sort.

Mr. Blackwell and Miss Greeley appear to attractive advantage in the principal roles and receive adequate support from such well known players as George MacQuarrie, Isabel O'Madigan, Kid Broad and William Bechtel. Wallace C. Clifton wrote the continuity from the Post story, while Dell Henderson directed the picture.

THE STORY

In the year 1916, one Charles Conant, masquerading as a muleteer, approaches the shores of England on a transport after having danced attendance on the four-footed creatures for over three weary weeks. The coast line of England interests Charles to such an extent that he searches out its beautiful spots with a field glass, thereby incurring the wrath and suspicion of the captain. When he gets ashore Charles attempts to enlist, but refuses to give his birthplace as Ontario, Canada, when it is in reality, a sunny spot in Virginia. The Captain of the vessel spreads the report that he is a likely spy and he is watched and hounded. But Lady Joan Templar, who has at least a half portion of American blood in her veins, comes to his rescue. She helps him evade her cousin, George Templar, the county constable, and gives him employment on her estate as gamekeeper.

But Charles Conant acts very suspicious. He has much to do with hands on the Templar estate, who are very plainly plotting against England, but these activities are not the ones which arouse the antagonism of George. The fact is he sees a growing love between Lady Joan and the young American. However, when the constable becomes unmanageable at large Charles imprisons him in his hut and then goes quietly about his work. The spies are intent upon smuggling a valuable amount of titanium on board a German submarine and believe that Charles has been sent to help them. At the last moment, need it be said, that Charles whips handcuffs on all of them? It develops that he is the son of a large titanium operator in America and that while managing his mines in Peru inadvertently sold a supply to the Germans. His trip to England was to retrieve it and capture the spies. And of course Lady Joan gives Charles her promise before he sails to join the Lafayette Squadron in France.

SUGGESTIONS

The hero's character is the one for you to paly up. You can get in some good "mystery" advertising by referring to the catch lines elsewhere on this page. By using one of these or some wording on a similar order you can create a good deal of interest for this leading male part that Blackwell plays. This is your strong point regarding the production. To pass it up would be to pass up the main selling argument that the plot provides you.

Of course you have Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley, a starring combination that has been prominent in World pictures during the last year. If you have played their previous pictures, the majority of them very fine comedies as you will remember, refer to them in your advertising of "Love in a Hurry." The title of this release will promise another enjoyable offering from these two players.

You might also use the fact that the picture is an adaptation from a Saturday Evening Post story entitled, "The Huge, Black One-Eyed Man," by Kenyon Gambier. However, you might forget the original title, and with profit, as it is rather ungainly and long and might give the impression that you were attempting to foist a fairy story on your public.

"THE ADVENTURE SHOP"—VITAGRAPH

Better Than Average Is the Reviewer's Opinion

THE novelty of the plot and the entire construction of the story along mysterious lines, so that it may keep one guessing as to what is going to happen next, makes this picture interesting, absorbing and entertaining.

The story deals with the desire of the heroine to run an Adventure Shop, in which fictitious underworld characters, kidnapers, anarchists and cutthroats would figure prominently, and where excitement could be had for the ordering and paying for the cost.

In order to cure his son of the "adventure craze" which had absorbed his thoughts, a wealthy manufacturer secretly engages the services of the heroine, for the purpose of having her give him enough excitement to last him for life; but after the first installment, the hero becomes wise to the scheme. He then turns the tables on all of them, including his own father, by staging his own fake kidnaping, in the end marrying the heroine.

The photography and the interior and exterior settings are up to the Vitagraph standard.

The picture is clean and may be classed as above the average program contribution.—Released Jan. 6.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

A glance at the synopsis will suffice to show the novel angle of this photoplay, which will be a fine one to play up. The unusualness of the story and the appearance of Corinne Griffith in the leading part would, no doubt, suffice as magnets of strength enough to draw patronage.

With the case of "The Adventure Shop," however, the exhibitor has the advantage of a well known name to play up as author Bud Fisher, creator of "Mutt and Jeff" in still and animated cartoon form, wrote "The Adventure Shop." Play him up well, for he is a well known figure throughout the land. If you can get a local newspaper artist to draw figures of his two well-known characters advising readers to see "The Adventure Shop," use them in your advertisements and you will instantly attract attention.

You might also secure a Mutt and Jeff comedy for exhibition on the same day with the feature. This would give you the benefit of an "All Fisher" bill, something that you could play up in your advertising, something that would undoubtedly attract a good deal of attention.

AD TALK

Corinne Griffith, the girl of many charms, will appear as star in the latest Vitagraph picture, "The Adventure Shop," which will be shown at the theatre on _____ of _____ week. This picture tells the story of a country "boob" (that is, a fellow supposedly a "boob"), who comes to New York for adventure. He happens to fall in with a group of society folk led by Phyllis Blake which has grown tired of its prosaic existence. They have banded themselves together into a clique known as the Adventure Shop. Posing as a gang of underworlders they proceed to pick on Josephus Blake. But Josephus turns out to be a wise bird after all and turns the tables on them in a manner both amusing and thrilling.

Special interest is attached to "The Adventure Shop" in that it introduces Bud Fisher to the photoplay world as an author. Mr. Fisher is known the world over as the creator of "Mutt and Jeff," those funny fellows who amuse us on the daily comic page. And their activities on the screen have also made thousands laugh. "The Adventure Shop" is Mr. Fisher's first venture into the field of scenario writing. That he has met with success is not at all astonishing, considering his well developed talent along other creative lines.

THE STORY

Josephus Potts, Jr., yearns for a visit to New York and although his father is unwilling at first that he should make the trip, finally consents, having been promised by his business partner that no harm shall come to the callow youth. The partner has made it clear that he will steer Josephus to a place known as The Adventure Shop. The Adventure Shop is the result of a bored society clique. They have established this place in an effort to extract some adventure out of their rather prosaic lives. So when Josephus lands in the great city and takes a taxi he rides alone not for long. For a young woman, none other than Phyllis Blake, the leader of the adventuresome social set, propels herself into the cab with a rush and starts to moan out a story of a lost Green Gullabaloo and the other half of a precious note, much in the fashion of a distracted "serial" heroine.

Apparently Josephus "falls" for the game and thereafter he becomes a partner in all of Phyllis' activities to retrieve her treasure. Much to her chagrin, however, he always succeeds in putting one over on her colleagues. Josephus, the "boob" from the country, turns out to be quite a spry lad after all. They finally trap him and send for his father and a fifty thousand dollar ransom check to throw a scare into him. But Josephus has been on the alert. He also has his "gang," and when his father arrives with the check it is Josephus who has triumphed over the oppressors. Then he tells Phyllis that he has known about her scheme all along and that he decided to do a little fooling on his own account. Phyllis is disappointed that he isn't the brave lad she thought, but he proves his courage by asking her to marry him and relieving his father of the check.

"AFTER THE WAR"—ARGOSY

Timely Subject Possessing Unusual Advertising Possibilities

"AFTER THE WAR" is one of the strongest dramatic offerings seen of late, the direction in particular being praiseworthy. The story contains situations of both a heart-interest and thrilling nature, but the dominating element in the entire production is one of mystery. As this element contains a big popular appeal it is only natural to conclude that "After the War" will present this appeal to the popular mind.

The suspense which author and director have injected into the story due to their well developed constructive sense is also one of the main elements of the production. The observer must possess an unusually keen mind to foretell any of the action of the story. As a consequence interest is kept at a really considerable height throughout.

The plot has its beginnings in the war, but the major portion of the action takes place, as the title implies, after the war is over.

The picture is quite bold in conception and treatment, but is handled well and the exhibitor will note, after glancing at the synopsis, that its advertising possibilities are unusual.—Length, 5 reels.—States Rights.

THE CAST

The Italian Girl.....Grace Cunard
Miss Cunard supported by an all-star cast.
Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

CATCH LINES

She had a child that she loathed and it kept her from marriage with the man she loved because a Hun was its father. And when her suitor still begged for her hand the Hun returned and showed himself the same creature that he was during the war.

After the war scores of women of France and Belgium and Italy have tragic cause to remember the Hun. And what of their children, fathered by force of these Huns? What will be the answer from the women's lips to the men who courted them before the war? And what of the men who loved them and returned to find them victims of the Huns' horror?

Grace Cunard, heroine of many brilliant serials, in the role of a woman of Italy who suffers from Hun brutality long after the guns have quieted.

The shadow of the Hun fell between her and complete happiness even after the war was done. Should the stain of the past spread over her whole life?

AD TALK

"After the War" is the title of the timely picture that the management of the theatre will present on _____ of _____ week. This is a special release of the Argosy Film company and has as its theme a situation that the author has conjured up as possibly occurring in official Washington after the war and readjustment period has been passed over. The story is graced with a number of powerful dramatic climaxes, not the least of which is the scene in which the famous prima donna reveals to her life-long suitor that she gained him his freedom from Austria years before by submitting herself to the German commander of the army of Italian occupation.

This is the final climax of a story that fairly runs over with intense situations and incidents. It opens in a peaceful Italian village just before the outbreak of the European war. The hero and heroine are happy together in a little border town but when war's bugles sound he goes to join his colors while she remains behind. With the town in the hands of the enemy the hero is brought in a prisoner and sentenced to be executed. The girl, in her great love for him, pleads with the German commander of the Austrian forces to release the soldier and this he agrees to do providing she yields herself to him.

When the scene shifts to the national capital of this country, the film takes on additional interest when the three principal characters are introduced in the light of peace. The German officer is now ambassador, the girl is a famous prima donna, the soldier an attache of the Italian ministry. Grace Cunard appears in the role of the woman who gave in this startling production and she is surrounded by a cast of all-star calibre. The picture was produced under the direction of Joseph De Grasse.

THE STORY

At the outbreak of the war between Italy and Austria, two lovers live content in an Italian village near the border. Like all the rest of the young men of the town he is called to the colors, the girl remaining behind. The border town falls into the hands of the Austrians and the Italian natives come under the yoke of the enemy. During one of the skirmishes the young hero is taken prisoner by the Austrians and is sentenced to be executed. The heroine learns of the situation and going to the enemy commander pleads for his life. He agrees to spare it providing the girl submit herself to him. She agrees to this proposition and the young man is freed. Unaware of the sacrifice the girl has made he is inclined to feel grateful toward the German officer in command.

Several years later, the war ended, at a reception in the Italian Embassy in Washington, a famous prima donna is announced. Just before taking up her song she sees the German Ambassador and faints. She, the girl from the Italian village, recalls him as the German officer. The Italian commissioner, none other than the soldier of the days gone by, seeks out the singer, but she avoids him. Even when he calls at her apartment she refuses to see him. When later, he demands to know the cause of her attitude toward him she relates the whole story of the manner in which she won him his freedom years before.

The German ambassador calls, seeking to renew the acquaintance. He is followed by his suspicious wife. The Italian woman explains all to them and shows them her child as evidence. The ambassador is then shot and killed by his wife. She seeks possession of the child and the mother grants it and with this, hero and heroine are united once again.

SCENE CUTS:—These were in work when this page was written but care has been taken to select representative scenes from the production. Cuts of Grace Cunard, the star, also available.

SUGGESTIONS

There are numerous selling arguments which you can bring forth in connection with the exploitation of this feature. Its title is one which arouses curiosity at the start and if you use one of the catch lines provided on this page, which gives just a suggestion of the story, you will succeed in raising the patron's curiosity to an unusually high degree. Play up the title big and follow on with one of these catch lines or one of some similar nature.

Grace Cunard, the star, has a following and it would be a good plan to follow the producer's idea and mention her in all advertising matter. You might mention some of the Universal serials she has appeared in if you think this will serve to place her more firmly in the minds of your audience.

THE MIDNIGHT STAGE—PATHE

Powerful Western, with Keenan in Dual Role

FRANK KEENAN contributes two powerful characterizations to "The Midnight Stage," a western in which he appears both as good man and bad man. The plot centers around a stage holdup committed by the latter for which the former is held as perpetrator.

Mr. Keenan's acting in both roles is forceful and highly sustained as is his every appearance. The two parts he contrasts sharply, playing with a quiet and dignified reserve as the easy going rancher and with tornado-like outbursts in the role of the drink-sodden, evil tempered bad man, a bad man without even one redeeming characteristic.

The action of the story is rapid and the plot never is confusing, merits which must be laid to the credit of Jack Cunningham, author and scenarioist. The atmosphere which Director Ernest Warde has instilled into the various scenes is notable for its bold realism and convincing effect. Mr. Keenan receives exceptional support from a cast that includes Joseph Dowling, Thomas Guise, Mignon Anderson, Maude George and Mr. Warde.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Jan. 12.—Peter Milne.

SUGGESTIONS

You can not boost Keenan's portrayal of the dual role too much and in this lies your most valuable advertising angle. Pathe provides the exhibitor with a two-column cut of the star showing him in both characters. If you do not use this fix up an ad in similar style. For instance, you might, from looking through the stills, find him in poses of both characters. Use these on either side of your advertising copy with your title and argument in the center.

This is a western picture—a common variety, of course, but it is no common picture. Strive to bring out in any and all advertising that you do that it is of great dramatic strength. You can use superlatives in your copy to bring this fact out. Superlatives are sometimes justified. They are here. For "The Midnight Stage" is strong and dramatic to a degree that is seldom matched on the screen.

If you bring this out, together with honorable mention to Keenan's playing of the dual role, you will have an advertisement that will attract. You might also incorporate in your copy a few lines telling the important situation of the play, i.e., the accusing of Lynch for River's crime. You might find one of the catch lines suitable for this.

If you care for an unusual line of advertising copy you could word an ad something on this order, "It always takes the young folks and a lot of romance to put a picture over, eh? That's a mistaken idea. For instance the theatre is offering 'The Midnight Stage.' Frank Keenan is the star in this offering and he doesn't make love. True, his daughter does in a few scenes, but he is the leading character of the picture—twice the leading character, for he plays a dual role! And he is supported by a lot of old-timers, Joseph J. Dowling, Thomas Guise, Dick La Reno, Ernest Warde! Takes the young folks to put over a story, eh? Well, see 'The Midnight Stage' and watch their seniors turn the trick without their assistance."

THE STORY

John Lynch, a Virginian, dwells near the town of El Monte in the late sixties, and though he runs a ranch, earns his living as a gambler in one of the town's cafes. Lynch is a kindly man; friends with everyone in the town. The only man who pretends antagonism toward him is his father, Elias, whose pride is hurt because his son is a gambler. Elias makes his home with "Twisted" Tuttle, an old fellow who runs an inn half way between the main stations made by the stage. Lynch's daughter, Mary, loves and is loved by Harvey James, foreman of the ranch.

Roving the mountains surrounding El Monte is Rivers, the double of Lynch, and a bad man of the blackest character. He is hated, though feared, by all men and women with whom he comes in contact. Strange enough, Nita, a dance hall girl, who has been the victim of Rivers and who later was befriended by Lynch, is the only one who notices the resemblance of the two men.

Rivers, in company with two other ruffians, holds up the stage, murders the driver, the custodian of the gold box and the passengers and repairs to Tuttle's place to divide the loot. Both Tuttle and Elias believe him to be Lynch and after his departure make all haste to the town to spread the news. Lynch is arrested and brought to trial. Because he rode out to see his father on the very day of the holdup he convicts himself of the crime. He is about to be lead away to be hanged when—a faithful hanger-on of Rivers, discovers the real bandit hiding in a loft in the town. He, however, discovers her and makes her prisoner. Her cries bring assistance, and though it comes too late to save her life, the muddle is finally cleared. Lynch is freed and in time to prove the Nemesis of Rivers.

Nita, who has suspected and followed the Rat,

CATCH LINES

Frank Keenan in a dual role—the most powerful picture of his successful career before the camera—he is the good man and the bad man in a western play that teems with action from beginning to end.

Big Rivers, with two aides, killed the occupants of the stage and robbed it of a shipment of gold valued at several thousands of dollars—John Lynch, his double, was accused of the heinous crime and, after a quick trial and conviction, was led out to pay the penalty. But at that moment the gathered inhabitants of the town of El Monte heard a woman's scream and a shot from a room above one of the dance halls—

Mr. Keenan contributes two of the greatest performances of his career to "The Midnight Stage"—he is the villainous hold-up man and the easy-going rancher—see the tremendously effective situation which the resemblance of the two men brings about. Strong!! Well, rather!

AD TALK

Frank Keenan, than whom there is no better character actor on the screen today, appears in his latest Pathe picture, "The Midnight Stage," at the theatre on of week. In "The Midnight Stage" Mr. Keenan is a dual role, playing both a bad man of a most pronounced type and a good fellow who, because of his likeness, is accused of the other's crimes. The two characterizations given by the star are widely divergent in both conception and execution. Mr. Keenan gives a wonderful performance as the bad man, a performance marked by tempestuous outbursts of rage and cruelty which the actor conveys with remarkable force. As the peaceful, easy going rancher, he gives a characterization notable for its repression, sincerity and genuineness.

Quite frankly, "The Midnight Stage" is Mr. Keenan's picture. When an actor with such a dominating personality as his appears in a dual role the result may easily be seen. But the plot of the picture of which Jack Cunningham, the well-known scenarist is author, is one of excellent suspense and sustaining interest. Mr. Cunningham has worked on all of Mr. Keenan's recent pictures and has performed his services so skillfully that he is now the star's exclusive writer. In "The Midnight Stage" Mr. Cunningham conceived a story of great power and developed it in excellent taste. There is no confusion in respect to the two characters while the force of the entire story, particularly in its climax scenes, is remarkable.

Ernest Warde, a director of no little ability, aged the production and has instilled in it an atmosphere of realism—of the real old West that is praiseworthy indeed. Among those who appear in support of the star are Joseph J. Dowling, Thomas Guise, Mignon Anderson, Maude George, Charles Gunn and Mr. Warde himself.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 29, 1918.

Others appearing in the cast are Claire DuBrey, Lamar Johnstone, Herschel Mayall and Joseph J. Dowling. It is a western story with a few eastern scenes. The picture has been edited and the first prints were shipped east on Tuesday this week.

Kennedy Starts Work

Madge Kennedy began work Monday on her first Goldwyn production since arriving on the Pacific coast. The picture has not been titled, but it will be filmed under the direction of Clarence G. Badger. John Bowers will be her leading man. The story is unique in that it calls for virtually every character of importance to play a dual role. Among some of the well-known players who have players in the cast is Tully Marshall.

Reginald Barker has begun work on Rex Beach's new photoplay for Goldwyn, which will be called "The Brand." Kay Laurell, who has been playing in Zeigfeld's Follies, will have an important role in the production. Other members of the cast are Robert McKim, formerly with Thomas H. Ince, and Russell Simpson, remembered for his excellent characterization in "The Barrier." In fact, Mr. Simpson came west to play in the great picture at the special request of Mr. Beach, it is said.

Mabel Normand, who has been dangerously ill with influenza, was reported this week as much improved. She is expected to begin production on a new picture shortly after the first of the year. Mae Marsh, who suffered a relapse with influenza shortly after she arrived in Los Angeles from New York, was reported this week as much better. She will doubtless be on the lot after Jan. 1.

Tom Moore, Goldwyn star, this week began production on a new picture which is yet unnamed. He is working under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Seena Owen is his leading lady in the new play. Sidney Ainsworth, of Chicago, well known to theatre goers for many seasons, came west to play in this production.

Chaplin Entertains

Charlie Chaplin entertained with a special Christmas dinner at his home in Laughlin Park Christmas eve many of his studio friends and acquaintances, the dinner being given in special compliment to Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Chaplin. Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, otherwise known to screen fans as Mildred Harris, assisted her famous husband in the entertainment. Mrs. Alf Reeves, wife of the studio manager of the Chaplin studios, was a guest of honor also. Mrs. Reeves has just returned from London, where she waited nearly two years to get a passport to the United States. The boat that brought her to New York passed the George Washington, the vessel that carried President Wilson to Europe.

Noble Brown, former casting director at the Chaplin studios, who has been in the naval service, is back at the Chaplin studios.

Charlie Chaplin's newest comedy, "Sun-nyside," is about two-thirds finished, it was announced this week at the Chaplin studios.

Sergt. Johnny Douglas, former secretary to Mabel Normand, who has been in the service in France, has written to friends at the Chaplin studios that he expects to be back in the United States within a few weeks. Douglas is one of the best-known people in the Los Angeles film colony. He recently originated a phrase that has become a by-word in the studios, as follows: "If my mail does not catch me in France I will get it in general delivery in Berlin."

Fond du Lac Recovers from "Jinx"

THE "jinx" has been beaten out in Fond du Lac. The moving picture business is coming back into its own. The holiday spirit did it.

This is the judgment of the managers of the moving picture houses. It is voiced by Manager Ainsworth of the Orpheum, confirmed by Manager Vollert of the Idea and the Henry Boyle and conceded by Manager Smith of the Bijou.

The streets that were thronged with holiday shoppers before Christmas have been filled with motion picture fans wending their way toward Christmas Day and since. The Christmas business turned the tide and it looked like old times to see capacity houses and to find people actually being turned away.

Manager Ainsworth of the Orpheum, who is always optimistic even when the clouds are darkest, is sure the worst is over and that the picture fans who have been denying themselves on account of the "flu" will now make up for lost time.

"We did a splendid business Christmas day and night," said Manager Ainsworth. "We did capacity business in the afternoon and at night actually turned them away. I could hardly believe it—had to pinch myself to see if I was awake—but it was all right, the old time crowds were there and I guess they'll keep coming. Of course we had a splendid subject, Thomas H. Ince's Dorothy Dalton in 'The Kaiser's Shadow.' It took fine. What is more, business was good throughout the week. It looks as if we had put the 'jinx' out of business. Anyhow I propose to put on good programs and go to it."

Manager Vollert of the Idea shares in Mr. Ainsworth's optimism. "Idea patrons have apparently forgotten all about the 'flu,'" Mr. Vollert declared in discussing his Christmas business. "The fact of the matter is," he continued, "the crowds are coming back and it looks now as if we will be permitted to round out the Old Year and begin the New Year in a way that will give us new courage and, incidentally, some profit."

"We have been noting steady gains at the Idea for a week but it was left for Christmas Day to break all records for attendance since the people began to sneeze and the health authorities felt impelled to clamp on the lid. I predict that business will soon be normal again. At least I am hoping it will. We need it. The 'flu' has surely had us guessing and we will be glad to forget the experience."

Manager Smith of the Bijou is of a similar mind. "Our Christmas day and night business was fine," said Mr. Smith. "And business has kept up right well since Christmas. Unless the cold weather hits us I think we will be able to make up for what we have lost. At any event the outlook is promising."

Springfield Newspaper Carries Health Advertisement Against Theatres

ONE of the Springfield, Ill., papers has been carrying a large display advertisement directed to the managers of the theatres in which the health department says it has been notified that the theatres were admitting "coughers and sneezers" and threatening to take away the license of the theatre that does not live up to the regulations.

It seems that a letter to the theatre owners would have done just about as well without agitating the town again. Every theatre manager there is doing his best to live up to the rules, and if a person coughs or sneezes inside the playhouse there is no way to prevent it.

It looks as though the commission was looking for a little publicity. At the present writing the influenza epidemic has passed in Springfield, and but few cases are reported daily.

It is a well-known fact that many physicians have been grossly negligent in the matter of reporting cases when the disease was bad. But every time the health commission thinks it is about time for another scare, it whips the theatre owners.

Christmas Snow at Elgin Ties Up Traffic and Hurts Theatres

CHRISTMAS EVE'S snow and blow and tie-up of traffic had its influence upon Elgin theatre crowds and reduced them to a minimum.

Gloom did not perch himself on the box offices for long, however, for all through the Christmas week and in the early new year patronage took a most exhilarating spurt.

In the first place, it was Christmas time and time behooving the town to make holiday. There were guests to be entertained, young people home from college and vacations in factories.

In the second place, a brief smallpox epidemic was dying out at a most propitious time. The epidemic, for all its briefness, proved more help than hindrance. It drove thoughts of influenza and fear of contagion, uppermost in minds for so long, back so far that it was forgotten when the smallpox scare died out. In consequence Elgin managers watched the pleasure of the biggest holiday houses in the history of the moving picture in Elgin.

Merchants reported the biggest shopping trade in years and this had bearing on the show houses, bringing in shoppers for rest in afternoon and evening.

"Flu" fear had not been long enough departed to inspire the customary widespread interference of private parties and meetings, so the pictures were practically without rivals over all the holidays.

Aaron Jones Makes a Prediction for Nineteen Nineteen

ONCE a year, about Yuletide, Aaron Jones unbosoms himself of some very interesting views on the New Year. Approached yesterday in the luxurious sanctum from whence flows blessings in the form of entertainment for the masses, Mr. Jones hid himself behind a big black cigar—almost as big as the "little Napoleon" himself, and spouted facts.

"The building of new theatres has come to a standstill and during the year about to begin there will be little or no activity in this direction. This may be reasoned from numerous angles, the most important of which is the excessive prohibitive cost of construction. Then again the new franchise arrangement which is sure to be instituted by picture interests is going to limit the erection of new theatres for picture purposes."

And herein Mr. Jones predicts something that is most important.

"There is a general movement to franchise houses among picture distributors in a like manner and method of legitimate producers, such as Klaw & Erlanger and Shuberts. This means protection for the theatre owner and manager in service. The man with the franchise gets the pictures and therefore it would be dangerous and futile for any opposition interest to build a new theatre."

Mr. Jones shifted his cigar to the other side of his mouth and smiled.

"Pessimists were howling last year about the sure and sudden demise of the picture business. If you will remember, I looked for a big successful year. The proof of the pudding is the eating. Ask picture managers, manufacturers, distributors and others what 1918 meant to them. It was the biggest year pictures ever had. It marked the growth of Goldwyn, the First National Circuit and the independent producer and star. Those who made bad pictures had a bad year. Those who made good pictures made a fortune. And, mark me well, next year will bring a better class and higher grade of pictures than we have had heretofore.

"Nineteen nineteen will be a great year for amusements."

Powell have joined the sales force. Powell was with Fox.

"THREE MOUNTED MEN," a Universal picture, with Harry Carey in the leading role, was presented at the Royal theatre December 26.

FRANK McINTYRE of the Goldwyn corporation was the attraction December 27 and 28 in the Colonial theatre in the film, "Too Fat to Fight," by Rex Beach. The picture is a mirth-provoker.

HERBERT RAWLINSON played in "Smashing Through," a Universal picture, at the Royal theatre, December 27 and 28.

BESSIE BARRISCALE appeared in "The Heart of Rachel," December 23, in the Colonial theatre.

Late News of Fond du Lac

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum always had a warm spot in his heart for the little folks. He has put on children's matinees without number and they have invariably been winners. His latest was a six-cent matinee on New Year's day for the boys and girls with Mary Pickford in "Amarilly in Clothesline Alley." It was some picture and some crowd.

THE ORPHEUM rounded out the old year successfully with Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex in "Come On In." This was the program for Monday and Tuesday, December 30 and 31.

THE FOLLOWING WEEK will be opened with Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane," running three days, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 7, 8 and 9.

MANAGER AINSWORTH has booked "Carmen of Klondike" for the Orpheum the last week in January.

MANAGER SMITH of the Bijou has booked Lila Lee in her second picture, "Such a Little Pirate," for the second week in January.

IT WAS WALLACE REID in "Less than Kin" that helped Manager Smith of the Bijou break the "Flu" jinx on Christmas Day. The matinee and evening audiences tested the capacity of the house and the patrons were all delighted with the picture.

Frank Vanston of Elgin May Purchase Theatre at St. Charles

KNOWLEDGE that Frank Vanston, former manager of the Temple, Elgin, is "smelling 'round" for a new location in a picture house purchase, leads his friends to believe he is soon to be back into the business.

There is rumor, that Mr. Vanston does not deny, that he is considering purchase of the Strand theatre, St. Charles, now owned and operated by Manager Gus Cook of the Temple, Dundee.

Vanston reports that he has been looking over the ground at St. Charles and believes that there is a future in the moving picture business there. The deal has not been closed, however. There is possibility that Mr. Vanston may not re-enter business until his two sons, who assisted him in management of the Temple, are returned from service. Their enlisting in the Army was the principal reason for his sale of the Temple last July to Manager William P. Fay.

Mr. Vanston has been temporarily retired from business since the sale of the Temple in attempt to recuperate from the strenuousness of the theatre life for several years before that.

Yuletide Marks Anniversary of Chicago's First Motion Picture Theatre and Opening of Its Newest

IT is a matter of note that Chicago's first motion picture theatre and Chicago's newest motion picture theatre were both opened during the Christmas holidays. On Christmas Eve, 1905, Jones, Linick & Schaefer opened the first motion picture theatre in Chicago, on State Street, between Monroe and Adams. Upon the Eve of Yuletide, this same firm, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, are to open Chicago's newest motion picture theatre, the Randolph, on Randolph Street, between State and Dearborn. Things have changed since 1905. These days, two single reels of less than two thousand feet in all were shown for a price of ten cents. Nowadays, modern picture entertainment never consists of less than five reels and generally eight or nine. True the admission price has increased slightly, but nothing in comparison with the increased cost of operation. The manager of Chicago's first motion picture theatre is still a theatre manager of Chicago. He is Norman Field, and at present is managing the Rialto theatre on State Street. He has promised to attend the opening of the new Randolph next Monday.

They Say in Chicago That—

RICHARD R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Co., Inc., left the Chicago office, 6227-35 Broadway, on Thursday, December 26, for the studio at Santa Barbara, California, where he will remain for some two months overseeing many contemplated improvements in the studio and its equipment. While there, Mr. Nehls will select a new studio manager it is understood, as the present manager who has been in charge of the studio for many years resigns on January 1 to take up another line of activity.

CHAS. C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel for the Affiliated Exhibitors Mutual is spending a few days in Chicago.

COLVIN BROWN arrived back in Chicago just before Christmas after a few weeks in New York looking fine.

S. S. HUTCHINSON, President of the American Film Company, Inc., sailed from New York on December 21 for London where he goes to effect new distribution arrangements in the British Isles. He expects also to visit Paris before returning and is looking forward to meeting his son Hobart, who is attached to General Pershing's staff and has applied for a furlough for the purpose of visiting his father whom he has not seen since his enlistment, more than a year ago. Mr. Hutchinson while in London will make his headquarters at the offices of the American Film Company (London), Ltd., 89-91 Wardour Street, London, England.

IRVING MACK, the genial and up-to-the-minute publicity man of the Universal Chicago Office, and his charming wife, wished their friends a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year in a very artistic manner. Judging from the wording of the card, Irving must have been the author.

CHAS. PACCINI, owner of the Majestic and Butterfly Theatres, Kenosha, Wisconsin, has decided to build two more new houses in Kenosha, one located in the business district, and one on the west side.

SID GOLDMAN, manager of the Chicago office of the Jewel Productions, has just returned from New York full of enthusiasm over the possibilities of their new picture, "Hearts of Humanity," which Goldman claims stands shoulder to shoulder with "Hearts of the World."

BARNEY ROSENTHAL, manager of the Universal St. Louis Office, has been spending a few days in Chicago—could there be anything in the rumor that he contemplates matrimony?

CHAS. C. PYLE just got back from Oshkosh where he was in conference with Mr. W. G. Maxey, President of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, regarding their next year's policy, which will be to enlarge their business materially.

THE RECENT trolley strike which tied up all the inter-urban lines in southern Illinois hurt the moving picture theatres more than the recent "Flu" attack.

NATE ERBER, formerly of the Lincoln Square Theatre at Decatur, Ill., is now manager of the Strand Theatre at Ft. Wayne, Indiana.

MR. E. SCHWARTZ of the E. S. Film Service has just recovered from an attack of the "Flu."

LAWRENCE WATKINS, owner of a moving picture theatre at Petersburg, Illinois, is reported seriously ill with an attack of the "Flu."

THE CONDOLENCE of the entire industry has been tendered to Eugene Billy Hamburg, former picture frame man, who lost his wife, who was a victim of influenza.

BIRCH WORMOLD of the Marquette Theatre of La Salle,

Illinois, has been called to Newport, Ky., on account of the death of his sister, a victim of the influenza.

THE "FLU" BAN has been lifted at La Salle, Streater, Peoria, and Mandota. E. J. Degenhardt, owner of the Princess Theatre at Mendota, Illinois, reports that his son is seriously ill with the influenza.

THE PALACE THEATRE at Mendota has been forced to close again on account of poor business.

F. A. VAN HUSEN, who has been the manager of the U. T. E. in Omaha is to take the management of the Chicago office, January 1. His assistant is to be George Rogers who, prior to his enlistment in the Army, was the Minneapolis manager of the U. T. E. Both gentlemen are well and favorably known in the trade.

W. L. HILL, publicity manager of the Famous-Players Chicago office, is enthusiastic over innovations which will be of great help to exhibitors, which will be started at the Chicago office after January 1.

R. C. CROPPER, of the Hee Hive Chicago Office, says that their reel, "Topics of the Day," is cleaning up and being used as a regular feature by the following leading theatres: The new Randolph, Orpheum, Rose, Alcazar, Boston, Band Box, Riviera, Central Park, Woodlawn, and the entire circuits of both Lubliner and Trinz, and Ascher Bros.

MRS. ETHEL FLECKLES ALBERTS, niece of Morris Fleckles, president of the Screen Craft Film Company, died of the influenza.

J. A. LISEY, Manager of the Majestic Theatre, Rochelle, Ill., is leaving for the Coast on a vacation.

W. R. SKATES, recently of the Paramount Chicago office, is confined to his home with the influenza.

WHEN DEE ROBINSON of the Apollo Theatre at Peoria, Ill., brought a mandamus suit against the city of Peoria compelling them to put a strict quarantine on the city of Peoria it took the city officials just twenty minutes to declare the "Flu" ban off. Mr. Robinson, together with fourteen theatre managers, had everything closed tight but the street cars, and they happened to be on a strike. In the daily papers of Peoria, the mayor of the town over his signature made a public declaration that the moving picture theatre was not a breeder of the "Flu" germ.

MR. AND MRS. WM. OLSON of the Orpheum Theatre at Galesburg, Illinois, were the hosts at a dinner given Mr. Harry Weiss of the Central Film Company on Sunday, December 15.

R. M. KINGSLAND, owner of two motion picture theatres at Canton, Illinois, is not expected to live, complication of influenza and other diseases.

THE NEXT TIME that one of Health Commissioner Robertson's men instruct a theatre management what to do it would be well for them to watch their step. The Woodlawn theatre's recent experience proves that at all times the management of a theatre should treat the city officials courteously. Last Sunday night when an inspector pointed it out to an attache of the theatre that no attention was being made to live up to the Health rules, he was told to "go ahead with his complaint," which the gentleman proceeded to do, and the house was closed. After a conference with the Health Department, the house was permitted to open. The Influenza rules, however, are to be strictly enforced hereafter.

T. J. RAYE has bought the Princess theatre of Kankakee, Ill., and rechristened it the Chateau.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

"THE BIRD OF PREY," with Gladys Brockwell, played at the Dreamland theatre on Wednesday and Thursday, December 18 and 19. This picture was shown at the Liberty theatre several weeks ago to good houses, and it drew equally well at the Dreamland this week. Miss Brockwell is an artist whose work is extremely pleasing.

THREE popular Universal stars, Dorothy Phillips, Lon Chaney and William Stowell, appeared at the Family theatre on Wednesday, December 18, in that thrilling western, "Pay Me." This was the first time Family fans had seen this trio for several months, and accordingly they were well received.

LOUISE GLAUM, formerly the "Peacock Woman" of the screen, but now an actress of great emotional ability, noted for the sympathetic roles she portrays, was presented at the Grand Thursday and Friday, December 10 and 20, in "Wedlock." This is Miss Glaum's third Paralta play, and it surpasses any other work of this kind she has ever done. Throughout the entire picture Miss Glaum's attractive personality is the dominant feature; her audience is in sympathy with her from the start to the finish. Everyone who saw this photoplay pronounced it fine. During its engagement it drew full houses at all performances.

METRO'S beautiful star, Olive Tell, appeared for two days at the Dreamland theatre, December 20 and 21, in "Secret Strings." Of all the photoplays in which Miss Tell has played, this last one made the most favorable impression on Dreamland patrons, for it was a picture brim full of excitement, good settings and clever acting—a suitable vehicle for the charming Metro player.

"ALIAS MARY BROWN," with Pauline Starke, was as good a detective story as one could wish to see. The talented Pauline had the advantage of a very good supporting cast, headed by Casson Ferguson. The picture was well liked by Liberty fans.

MRS. CHARLIE CHAPLIN made her debut at the Family theatre Friday, December 20, in "The Price of a Good Time." Mildred Harris was on the way to greatness when she married the screen's foremost comedian, and from the way her pictures are taking since her marriage, her rise will be meteoric.

PATHE'S rising comedian, Bryant Washburn, was shown at the Liberty theatre Saturday, December 21, in the long awaited, much advertised "Twenty One." In the opinion of Liberty fans, Bryant was just great, and almost everyone who saw the picture declared that they had seen a most satisfactory picture. Consequently, when the next Bryant Washburn feature is shown at the Liberty, Manager Wilbur will be sure of a good house.

"THE SONG OF SONGS," with Elsie Ferguson, was the Saturday attraction at the Family theatre last week. A typical Elsie Ferguson audience attended—an appreciative, good picture loving audience, who fully appreciated the ability of the famous star. A well known picture fan, in commenting on the picture, said: "One of the reasons why so many people come to see Elsie Ferguson productions is because all of her plays have most attractive titles. They suggest romance, they appeal to the imagination, they have a most musical sound. Any of them—'Barbary Sheep,' 'The Rose of the World,' 'Under the Greenwood Tree' and 'The Song of Songs'—appeal to our sense of the beautiful, and we attend expecting to see a picture worthy of the title. Nor are we seldom disappointed."

FOR two days George M. Cohan reigned supreme at the Princess theatre in the well known story, "Hit the Trail Holiday." George was immense, and so was the picture. It drew the crowds, too, average houses on Friday and capacity houses on Saturday.

MARGUERITE CLARK, the star who never grows old or tiresome, played at the Family theatre Sunday, December 22, in "Bab's Matinee Idol." The last of the Bab series was witnessed with regret, for never before had Miss Clark portrayed a character so appealing, so deliciously funny. Every one of the series was good, clean comedies, and what is also important, they were plays quite out of the ordinary and original—something that cannot be said of the majority of photoplays.

MEMORIAL services for Dubuque boys who fell in the service of their country held the boards at the Grand Sunday afternoon, December 22, but in the evening "A Burglar for a Night," with J. Warren Kerrigan, was shown. People who were accustomed to taking in picture shows on Sunday afternoon flocked to the theatre in the evening, and combined with the usual Sunday evening crowd, they fairly swarmed in the theatre. The Grand seats eleven hundred, but with all its seating capacity, a great number of people could not be accommodated. The picture was held over for Monday, and it attracted a splendid week day house.

THE DREAMLAND also had a red letter day on Sunday, December 22. George Walsh was the star at that theatre, and his picture, "I'll Say So," was a winner. The picture drew better than great—to use the words of Manager Boyle, it was the second best business he had done since the opening of his theatre. That is saying a lot for a picture, for the Dreamland has had some mighty big houses. Walsh is undoubtedly the best drawing card on the Fox program—his popularity here is even greater than that of Fairbanks.

SUNDAY was a great day for stars at every theatre in Dubuque. The Family had that supreme actress, Marguerite Clark, in "Bab's Matinee Idol"; the Liberty presented Tom Mix in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A."; the Dreamland had George Walsh in "I'll Say So"; the Grand, "A Burglar for a Night," with J. Warren Kerrigan, and the Princess featured Sessue Hayakawa in "The White Man's Law."

SPEAKING of Fox stars, Tom Mix is another player of that company who is a business getter. Dreamland and Liberty patrons have a high opinion of him and show it by always seeing that his pictures are well attended. One of his late vehicles, "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," shown at the Liberty theatre December 22, was enthusiastically received—in fact, many considered it his best play. Of course there was a good attendance in the afternoon, and in the evening the house was the same as on any night when a Mix feature is shown—packed, and then some.

"FOR HUSBANDS ONLY," starring Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, came to Dubuque Tuesday and Christmas Day. The picture was heralded in by extensive billboard, poster and newspaper advertising. The name of the star was, of course, the thing that was advertised—Mildred Harris was lost sight of almost altogether, and a new star, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, took her place. If the wife of the great comedian is advertised much longer on this scale she will depose Mrs. Vernon Castle from her place of being the most advertised woman in the world. The picture, "For Husbands Only," was really good, and Mrs. Chaplin's acting was of real merit.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE was presented at the Princess theatre Monday and Tuesday, December 23 and 24, in "Good Night, Paul," a first class comedy drama, well suited to the personality of a first class star like Miss Talmadge. This picture drew better than average houses.

SAFE ROBBERS bored their way into the strong box of the Woodward Theatre Co. in the Breitmeyer building and got about $3,000 in cash and Liberty bonds.

HARRY SOMERVILLE is no longer manager of the Drury Lane, having resigned. He is succeeded by R. Perry, former city salesman for Metro.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

MISS BESSIE WARE is back at the Majestic after her illness.

THE theatre managers expected the biggest week of the year, starting Christmas Day. Some fine programs were booked, and everything made ready to accommodate the flood of patrons that made for the playhouses immediately after the Christmas dinner.

THE LYRIC enjoyed five prosperous days with Theda Bara's "Cleopatra." Manager Loper was well satisfied with the box-office reports on this engagement. Alice Joyce followed for two days in "To the Highest Bidder," and although the picture was a "repeater" it did very well. Theda Bara came back in "When a Woman Sins," on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 19, 20 and 21, and pleased her admirers and the exhibitor.

THE PRINCESS did not do so well with Frank Keenan in "The Bells." This Pathe play was shown for three days, starting December 15. "Why I Would Not Marry," William Fox's special feature, did well for two days following Keenan, and Warren Kerrigan did nicely for two days with "Three X Gordon."

"THE YELLOW DOG" proved one of the most unprofitable pictures ever shown at the Royal. Manager Kerasotes was very much disappointed with the business done, although the film has a good drawing record.

ROBERT RIORDAN, brother of George S. Riordan, manager of the Majestic theatre, died in Chicago December 20.

THE CAPITOL reports that business is most satisfactory. Triangle first run pictures, Select and Goldwyn repeats, and special productions go to make up the programs that Manager Maisel gives his patrons. Fox, Arbuckle, Sennett and Keystone comedies are used with the above named features.

MANAGER KUNZ, of the Princess, is reported as expecting to bring back Nazimova in "Eye for Eye." This picture was shown for four days about two weeks ago and did not do the business the production warranted.

MISS NELLIE BROWNE DUFF, feature writer on the Illinois State Journal, left for Los Angeles on Friday, December 27. Miss Duff is going to try her fortunes in the scenario business, having had much experience along this line. She was formerly at the Vitagraph studios, and contributed many scenarios to Selig when that company was one of the big producing concerns. Miss Duff has many friends among the film people in the California city, and will no doubt be right at home. At this writing it is expected that she will be connected with the Universal Film Company.

THE GAIETY has booked "Wives of Men," the Doll-Van state rights feature, for four days, starting New Year's Day. A peculiar coincidence is that Miss Reed was the star at the Gaiety on last New Year's, appearing in "Today," also a Doll-Van production. The same thing applied to Mildred Harris. Miss Harris was here Christmas Day this year in "Borrowed Clothes," and last year in "The Cold Deck" with W. S. Hart.

"UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE," Artcraft play with Elsie Ferguson, and "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Camping Out," were the attractions at the Gaiety on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, December 29, 30 and 31.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" will come to the Chatterton some time during January, Manager Cave not yet having decided on the dates.

EDDIE POLO in "The Lure of the Circus" is doing a land-office business at the Royal, where a new chapter is shown each Sunday.

MANAGER MAISEL of the Capitol gave a Christmas present to every child that attended the Capitol on Christmas Eve. And there surely was a large crowd present.

DOROTHY GISH was a riot at the Vaudette for three days in "The Hope Chest." Miss Gish has improved steadily in the past year, and since they discovered in "Hearts of the World" that she is a natural comedienne she threatens to become one of the real big stars. "The Hope Chest" was shown at the Vaudette on December 22, 23 and 24; Vivian Martin, followed on Christmas Day for a four days' run in "Jane Goes A-Wooing."

"THE STRANGE WOMAN," Fox production with Gladys Brockwell, made a great hit at the Lyric on December 22 and 23. Manager Loper advertised the picture heavily and made profit of it. Earle Williams in "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell" followed "The Strange Woman" for two days, and the last three days of the week will go to Annette Kellermann in "Queen of the Sea."

USUALLY the week before Christmas is dull in the theatrical and film business in Springfield, but this year such was not the case. Due to the large numbers of returning soldiers and sailors, patronage was about normal, and every manager in the city was very much pleased.

"THE CRUCIBLE OF LIFE," a special production, did very well at the Princess for three days, starting December 22. Ethel Clayton in "A Soul Without Windows" is booked for December 25 and 26, and on December 27 and 28 Lewis Stone will be seen in "The Man of Bronze."

THE AMUSE-U is making lots of money these days, and Fox pictures are used almost exclusively. Manager Ben Rovin is strong for William Farnum and Theda Bara, and never fails to pull big business when he has these stars. George Walsh also does well every time he plays the Amuse-U.

ERNEST LANGE, director of the Majestic theatre orchestra, was married to Miss Louise Lawrence, of Decatur, on Wednesday, December 18, at the bride's home in Decatur. Mr. Lange has just assumed the leadership of the Majestic orchestra again, after being absent since last summer.

HARRY WEISS, who represents the First National Exhibitors' out of Chicago, was in this city trying to place the new Mary Pickford productions. He called on W. W. Watts of the Gaiety and Vaudette, who thought the price asked was much too high, and at last report Mr. Weiss said he had practically closed with Finn and Heiman to place the pictures in at the Majestic.

THE poorest business Douglas Fairbanks has even done since becoming a big star was that on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, December 16, 17 and 18, at the Gaiety in "Arizona." Manager Thornton is at a loss to account for the poor trade. Perhaps the "flu" had something to do with it, perhaps it was the Christmas shopping, and it may be that Springfield is beginning to tire of "Doug."

CHARLES RAY had four very good days at the Vaudette in "String Beans," starting Sunday, December 15. Patrons thought it was one of Ray's best pictures. For the last half of the same week, Manager Watts had Wallace Reid in "Too Many Millions," and Universal's pictures showing the surrender of the German fleet. The fleet films pulled extra business, so the Vaudette finished the week before Christmas in good shape.

GEORGE PEHLMAN, former advertising man for the Lyric, writes from "over there" that he may be soon "over here."

GEORGE WALSH in "I'll Say So" was the attraction at the Lyric for Sunday and Monday, December 29 and 30. For New Year's Day, and the three days following, Manager Loper has secured Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives," her first production releases by the First National Exhibitors.

MANAGER LOUIS KERASOTES says business is good at the Savoy and that he finished one of the best years the theatre has ever had.

DAUNTLESS GUS KERASOTES, who watches over the Royal, says "The Lure of the Circus" is the best serial he has ever shown. Gus shows the Eddie Polo picture on Sundays, and the boys do flock to see him. For the week of December 23-30, the Royal has booked: Monday, "Hearts or Diamonds"; Tuesday, Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back"; Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, "The Kaiser's Finish," the Warner special feature; Saturday, "Other Men's Daughters," a Fox production.

THE LYRIC has not yet signed for Select Pictures. Harry Loper says the price has been boosted out of sight, and that he cannot see his way to pay the new figure asked. In the meantime the service is out of the city altogether on first run stuff.

THE new management of the Empress reports business as being very good. Alterations and improvements are expected to begin as soon as the weather permits.

THE CAPITOL announces the first chapter of "The Lightning Raider" for Sunday, January 5, 1919. Pearl White has long been the big star on Washington street.

THE year now closing has seen the five-cent theatre raise to ten cents, and the ten-cent houses increase admission from ten to fifteen and twenty. Every manager is positive that there never will be a decrease—that the five and ten-cent day has gone forever.

Interesting Items of Elgin

SUNDAY AFTERNOON matinee showings of pictures for children, with particular attention paid to selection to suit juvenile taste, are innovations at the Crystal theatre, Dundee, with the New Year. The plan meets requests from parents for Sunday afternoon shows that will enable them to take children then instead of in the evening, and of patrons who find evening attendance impossible, but afternoon patronage possible. The first matinee featured a Katzenjammer Kids picture, "Up in the Air," Margery Wilson in "The Law of the Great Northwest," and an Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran comedy.

MANAGER GUS COOK of the Crystal has also booked the famed Blue Ribbon features for Saturday and Sunday specials. The first of these will be shown January 11.

CARMEL MYERS in "The Marriage Lie" featured the bill on New Year's Day. Other showings were Episode No. 4 of the western serial, "Hands Up," and the comedy, "Bruin Trouble." There was a matinee performance at 2:30.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Say, Young Fellow," led the Friday bill. Other offering was Chester Conkling in the Keystone comedy, "Bucking Society."

A TRIANGLE FEATURE, "The Mystery of Mr. Walton," was shown Saturday, January 4, with a Keystone comedy.

EXCELLENT patronage at the Crystal greeted the Christmas Day showing there of Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth." Episode No. 3 of "Hands Up" and a Fatty Arbuckle comedy completed the bill. There were both matinee and night performances to big houses. For Christmas Eve program the Crystal offered Pauline Frederick in "The Resurrection," with the War Review, No. 11. Weather of storm and wind reduced the patronage to small proportions. Other pictures of Christmas week included Vivian Martin in "The Petticoat Pilot," Mary Warren in "The Vortex" and Roy Stewart in "The Boss of the Lazy Y." Comedies were Billy West in "The Pest," and Fatty Arbuckle in "Fatty and the Broadway Stars."

PROFESSIONAL and personal friends of Manager and Mrs. William B. Newman, the former of the Grand, Elgin, smiled when they opened their Christmas mail and found greetings in the form of attractive cards bearing cut of the photograph of the junior manager, John Wade Newman, baby son of the two.

MARGARITA FISHER in "The Mantle of Charity," pleased immensely as Christmas Day show at the Star.

PICTURE PATRONS had choice of "Mr. Fix-It," with Douglas Fairbanks at the Grand, William Farnum in "The Rainbow Trail," at the Orpheum and J. Warren Kerrigan and Lois Wilson in "Three X Gordon," at the Temple.

OTHER PICTURES of Christmas week at the Grand included Sessue Hayakawa in "The Bravest Way," the Pathe Weekly and Weekly War Review and Pauline Frederick in "Her Final Reckoning."

THE D. W. GRIFFITH production, "The Great Love," with "The Birth of a Nation" cast, was offered at the Grand January 2, 3 and 4. The picture was shown at popular prices, the first venture of the sort in history of war pictures. The Cecil B. de Mille production of "Old Wives for New" featured the bill on Monday and Tuesday, December 30 and 31. There was vaudeville there Sunday and on New Year's Day.

"PARENTAGE" opened the Christmas week bill on Monday at the Orpheum. Other pictures of the week were Clara Kimball Young in "The Claw," Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "By Hook or Crook."

PAULINE STARK in "Irish Eyes," Priscilla Dean in "She Hired a Husband," Vod-a-Vil Movies, Lyons and Moran in "Maid Wanted," Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus," Fatty Arbuckle in "Fatty and the Bathing Beauties," "A Ramble in Aphasia," and the Universal Animated Weekly were Christmas week offerings at the Temple.

THE STAR offered in the last week of the year Theda Bara in "Under the Yoke," Gladys Leslie in "The Little Runaway," Sidney Drew in "By the World Forgot," Charlie Chaplin in "The Pawnshop," the last episode of "The Fight for Millions," and the comedy, "Painless Love." For New Year's Day the Star offered Harold Lockwood in "Pals First." On the Saturday previous it showed G. M. Anderson in "Red Blood and Yellow," George Walsh in "I'll Say So" was shown Sunday and Monday, the Tuesday feature was Betty Compson in "Border Raiders," Friday came William S. Hart in "The Narrow Trail" and on Saturday Peggy Hyland in "Caught in the Act."

STARS MOST POPULAR with the patrons of the Orpheum sent the old year flying in last days of 1918 at that playhouse. The bills included showing of Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "By Hook or Crook," Shirley Mason in "Cy Whittaker's Ward," Constance Talmadge in "The Lesson," William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage" and June Elvidge in "The Appearance of Evil."

¶ The Central States Edition of Motion Picture News costs us a lot of money. It costs just as much as would a separate publication published locally in Chicago or Milwaukee. But it's worth it to us—Because it enables us to say that NO OTHER FILM PUBLICATION covers the Central States as thoroughly, and with such intimate news and gossip as does Motion Picture News.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful Central States Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theater manager in the Central States territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the Central States Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

¶ Will you do it? Will you let us know about it? And then watch our smoke!

Albert Eden of Seattle Transfers from Fox to Select

ALBERT W. EDEN, for four years to a day Northwest manager of the Fox Film Corporation, with headquarters in Seattle, severed his connections with this firm to take charge of the Seattle branch of the Select Pictures.

He has been succeeded by K. L. Burk, who will act as district and local manager for Fox. Mr. Burk is well known in the territory, comprising the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, which comprises his territory, as he has been doing business in them for the past four years.

Arrangements for his taking up the management of the Northwest district were made with Mr. W. Sheehan, when he recently paid a visit to the Seattle office.

Mr. Eden has made a great success in the motion picture industry, and his numerous friends are extending him their sincere wishes in his new endeavors, and all are glad to hear that he is to remain on the coast for some little time at least.

His present duties with Select Pictures Corporation will require him to remain in the Northwest for the present, as Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana are handled out of the Seattle office, and he is contemplating making a trip over the entire territory and visiting each exhibitor in person and renewing old acquaintances.

Mr. Eden put on one of his "Eden Drives" directly after Christmas and received results immediately. In an interview Mr. Eden said that he believes he has made a change for the better and is glad to be connected with such men as Mr. Woody and A. S. Kane, but sorry he must leave his old friends at the Fox office.

The twenty-five employees of the Seattle Fox office presented Mr. Eden with an elaborate Elks emblem as a token of appreciation, and all joined in extending him their heartiest and best wishes for the future.

Wingham Goes to Portland for Mutual

L. C. WINGHAM, former manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, at the Los Angeles office, is in Portland, and in charge of the Mutual exchange. H. H. Brownell, former manager of the Portland office, has been promoted to the Seattle office. Theodore Johnson, formerly of the Mutual exchange of this city, who has been with the Mutual exchange at Salt Lake City, has returned to Portland after a year's absence.

David Bershon Gets Thanks from Washington

DAVID BERSHON, branch manager of the Universal exchange, this week received a letter from M. L. McBride, at Washington, acting chairman of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, thanking him for his work in providing films for outdoor entertainment at Camp Kearny, Cal., recently, when the influenza quarantine order had closed all indoor entertainment at the camp. The letter is as follows:

"My Dear Mr. Bershon: Mr. Sargent of the Liberty theatre at Camp Kearny called my attention to the matter of film service used in Camp Kearny during the quarantine period of seven weeks. I want to take this opportunity to express the appreciation of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities for the fine way in which you responded to the call when the camp so badly needed entertainment.

"Your generous contributions of film certainly were appreciated by the men in the camp, as well as the management. Mr. Sargent writes that the film service was a definite aid to the morale during the quarantine period at Camp Kearny."

When Mr. Sargent called for these films he had no funds with which to defray the expense, according to his letter to Mr. Bershon. But Bershon immediately got in touch with Harry Ballance, manager of the Paramount exchange; A. B. Lamb, Metro; Louis Hyman, All Star Features; A. R. Patton, Mutual; T. E. Hancock, World Film; Ben Fish, Goldwyn; Guy Gunderson, Kleine, and with the co-operation of these managers a splendid show was furnished the camp every day during the seven weeks' quarantine.

Comique Film Leases Part of Sennett Studio

A LARGE portion of the Mack Sennett studio located on the opposite side of Allesandro Street from his main plant, has been leased to the Comique Film Corporation, and Roscoe Arbuckle is now at work there on a subject titled "Love." It was at this studio that Arbuckle first worked in pictures, and whether or not he believes the old environment better than that at studios where he has been working has not been said, but Lou Anger, the general manager of production, is authority for the statement that they have everything at their command to make even funnier comedies than ever before.

IN discussing the ten, twenty and thirty idea of the Film Clearing House, Branch Manager Roberts said this week that the first release on this plan in Los Angeles would be Evelyn Nesbit's play, "Her Mistake." It is a six-reel production. The ten, twenty, thirty idea classifies theatres into three classes, known as A, B and C. The highest rental to any Class A theatre will be $30 a day, the rental to Class B houses will be $20, and on Class C theatres will be $10. The second release in Los Angeles on this plan will be J. Stuart Blackton's production, "Life's Greatest Problem," which has had a run at the Rivoli theatre in New York. The third release will be "A Woman's Experience," with Mary Boland as the star.

She will begin production as soon as her contract with Select Pictures expires. It is announced here that she has four more pictures to produce for Select. It is not known here whether she will produce in New York or Los Angeles when her new contract becomes effective.

W. H. HEPBURN, branch manager of the Vitagraph exchange, this week returned from a trip through Southern California. While at Taft he secured contracts for the showing of Blue Ribbon features and Big V two reel comedies at the C. & C. theatre, which is under the management of A. J. Cunnard.

EARL SINKS, special salesman for Universal, as soon as he was advised that the Universal news reel of the "Surrender of the German Fleet" had been received in Los Angeles, re ported immediately the following bookings for the reel from Arizona towns: American theatre, Phoenix; Menhennett, at Mesa; Goodwin Opera House, at Tempe; Rex theatre, at Superba; Lyric, at Miami; Martin theatre, at Globe.

DAVID BERSHON, branch manager of the Universal exchange, this week received a wire from the home office in New York that Universal intends soon to star James J. Corbett in a series of Universal productions. Corbett is nationally known as former world's champion heavyweight pugilist, and for a number of years he has been appearing on the legitimate stage.

THE UNIVERSAL new reel of the "Surrender of the German Fleet" received its first showing in Los Angeles at the Superba theatre Tuesday, December 17, at 5:30 p. m. David Bershon, Universal branch manager, announces that this time was ahead of all other news reels of the same subject, competitors not being able to show the picture earlier than 6:30 p. m., Wednesday, December 18. Three Universal prints were received in Los Angeles. One was shown at the Superba, one at the Laughlin theatre in Long Beach and one at the Plaza theatre in San Diego.

THE STRAND theatre at Phoenix, under the management of Rickards and Nave, opened Monday night, December 23, a few days ahead of the original schedule. The delegation of film exchange managers in Los Angeles that planned to attend the opening did not make the trip, but special dedication exercises will be held later, at which the exchange men will be the honor guests. At these exercises also the Strand will unveil its magnificent organ, which was not ready at the opening last Monday.

S. MOOS, salesman for Universal, visited San Bernardino, Riverside, Redlands and other Southern California towns last week and reported an excellent business, although in many places the public, he said, had not regained confidence since the beginning of the influenza epidemic and is yet inclined to remain away from theatres.

What They Do in Seattle

FILM ROW sincerely regrets the loss of one of its most popular salesmen, Joe Baum, who recently died of the "flu." He was connected with the Universal office in Seattle for some time. Members of the row expressed their sympathy by sending letters or telegrams to members of his family in Portland, where the funeral services took place.

H. H. BROWNELL, formerly with the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation in Portland, Ore., is now manager of the Northwest territory with headquarters in Seattle. L. W. Wingham of Los Angeles, Cal., will be in charge of the Portland office.

C. J. FEATHERSTONE, who was connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Company in Seattle before he was helping to water the motor truck for Uncle Sam in California, has received an honorable discharge and has returned to help with the booking with this same concern.

LYOD MORGAN, owner of the Marysvill theatre, Marysville, Wash., recently took a flying trip to the Goldwyn offices in Seattle to see Mr. McCormick and make some contracts for pictures.

THE CLEMMER theatre's new slogan is, "Home of Goldwyn Pictures." The first Goldwyn picture they showed this year was "Laughing Bill Hyde," which went over with a big success.

MORTON L. BROWN of the Yesler theatre, who has been laid up for a short time, is back on the street again.

THE MISSION, Georgetown district, one of Seattle's most prominent residence movies, is now being managed by Mr. Woodhouse, who bought it from A. G. Lind.

C. D. BASON has sold his Sumner theatre, Sumner, Wash., to H. M. Bird, formerly of British Columbia.

THEODORE W. RADTKE, proprietor of the City theatre, Mansfield, Wash., paid a visit to Railroad Nave, Northwest manager for Triangle, and some of the other exchange managers on Film Row.

Portland Manager Runs Theatre Until Four A. M., Making "Owl" Record

THE motion picture has invaded the night life of Portland. G. T. Holtzclaw of the Circle theatre, Fourth and Washington streets, startling blasé film patrons by running his show until 4 a. m., when the best owl record to date has been the midnight matinee of New Year's Eve.

Friday, December 13, was the day, or rather night, Portlanders were greeted with the show novelty. It started off well and practically pays expenses, at the same time giving the theatre much advertising that is invaluable.

One operator, one ticket seller, one door-tender, plus an added light bill, just about sums up the extra cost of operation.

Mr. Holtzclaw, who made a tour of the theatres of the United States last fall, has jumped his admission figures from five cents straight to ten-cent matinees and fifteen-cent evenings and Sundays in less than a year and eliminated the daily change in favor of as long as four-day screenings.

He showed "Cleopatra" at twenty cents, which is recognized as a big undertaking for a house only a few weeks removed from five cents. Now he's adopted the policy of showing all picture for not more than two days, and is running Paramount-Artcraft almost exclusively.

Musicians Gain Concessions in Butte

THE musicians' union won in its fight for higher pay after a short tussle with the theatre managers.

However, it might be called a compromise, in that the new scale does not become effective until the fourth week in January.

This will permit the theatres to get going in full swing following the setback resulting from influenza and the consequent shutdowns.

The new scale will be $4 for three hours' work evenings, and if two hours are put in afternoons the pay will be $6. Leaders, of course, get more, and all of them in Butte get considerable above the scale.

The moving picture operators have also all gone back to work after striking in sympathy with the musicians. After two days' turmoil the trouble was adjusted.

Wearing of Mask Defeated by One Vote in Sacramento

FRANK C. MILLER of the Victor theatre, Sacramento, was one of the San Francisco visitors this week. Mr. Miller says that the "flare-up" of the influenza taken in connection with the Holiday season has made business very dull in his city.

However the citizens managed to defeat the effort made by the city administration to force the wearing of the "flu" mask. Sacramento is the seat of the State Government and the State Board of Health had vigorously declared against the mask.

Notwithstanding this stand the city board tried to have the supervisors pass the ordinance. The matter came to a vote on December 17 and was defeated by one vote. Mr. Miller says now that San Francisco has taken the same stand and he believes that the theatres of Sacramento will remain open and the attendance will not be discouraged by the constant sight of the mask.

For next year he is confident a harvest waits the Sacramento show houses. The legislature meets there in January and this always brings a number of people to the city, and also the home coming of the men enlisted from his city will help to swell the theatres' attendance.

California Women Vindicated for Befriending Soldiers

RECENTLY when influenza began to invade Southern California the Army authorities at the Government Balloon School at Arcadia issued an order restricting the visits of men at the camp to towns within the vicinity of the post. The town of Arcadia has a motion picture theatre about 100 yards from the post managed and operated by a woman. Hearing of the camp restrictions the owner of the house threw open the doors of her theatre and put on a performance for the soldiers free of charge and admitted no one but soldiers, paying all running expenses out of her own pocket, according to a report later printed in the Arcadian Observer, the official newspaper of the camp.

The civil authorities of Arcadia next day summoned the woman into court "to show reason why she should not be punished for the breaking of a city ordinance." The soldiers in camp were incensed at the action and the Arcadian Observer started a fight on the Arcadia officials that later caused them to release the woman. She had given the entertainment, the Observer pointed out, as an act of kindness and patriotism. There was general rejoicing in camp when she was released and vindicated.

San Diego News and Views

JAMES M. BLACK, more familiarly known as "Jimmie," formerly with the Silver Strand theatre in Coronado, has been advanced to the management of the Broadway in this city, another of the houses of the Broadway Amusement company. Mrs. B. B. Gooch is directing the destinies of the Silver Strand.

GOOD news to local amusement house managers is the order which has been issued at Camp Kearny permitting officers and men to attend the San Diego theatres, provided they wear masks as provided under the emergency ordinance which has been in effect since December 9. It was planned to lift the mask regulation on the 18th but the time was extended to the 23rd, and it is possible that, after Christmas, it may again be in force.

ETHEL CLAYTON, Paramount star, visited Camp Kearny December 20 to take part in a big scene for a picture to be called "Private Pettigrew's Girl," in which she has the title role. The men in camp were invited to participate in the scene which showed the star singing "Over There" at a camp entertainment. George Melford directed, with Paul Perry at the camera. Monte Blue, the leading man, Charles Gerard and James Mason were among the other members of the company who came down for the filming of the scene.

FOR the showing of "The Japanese Nightingale," featuring Fannie Ward, at the Superba, manager W. E. Jones arranged one of the most attractive lobby displays which has been seen here in a long time. Festoons of cherry blossoms, Chinese lanterns, tinkling Japanese wind-bells, the sell of insense, the artistic Japanese lamps and the girl ushers in their neat kimonos, all added to the Oriental effect. For his holiday decorations manager Jones went to the mountains for holly and other seasonable coloring. Colored lights, cotton snow-balls and sleigh-bells, hung about the lobby, gave easterners an impression that they might need their muffs and neck-scarfs, but San Diego's winter climate runs true to its record and the usual eastern winter apparel is put in the discard here.

MANAGER RUSSELL ROGERS of the Plaza was receiving congratulations all the week on getting the first showing here of the scenes of the surrender of the German fleet off the coast of Great Britain. His audiences included many bluejackets and men in khaki who wanted to see on the screen the greatest surrender in history, in which their more fortunate fellows in the service had such a privileged part recently. Nazimova in "The Revelation" was the other big feature of the week at the Plaza.

THE ISIS theatre, which is not often used these days, was opened for a week's showing of "The Lady of the Dugout," the big picture featuring Al and Frank Jennings, the ex-bandits, with Al Jennings appearing in person at each performance. Julian Eltinge, with his company of artists, appeared at the Isis December 21 and 22.

Miss Jo Donnelly Pilots Feature Through Montana

MISS JO DONNELLY, the only woman film representative on the road in the Northwest at this time, is in Butte making arrangements for the showing of her states' rights feature, "The Fall of the Barbary Coast," in that city.

She recently played to big business at the Grand, Great Falls. This picture was formerly known as "The Finger of Justice," was renamed, as the new title was figured to have more pulling power. In fact, it has demonstrated that ability, it is said. Miss Donnelly has been in the film game four years and is delighted with it.

She makes her headquarters in Seattle, where she was with the first Fox exchange. There she is known as the "Queen Bee," due to her connection with the King Bee exchange.

"The theatre men in Montana are just fine to me," she said "and I am in love with the picture business. Everybody treats me lovely and I look for my present feature to go big in this state."

San Francisco News Condensed

A. N. BOWLES, American representative in San Francisco, has recovered from an attack of pneumonia and is back again at his desk at the Pathe headquarters.

HORACE A. BOUSHEY, former general manager of Essanay, Chicago, is in San Francisco temporarily, it is said, although there are reports he may make this city his future home.

CHAS. KELLS, formerly auditor of the General Film Co., has been appointed successor of Robert Green as booker at the Pathe exchange.

THE BELLE theatre, Livermore, Cal., has passed from the hands of G. A. Bush to H. E. Crosby. The local exchanges are congratulating themselves on the acquisition of Mr. Crosby, who is of the type of exhibitor who is on the best of terms with the exchanges and at the same time keeps in close touch with the taste of his patrons. At one time he managed a theatre in Los Angeles and later controlled three at Oxnard, Cal. As one of the exchange managers put it Mr. Crosby is a "reel" manager. Mr. Crosby visited San Francisco early this week, and showed some of his metal by the classy pictures he ordered for his theatre.

GLENN HURST, of Hurst Bros., managers of the Grand theatre, Reno, was a visitor to San Francisco this week. Mr. Hurst was indignant when one of the attaches of a film exchange addressed him by the initials "W. R." "And besides," he wound up his kick, "I don't spell my last name that way, either."

CHARLES MUELHMAN, the new manager of the Fox Film Corporation in San Francisco, is going after business in a lively style, and expects to write the name "Fox" all over the State. He has just appointed three new salesmen who will help him to round up the exhibitors everywhere. These new men are: J. L. Mulhauser, formerly with the George Kleine System and the Select Pictures Corporation; E. R. Redlick, formerly with the Fox Corporation in the northwest, and Howard Butler, formerly with the Fox in Denver.

THE AMERICAN PHOTO PLAYER CO. reports that news has reached the San Francisco headquarters that a photoplayer has been sold to the Olympic theatre at Amarillo, Tex.

THE HAYWARDS theatre, Haywards, Cal., has just installed a photoplayer of the American Photo Player Co.

SOL LESSER, who returned from the east last week, announces that he bought the rights of the photoplay "Mickey," starring Mabel Normand. The picture was made by Mack Sennett and in Mr. Lesser's opinion it will rank with "Tillie's Romance." He also secured the rights of the "Spreading Eagle," one of the propaganda plays endorsed by the Government. Mr. Lesser is expecting to take on the "Billy West Comedies" for this territory.

IRVING LESSER, the brother of Sol Lesser, who was formerly with the Los Angeles office of the All Star, and who is still in the U. S. Navy, is visiting San Francisco on furlough. He has nothing to say as to his prospects for an early discharge from service.

LESLIE McCABE, of the Liberty theatre, Coalinga, Cal., accompanied by his wife, is spending the Holidays in San Francisco.

THE San Francisco theatres had good crowds for the Holiday season, and attractive shows were on at all the big houses. The Imperial presented Chas. Ray in "String Beans." For three days the Imperial ran "The Surrender of the German Fleet." All this week the same picture was the principal attraction at the Alhambra. The Portola had Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling." The Rialto starred George Walsh in "I'll Say So." The California had "The Road Through the Dark," with Clara Kimball Young, while the Tivoli had two leads, Mae March in "Hidden Fires," and Olive Tell in "Secret Strings."

Spokane News Condensed

LARRY TRIMBLE, director of the Washington Motion Picture corporation, is now in Los Angeles, according to word received by his Spokane friends. Before taking up his directing again, he is busy writing a story based on the poems of Robert W. Service, the "Canadian Kipling." Mr. Trimble began his career as a writer of stories and he has literary talent of high order. It was his writing ability that landed him in pictures. After the publication of a series of his stories about the lumber camps, and fishing villages of his native state, Maine, the Doubleday-Page Company gave him an assignment to visit the Vitagraph studios and do a series of articles on the people who made the movies—a subject which was then relatively untouched. The lure of it caught Trimble and he submitted one of his Maine stories and it was accepted. Nobody then at the studios knew anything about directing a story of the lumber camps and Mr. Trimble was commissioned to do the work and he has been at it ever since.

SPOKANE has a particular interest in the Wallace Reid picture, which began at the Clemmer Christmas day. It is a Famous Players-Lasky version of "Broken Threads." The author of "Broken Threads" is Ernest Wilkes, former part owner of the Wilkes Stock Company, which played an engagement at the American theatre in the season of 1915-16. Mr. Wilkes played in several roles himself that season and spent most of the winter in Spokane. If opinions of experts are worth anything then "The Man from Funeral Range," the picturization by Monte Katterjohn of Ernest Wilkes' play, "Broken Threads," is certain to become one of Wallace Reid's most popular pictures. Mr. Reid says he is delighted with the photoplay and that it gives him a characterization of which any screen player may well feel proud.

All the News of Portland

NORTHWEST film folk were shocked to hear of the sudden death of Joseph H. Baum, familiarly known as "Joe" Baum, at Seattle, Wash., on December 17. He died of influenza after an illness of only a few days. Joe Baum was one of the most popular film men in the territory, being associated with the industry for nearly five years, and more recently with Universal at Portland and Seattle, as salesman and service expert. Sol Baum, Northwest Universal manager, was with his brother at the end. A mother, Mrs. M. Baum, and a sister, Miss Emma Baum, also survive him.

A. H. McDONALD, the Eugene, Ore., film exhibition chief, has jumped into the limelight as the advocate of two months' pay for all discharged soldiers and sailors. He has had a number of slides made and plans to have them run in every theatre in the country, forcing Congress to do as Canada does, take care of its men to the extent of two extra months' pay. The three slides to the set are: "Are not our soldiers entitled to more than a summary discharge after winning the war?" "Canada gives her sons two months' extra pay. With all our wealth can we afford to do less?" "Of course every patriotic citizen agrees with us, so will you write to your Congressman or Senator today?"

THE Allied Nations Official War Review brought joy to one Portland family last week, Mrs. Earl Wuvzweiler being startled into excited animation one afternoon at the Majestic theatre by seeing her husband, bigger than life, in a squad of Yanks in France. Manager Lacey ran the reel off several times for Mrs. Wuvzweiler and other relatives and then clipped a few feet of Friend Hubby out of the picture as a Christmas gift to the wife.

THE STAR THEATRE, Estacada, has been re-opened by W. W. Bonner.

HARRY HUNTER, assistant manager of Famous Players-Lasky, has just returned from a Southern Oregon trip. He reports that the picture exhibition game is gradually coming back to normal, although the fear of a revisitation of the dread "flu" keeps many away from the theatres.

C. M. HILL, Famous Players-Lasky manager in Oregon, was confined to his home for eight days with the "flu." However, he's back on the job preaching the doctrine of Paramount-Artcraft.

MIKE ROSENBERG, of the De Luxe Film Corp., was in Portland recently. Louie, his brother and Portland manager, is on a tour of the territory.

THE PEOPLES THEATRE, Scio, Ore., has been discontinued. Bad business, influenza responsible.

E. E. LEWIS has sold the Grand theatre, Sheridan, Ore., to W. E. Dodge.

THE GLOBE and Rolfe theatres, Albany, Ore., are now under the active management of C. F. Hill, formerly Goldwyn exchange manager for the Northwest.

JAMES H. CASSELL, motion picture editor of The Oregonian, is back at his desk after a few months in the Tank Corps. He got as far East as Camp Colt, Camp Dix, and New York, and while in the Metropolis for a day piloted a squad of "Treat 'Em Rough" boys to the Fox Fort Lee studio to see Evelyn Nesbit at work on a picture. Gus Metzger, Jewel's New York manager, and Arthur Gulick, Universal's publicity chief, framed the studio trip and Metzger, former Northwest Universal exchange manager, placed his car at the disposal of the boys.

ABRAHAM NELSON, former treasurer of the Majestic Theatre Corp., Portland, has been mustered out of the service—aircraft production—and is back for the film game again.

In and Around Denver

GABY DESLYS was booked as a special Christmas attraction at the Princess theatre and drew good crowds. The subject was very appropriate, as the principal scenes were laid on Christmas Eve.

THE ISIS has booked the Ford Weekly, beginning in January, when General takes over the distribution.

MRS. JACK SCOTT has resumed her duties as cashier at the Princess theatre, following four weeks' illness with influenza.

SERGEANT "BOB" RYAN, formerly with Mutual and World, now in service at Camp Funston, is spending the holidays with his parents and his many Denver friends.

GUY PARFET, who has been traveling in Western territory for several years, will start on his initial road trip for Pathe on January 2.

MANAGER GILMORE of the United Pictures Theatres of America has just received their first advertising matter and is busily engaged in arranging circuits for initial releases in Denver territory. "The Light of Western Stars" is booked for over two months solid and extending through January and February.

UNITED PICTURES now has three salesmen under the jurisdiction of the Denver headquarters. C. F. Parr is covering Salt Lake territory, J. H. Eberle is visiting exhibitors in Eastern Colorado and Kansas, and W. C. Wiethoff is back from lining up a number of Nebraska exhibitors.

L. CHAMBERS, assistant manager of United, closed several good contracts during Mr. Gilmore's absence in New Mexico. The latter states that after covering all Denver territory very thoroughly he is very optimistic for United's future. It is believed now that every theatre in Denver territory will be open by January 15.

IRVING EHRENDOFT is back from a long trip covering Southern Colorado, all of Wyoming and El Paso, Texas, and reports successful bookings of Supreme features.

W. L. GULLETT of Goldwyn has recovered from a severe attack of influenza. He left December 26 for a city days' visit with Wyoming and Montana exhibitors.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

WILLIS T. LUSHER, former head booker at the local Paramount-Artcraft exchange, is now with Uncle Sam's army in Siberia. Letters from him state that he expects to soon be returned to the good old U. S. A.

DAVE WOLFSON, manager of the American, Billings, spent a few days in Butte this week on business.

THEATRES in Billings played to standing room only the fore part of the week and business is shaping up in nice form, according to George Bourke of the local Universal exchange. "The showmen got a pretty hard jolt from the 'flu,'" he said, "but with the passing of the holiday dullness things should run along smoothly again."

BUSINESS is gradually picking up at Butte theatres, report local managers. "Our box-office receipts are far ahead of what they were after the first days of the reopening period," said A. C. Raleigh of the American. A. A. Bruce, who managed the Rialto during the absence of Ralph Ruffner, had a similar report and did nice business.

The return of soldiers just mustered out of the service is beginning to make itself felt at theatre box-offices here. With the coming of prohibition on January 1 in Montana and the passing of the "flu," in addition to the return of the boys, things are beginning to take on a roseate hue for local houses.

MEL WILSON, well known road man of the Famous Players-Lasky Salt Lake Exchange, is back in Butte after a tour of Montana. He reports business picking up, although still suffering from the epidemic inroads.

C. W. ECKHARDT, manager of the Marlowe at Helena, was a Butte visitor the past week.

Eddie Polo Receives Warm Welcome in Denver

DENVER "movie" fans went wild Christmas week over the visit of Eddie Polo. He is well known in Denver as a former circus acrobat of the first grade, but never created half the enthusiasm among show patrons as he did during his recent visit on Denver's Great White Way, when he addressed delighted audiences at several theatres as the star in the popular Universal serial, "The Lure of the Circus."

He was the guest while here of Edward Armstrong, manager for Universal, and D. C. Webber of the Webber theatre. He was well received at all the theatres, especially the Strand, the Webber and the Ogden.

Eddie left Denver for Butte and a trip to the Northwest Pacific, and expects to wind up at Universal City in a few weeks for a start in his next serial, "Who Am I?"

On the eve of his departure for Butte, Polo was presented with a handsome silver loving cup at the Universal exchange. It bore the following inscription: "To Eddie Polo from Eddie Armstrong and Universal Exchange Employees, Denver, Colorado, December 27, 1918." He was highly pleased with the gift and also with his cordial reception in Denver.

San Francisco Theatre Managers See "Gas" Masks Abolished by Board Vote

THE "flu" situation in this State shows an improvement and all danger of the closing of the San Francisco theatres now seems to be passed. The matter of resuming the wearing of masks came up before the supervisors last Friday and the enabling act was voted down.

A remarkable matter in connection with the vote was that the principal fight against masks was not made by the theatres, or other business men, but by a large number of women, who attended the meeting as citizens and not as representatives of any sect, creed, society or business organization.

This is really the first decisive stand women have taken against any measure since the vote has been accorded to them. Their success is making some of the old-time politicians sit up and take notice.

Dr. Hassler, head of the Board of Health, who a few days ago was threatening to take "drastic action" if the mask was not adopted again, now says that the health situation is such that it will not be necessary for him to move further in the matter.

The theatre men now breathe more freely in San Francisco and it is expected that by the first of the year the State will be wide open again as far as running theatres is concerned.

Already several towns which closed their theatres, to a great extent on the alarmist news coming from the San Francisco Board of Health, have reopened or are about to reopen.

Notable among these is Fresno, which opens again on Christmas Day, and San Jose which reopens on December 24. It is believed there will be few closed houses in this section of California by the beginning of the next week.

This picture needs no caption other than to say that it is the new studio of a certain comedian who makes certain comedies for a certain large program

Vladivostok, Siberia, to Have Complete U. S. Film Laboratory

MISS JEANNETTE C. HARVEY, private secretary to Chas. S. Hart, United States Director of the Division of Films, arrived in San Francisco this week accompanying two baggage carloads of laboratory supplies which have been sent to Vladivostok, Siberia. Miss Harvey says a complete laboratory will be established at Vladivostok, where not only the films sent from America can be cared for and repaired, but also where films taken in Siberia can be developed and printed.

The whole work is part of the propaganda put out by the United States Government in the interests of the Czechoslovak people, who are striving for peace in distracted Russia.

The motion picture laboratory supplies which Miss Harvey brought to this city were forwarded to their destination on the transport Courageous, which sailed on the 20th inst. for the Siberian port.

Miss Harvey is accompanied by her mother on her visit to San Francisco and both have fallen in love with this section of the State.

Entire Village Burned for Ince Film

WHAT is declared to be the biggest fire scene ever staged for a photoplay has just been filmed by Thomas H. Ince at Inceville for a dramatic scene in "The Accursed Town," a C. Gardner Sullivan story in which Dorothy Dalton is featured, supported by Thomas Holding, Tully Marshall, Joseph Swickard and other well-known screen players.

An entire village was built at a cost of $20,000, it is said. The street with its solid structures was about two blocks long. This was thoroughly saturated with oil, and when the match was touched seven cameramen ground out scenes from different angles. About five hundred people participated in the panic scenes, and the principal players pictured dramatic incidents between the blazing walls of fire.

The village was built near the scene used once before when a western city was burned for "Hell's Hinges," in which William S. Hart was featured. Mr. Ince profited by his experience before and believes in his new conflagration he has the most spectacular fire ever transferred to the celluloid.

Joe Merrick Returns to Chicago for Mutual

JOE MERRICK, who has been West Coast supervisor for the Mutual Exchanges, returned last Saturday to Chicago where he will be attached to the Chicago office in the future. Before returning to the Middle West he had just completed a swing around the circuit, not only in the Western territory, but in the Middle West as well. He believes that business will resume its normal trend after the first of the year. Before Merrick left for Chicago Newton E. Levi, of San Francisco, was appointed western supervisor for Mutual, and William Crank, of the San Francisco Metro exchange, was made branch manager of the San Francisco Mutual office. Frank Wingham, of Los Angeles, was appointed branch manager of the Mutual exchange at Portland, and D. S. Mitchell, with the Los Angeles Vitagraph office, was selected as salesman at the Mutual exchange to succeed Wingham. With the general shake-up on the Mutual exchanges in the West, Mr. Merrick predicted greater efficiency in the organization in the future. A. R. Patton, branch manager of the Los Angeles Mutual exchange, will remain in that position, and he announced this week that new contracts are being signed by his office in large numbers.

Harry T. Nolan Takes Over Assets of Mountain-Plains Theatre Supply Company

HARRY T. NOLAN has taken over the assets of the Mountain-Plains Theatre Supply Company at Denver, which was suspended about two months ago following the death of its manager, Mr. Joplin.

The stock and fixtures invoice about $40,000. Under the management of J. J. Morgan, who has been associated with Swanson and Nolan for several years and who was also assistant to Manager Joplin.

The new concern is now open for business at the former location, 1514-18 Welton street, and will be known as the Theatre Supply Company. They have the exclusive agency in Denver territory for Simplex machines and will carry a full and complete line of theatre accessories.

They will cater especially to the trade in this territory, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah, Montana, Nebraska and Western Kansas.

Exhibitors Tell Why Crowds Stormed Doors to See D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life"

Artcraft Picture Is Box Office Knockout, Consensus of Opinion of Showmen—A Genuine $2.00 Production

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "The Greatest Thing in Life," his newest Artcraft Picture, is proving to be one of those rare productions that pile up new box office records in city and village alike.

It is leaving in its wake enthusiastic patrons shouting again the praises of D. W. Griffith, and smiling exhibitors with greatly enlarged bank accounts.

What About "War Scenes?"

Exhibitors who have not yet shown "The Greatest Thing in Life" will be particularly interested in comments made to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation regarding the war angle and its effect upon attendance.

The war scenes in "The Greatest Thing in Life" did not detract one iota from its box office value. Rather, according to many exhibitors, it helped bring larger crowds.

A $2.00 Attraction

"The Greatest Thing in Life" is a genuine $2.00 attraction and, because their patrons realize that a D. W. Griffith picture has entertainment value many times that of an ordinary moving picture, scores of exhibitors doubled their prices for the run of "The Greatest Thing in Life." And at increased prices the theatres did turn away business.

"War Stuff" Aids Business

The tremendous business done by exhibitors with D. W. Griffith's latest Artcraft Production, "The Greatest Thing in Life," seems to show that the "Victory" feature of the story helps greatly to produce better business.

W. F. Dagon, the Vaudette Amusement Company, Springfield, Ill., says: "The fact that it is a war picture did not hurt our business, but rather increased it. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' was one of the finest pictures that we have ever shown and our patrons were most lavish in their praise."

"It being a war picture undoubtedly increased its drawing power considerably," according to a statement from Carr & Schad, Inc., of Reading, Pa.

S. Trinz reports that "The Greatest Thing in Life" did very well at the Covent Garden theatre in Chicago. "As a rule," he says, "war stuff does not appeal to his audiences, but this D. W. Griffith production was not affected by this state of affairs. I consider it an excellent picture, high-class, artistic and well done."

Runs for Four Weeks at Clune's Auditorium

Clune's Auditorium theatre, in Los Angeles, according to W. H. Clune, found the popularity of D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life," was so enormous that it was necessary to extend the run for four weeks.

"Our turn-away has been so great," Mr. Clune states, "that we had to double our regular program by giving two shows both New Year's Eve and New Year's Night, all this with the competition of many inviting counter attractions. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' has captured the public's favor and builds daily despite the fact that our 3,500 seating capacity is continuously packed and our prices the highest in the city, with over seven hundred 75-cent seats and the balance at 50 and 25 cents."

It is not only in the large cities that "The Greatest Thing in Life" is breaking records. The Florence theatre, in Elk Point, South Dakota, reports: "D. W. Griffith, the master director, in his latest big masterpiece, 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' has produced a wonderful picture which will go down in history as one of his best efforts."

Charles Fecher, the Lexington theatre, Chicago, reports capacity business.

J. D. Weiner, manager of the Ziegfeld theatre, in Chicago, says: "The Greatest Thing in Life" adds another pure water pearl to the string of successful Artcraft releases. It is an unqualified success from start to finish. Never has an audience at the Ziegfeld theatre been more unanimous in its expression of satisfaction than was manifest at this exhibition."

The Jewel theatre, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., wires the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation: "'Greatest Thing in Life' went over big three days. Pleased all classes. Morning papers started a contest offering $10.00 for the best 200-word letter on 'What is the greatest thing in life?'"

How They Advertised Griffith Production

The Strand Theatre Company in Birmingham, Ala., aroused Birmingham's curiosity before the showing of D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" with a very successful contest in the Birmingham News for the best essays upon the subject "What is the greatest thing in life?" The Strand theatre furnished the

In its newspaper advertising the Strand theatre emphasized the fact that it was a D. W. Griffith production.

J. Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman, in Cleveland, exploited "The Greatest Thing in Life," as "D. W. Griffith's contribution to Victory." His entire lobby was displayed with all the Allied flags. These were clustered and held by an American shield bearing the word "Victory."

About ten days previous to the showing of "The Greatest Thing in Life," Mr. Kuhn ran teaser ads. in the newspapers asking "What is the greatest thing in life?"

"Of the many thousands of patrons who have viewed this picture I have heard nothing but praise," Mr. Kuhn says. Critics Say the Greatest Thing in Life is D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life"

D. W. GRIFFITH

Whose Latest Arcraft Picture is "The Greatest Thing in Life"

Judgment Pronounced by Dramatic Writers on Arcraft Picture Distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

IF a great majority of the newspaper critics agree that a motion picture contains unusual entertainment value, the exhibitor is safe in assuming that it is worth booking for an extended run and that it will make good in added box-office receipts as well as with its patrons.

But when every critic, whether in New York, Los Angeles, Keokuk, Iowa or Gallup, New Mexico, stands right up and shouts from the columns of his newspaper that he has found the most extraordinary motion picture that he has seen in many a day—then every exhibitor knows that the thing for him to do is to rush right down to the exchange just as fast as he can go and try to book that production for as many days as he can get it.

The Market Tips

The dramatic criticisms of the newspapers are genuine market tips to exhibitors. The average dramatic critic is an expert in picking flaws. When he goes to a motion picture theatre he has his mind made up in advance that what he is going to see is not quite as good entertainment as the manager of the theatre has promised.

Remarkable indeed is the outburst of praise from the dramatic critics for D. W. Griffith's latest Arcraft production, "The Greatest Thing in Life." They have found that the promises were not half strong enough.

The trade paper experts have proclaimed "The Greatest Thing in Life" as a genuine Griffith production in everything that the expression means. The newspaper critics, usually even more severe, have joined in the unanimous praise given to the latest triumph of this screen genius.

The Verdict of the Jury—Dramatic Critics

The New York American says:

"Mr. Griffith, head and shoulders above any other creator of films, can make pictures that satisfy Americans. His 'The Greatest Thing in Life' is Arcraft's very finest picture of recent issue. It gives forth such a vital stirring picture as only this master producer has been able to present. The drama ends with the boy saying: 'I love you.' The girl answers: 'Yes, I know you do.' And because she loves him, you see, that's the greatest thing in life."

Exhibitors Tell of Their Successes

consider it the best Griffith picture we have yet had, an artistic picture in every sense of the word and one that will stand for some time as a master-piece."

Herman A. Schwahn, general manager, the Eau Claire (Wis.) Theatre Co., wires

New York Evening Journal says:

"In 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' David Wark Griffith, acknowledged as the supreme master of screencraft, has done it again. His second Arcraft production undoubtedly hits the mark. The big audience at the Strand, gripped by the action of the play, seemed dazed for a while by the very bigness of the theme, then burst into storms of prolonged applause which left no doubt as to its verdict. Attempted by any other producer it would have meant ruin."

Mae Tinée, in the Chicago Journal, says:

"Mr. Griffith weaves a poignant and tender story, high-lighted with humor and softened by touches of the most human sort of pathos. He does these things so well! The picture is masterly in production."

Philadelphia Evening Bulletin says:

"Dramas may come and dramas may go, but none is likely to exceed in human appeal Mr. Griffith's, 'The Greatest Thing in Life'—a superb example of the new photographic art."

New York Sun says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is remarkable for its realism and signally effective strokes of pathos. Again Griffith comes out on top. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' sets a higher mark in realism."

Philadelphia Enquirer says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is quite up to the lofty Griffith standard. It is a thrilling story. Whatever other producers achieve along these lines Mr. Griffith always contrives to come along and go them one better."

New York World says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life,' produced by Mr. Griffith, has all the wealth of setting and realism."

New York Herald says:

"Nothing in the photographic art has ever been more subtly impressive in the art of pantomime than in this Griffith picture."

Philadelphia Public Ledger says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' exhibits the usual Griffith skill in supervision, wonderful photography and exquisite lighting."

the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation:

"Accept our heartiest congratulations on Griffith's 'Greatest Thing in Life.' Any exhibitor who is asleep at the switch and fails to grab this quick will have something to regret, as I consider it one of D. W. Griffith's best—a one hundred per cent. sure fire home run attraction and entitled to extended runs everywhere. We advertised this as a D. W. Griffith special, and after our initial showing mouth-to-mouth advertising was all that was necessary."

CRITICAL FLASHES

The newspaper men and women say just what they think about D. W. Griffith

Archie Bell, Cleveland News, says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is a Griffith film, not just a motion picture."

The Indianapolis Star says:

"Mr. Griffith is the one genius of the film—he stands supreme and alone."

The Washington, D. C., Herald says:

"With all due respect to his rivals, Mr. Griffith has demonstrated his claim to the sole and only right to make a picture that will go on the big time and stay there at $2.00."

The New York Sun says:

"Again Griffith comes out on top. 'The Greatest Thing in Life' sets a higher mark in realism."

The Philadelphia Public Ledger says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is the greatest thing in life."

Mae Tinnee, Chicago Journal, says:

"The picture is masterly in production."

Antony Anderson, in the Los Angeles Times, says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' is a wonderful achievement. Griffith stands supreme."

T. E. Oliphant, New York Mail, says:

"'The Greatest Thing in Life' contains what is probably the greatest and most thrilling scene ever shown on screen or stage."

The New York American says:

"D. W. Griffith—head and shoulders above any other creator of films."

Louella Parsons, in the New York Telegraph, says:

"In 'The Greatest Thing in Life' D. W. Griffith scores another success."

CAPITOL COMEDIES

You Never Have to Apologize to Your Audiences for "Smiling Bill" Parsons

MOST screen comedies for many years were made on the principle that also governed the producers of burlesque in devising their entertainments.

They were laughable—if you didn't mind having your wife and children mingle blushes with their laughter.

The American picture-going public doesn't want to blush; doesn't want to be fed the risque.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons has always recognized the healthy, sane tastes of the nation's fine average of people. He knows that women and children constitute the vast majority of picture-theatre patrons. It is a fine insurance that you have against the intrusion of smut into your theatre when you book

What exhibitors say about "UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

The Government's Great Victory Picture

Exhibitor Comment:

"Wonderful picture. Extra Big Business." "A picture that every theatre should play"—M. P. News.

Consensus:

"Powerful production with extra big drawing powers"—M. P. News.

Letters from Prominent Exhibitors who gave official presentations of the picture:

RIALTO and RIVOLI New York

Let me reiterate my declaration that aside from its patriotic and historical values, "Under Four Flags" is perhaps the most important picture of the great war, as viewed from a box-office angle.

Its success in a simultaneous run at the Rialto and Rivoli, to a week of capacity business, and its return after the lapse of a week, for a second week at the Rivoli, is now a matter of motion picture history. This presentation of the picture, entirely without precedent, was certainly a strong test of the drawing power of the production.

"Under Four Flags" is listed high among our important successes at the Rialto and Rivoli.

SHEA'S HIPPODROME Buffalo

Because "Under Four Flags" is a war film, we thought that possibly the public would not be interested, on account of present-day conditions. We did more than capacity each day of the showing of the picture. The writer cannot endorse the production too strongly, either from the point of interest it holds or as to box-office value. It lends itself to presentation and exploitation as no other production can.

"Under Four Flags" is a box-office attraction of the highest order.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN

METROPOLITAN THEATRE Washington, D. C.

"Under Four Flags" played here as the opener for the Metropolitan and was a tremendous success and in a large measure responsible for the immediate popularity of the house. It was booked by public demand. The exhibitor who overlooks booking these remarkable government pictures makes the biggest mistake of his life, because he not alone co-operates with his Government, but he does a business at his box-office which will make him wish for a Government picture every day, if he could get it.

HARRY CRANDALL

STANLEY THEATRE Philadelphia

"Under Four Flags" was conceded by the newspapers to be the best war picture ever produced. Patrons were lavish in their praise and patronage. I am sure the Division of Films will have very little trouble in placing this picture in the representative theatres throughout the United States.

FRANK W. BUHLER

CIRCLE THEATRE Indianapolis

The remarkable success of the official presentation of "Under Four Flags" at the Circle is ample testimonial to the wonderful drawing power of the picture and its absorbing interest to the public. The presentation here was one of the outstanding achievements of this theatre, while from a box-office standpoint it has a value that cannot be too highly recommended. The picture itself is an artistic achievement that merits the unanimous praise it has received on all sides.

THE DRAWING POWER OF

"MACISTE"

Dramatic Critics of the big American Dailies Refused to look at Motion Pictures until the advent of "MACISTE" in d'Annunsio's "Cabiria," in 1914, when they Sat Up and Took Notice. As a result "Maciste" played to Over a Million Dollars.

"Maciste" was the first Star for which the Public Paid $2.00 to see. No man, woman or child has ever forgotten him. His Distinctive Personality made him a figure in Picturedom unequaled in Popularity and Drawing Power by anyone, past or present.

In "The Warrior" he achieved New Triumphs, sweeping the country like wild-fire. Every man who had to do with this Production made money, and plenty of it. "The Warrior" is still producing splendid returns.

"THE LIBERATOR" is the Biggest Film "Maciste" has done. A year and a Fortune were spent in its making. Its Twelve Episodes will satisfy "Maciste-hungry" Fans for Twelve weeks of Big Money Business.

Rifkin, of Boston, made a killing with "The Warrior" and will Quadruple his earnings with "THE LIBERATOR." Others are keeping pace in the scramble for Territory.

Gentlemen:-

When your representative first approached us with the proposition of booking the Houdini serial, we felt that, altho it was a departure in our policy, yet the fact that the cleverest man in the business was the star, was sufficient to warrant our booking it. We were willing to take a chance on Houdini's reputation.

Now that we have the results before us, we are induced to write you the glad news. BUSINESS INCREASED 40 per cent. At this time of the year when the theatrical business drops off, the Majestic is kept busy handling the largest crowds that have ever visited the theatre around Christmas. Our patrons are highly pleased with "The Master Mystery" and we congratulate Houdini on his great success.

OFFICIAL GOVERNMENT RECORDS AND MARINE CORPS REPORTS ADDED TO THE FILM BY NEW SUBTITLES—VIVIDLY DESCRIBE THE WORK OF THESE DEVIL-DOGS OVER THERE

NOTE: From Official Government Records

"SERGEANT MOSS GILL, severely wounded in action. Took command of his platoon after his chief was shot. With great courage led his men into action and handled them with skill until wounded three times by enemy machine gun fire."

(Sergt. Moss Gill is the sharpshooter in THE UNBELIEVER who reads his bible in the trenches between pot shots at the enemy.)

SINCE this production was made, the Marines who took part have fought at Belleau Wood and Chateau Thierry with undying glory and honor.

The 78th, 79th, 80th and 96th Companies, about 1000 men, appear in this picture.

Colonel A. S. McLemore, of Headquarters, U. S. Marine Corps, Washington, gives the following information:

"At the Battle of Belleau Wood these companies suffered casualties in killed and wounded amounting to nearly 80 per cent.

"Many of those who escaped wounds were cited for bravery.

"Since that time these men participated with credit in other battles."

NOTE: From Official Government Records

"CAPTAIN JAMES F. RORKE, 5th Regiment Marines, had been out of the hospital a short time, after being gassed, when he was wounded in the shoulder from shrapnel at Belleau Wood."

(Capt. Rorke is the "O'Shaugnessy" of THE UNBELIEVER who receives the last rites on the battlefield from a Rabbi.)

NOTE: From Official Government Records

"MAJOR HOLCOMB was recommended for conspicuous bravery in the face of the enemy: — In command of Second Battalion, which captured town of Bouresche, and resisted strong counterattack on June 7th, showed rare ability as leader of troops, and inspired his men to unceasing efforts by devotion to duty and fearlessness in the face of heavy machine gun and artillery fire."

(Major Holcomb appears in charge of a detachment of Marines in THE UNBELIEVER)

GEORGE

"The Unbeliever"

Quebec, Dec. 6th 1918.

George Kleine System,
Mr. A. Gorman,
Montreal, Que.

Dear Mr. Gorman:-

In connection with the playing of "The Unbeliever" at my house on December 2-3-4, it is with much pleasure that I write you this note to advise you of the unqualified success which attended the showing of this production. With the end of the war, I was a bit afraid that the picture would have lost its effectiveness and as we had some pretty tough opposition:- Fairbanks at the Auditorium, reopening of vaudeville season at Olympia, Clara Kimball Young at the Empire etc., I was not any too confident that the thing would go over.

However, I advertised it as well as I could, especially playing up Marguerite Courtot as a French Canadian in the French press, and we had a bumper house the first night, which was beaten by $40.00 the second, the third measuring up to the others. The Quebec public is very critical on war pictures and as it went over here with a bang, I am sure that it will make money for any house in Canada if properly handled. We heard only praise from the public, and even the Military men who attended were highly pleased, though of course, they pointed out one or two little inconsistencies.

I can safely say that THE UNBELIEVER could have run the whole week to big business and take this opportunity to thank you for the co-operation of yourself and Mr. Mitchell.

Best regards,

Yours truly,

(Signed) J. Ledden.

Manager,
Victoria Theatre.

"I am only sorry that every man, woman, and child in the city did not get to view this wonderful picture.

"In my estimation it is a far better 'after-the-war' picture than it was before, while we were still fighting. Many of my patrons preferred it to HEARTS OF THE WORLD, and I endorse it heartily."

Mr. H. H. Holdridge, Zenith Theatre,
Shenandoah, Iowa.

"This is to say that we played THE UNBELIEVER in our High School, Saturday night, and we were very much pleased with it.

"It is a picture that every man, woman and child should see. The fact that the war has closed does not detract from its value. In fact, if there had been no war, the lessons it teaches are all important."

Mr. C. M. Miller,
Principal of the Labette County High School,
Altamont, Kansas.

Western Dramas Win Patrons

Red blooded stories of the open spaces, God's Great Out-of-Doors, with its wonderful scenery; its rugged men, sometimes lawless, but always human; its women, free and untrammelled by the conventions of society; with the dramatic action of feudist battles, where men settle their disputes with rope or gun. Are the Pictures Right?

THE public wants better pictures.

This declaration has been made so often that one feels at a loss how to make it immediately emphatic.

It could be said:

—that pictures are losing their hold upon the public.

—that in many important cities vaudeville is beating pictures as a public amusement.

—that the picture industry is letting slip that which has kept it afloat despite its economic leaks—namely, its large and eager buying public.

The situation is serious. A few producers know it; the vast number of people engaged in the making of pictures do not.

And they won't realize the big fact till they open their eyes, get completely out of their present orbits, and, waving aside all other considerations, get into, really into, the mind of the American picture public as it views present day pictures.

Consider a concrete instance.

There's one city in the South to-day, a stirring city of three hundred thousand people, where the best program pictures are not being shown at a profit and where vaudeville is packing its doors. Sincere attempts, backed by generous advertising, to "put over" a first-class picture house have failed.

Granted that the city is partly wrong; granted that the picture theatres are wrong; the fact remains that the main wrong must rest with the pictures.

* * * * *

The Picture is the Beginning and End

THIS city presents an extreme situation. But in other Southern cities vaudeville is going big, and picture houses look empty by contrast. And worse till, their audiences are yawning over our most pretentious photo-dramas. In smaller cities and towns, where there is no rival amusement, pictures adequately advertised are getting by. As a small-town exhibitor recently pointed out in these pages, he has plenty of good pictures to choose from; and he, for one, sees no cause for any hue and cry after better pictures. And where picture competition has been regulated or eliminated conditions are extremely acceptable. But these are no criterions.

The main issue is the question—are pictures holding their own? Are they progressing as the public demand progresses? Are they able to meet other amusement competition?

The outlook is disquieting.

The vaudeville houses with their big bills and their slop of much for little money are meeting picture-house prices and adding first-run features to their pretentious vaudeville bill.

But it is apparent to any close observer that people are going to see vaudeville, not pictures. It is not fair to say they are going in spite of the pictures; but the very great majority at least are not going because of the pictures.

And it is also apparent, to any close observer, that in the rival picture houses, even when all seats are filled because of big names and big promises, the audience is not satisfactorily entertained. Many pictures get by. They please in spots; they please fairly well as a whole. But they don't grip; they don't produce word of mouth advertising; they are not, in short, upholding and certainly not adding to the picture-going public.

What is wrong?

There are many big and little factors. The subject admits of large and grave discussion.

* * * * *

Back to the Old Truth

THE main trouble, of course, is over-production. We will not have better pictures until we have fewer ones. That is certain. And we will not have fewer and better pictures until distribution is reordered to admit of the profitable production of fewer and better pictures, and, as must always be added, until the public is gradually weaned away from its habitual expectation of frequent changes and made to support larger runs.

The fault with the photodrama to-day—to get right at the root of the matter—is that it is machine-made.

The bulk of our product to-day is literally canned photodrama—the inevitable result of an over-speeded, over-strained industry, based upon too little creative genius.

In order not to seem to theorize let me give, again, a fact illustration.

* * * * *

The Comedy Saving the Day

IN a prominent Southern city I saw, in two successive weeks, two remarkably promising bills. They comprised—one each week—two of our most pretentious and widely heralded photodramas, to which were added, one week, Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," and the next, Arbuckle's "The Sheriff." This picture theatre, I might add, is forced to present such bills because of vaudeville competition. Its orchestra and house accommodations, too, are away ahead of the best that vaudeville has ever aimed at anywhere.

The fact is that each week—and a point was made of watching the audience night after night—the photodrama fell down and the comedy went over big. The audience sat passive through one and tense, interested, highly entertained through the other.

Why?

Simply because Chaplin and Arbuckle are creating, originating screen entertainment. They are introducing new business. They are constructing—for, by and with the motion picture.

* * * * *

Some Create—Others Use Patterns

THE photodramas are photographic patterns—for the most part mere illustrations of stage plays, books and stories which may have been written for the screen, but which don't arrive on the screen; which do not grip, hold and inspire as they could be made to do through the written or spoken word.

Stars are types; they don't act.

Every effort seems to be made but the basic one—of telling a story as the screen can tell it, of making the screen speak out in the screen's own peculiar art of expression.

Great names are used—of personages, books and plays. Exteriors and settings are beautiful. Photography is faultless. Sub-titles are good. There is continuity. Extreme efforts are made to put over the "punch" by dragging in sensationalism. But just the same the audience—and often it is passively pleased and admiring—leaves with the impression that it has only witnessed a lifeless photographic treatment of another art.

Picturization of best seller novels leaves one with the impression that the text pages have merely been illustrated and the story unfolded in this way. One feels that the producer—once he had gathered together with much expense and commendable judgment and enterprise the play or book, the star, cast and other important essentials, shouted, "Now, all let go! Hurry up with the camera and let's see what we get."

Not a Hammer—An Alarm Clock

THERE is too much effort at transference to the screen and too little of basic, fresh construction for the art of expression peculiar to the picture.

There is much to be said upon the very important situation, and we shall try and say it from time to time—also to deal with the advertising of the picture which is of equal importance.

This is not intended as a criticism of pictures, but rather as a statement of fact as to their reception by the public, taking into full account the exigencies of the business today and the hardships they impose upon the able and well-intentioned producer, who knows the foregoing facts as well as we do. And there are notable exceptions to which the general criticism of the machine-made picture does not apply. There are producers, moreover, who are persistently turning out such pictures.

There are some egotistical eyes, however, that may well be opened. If they want confirmation, let them look at their pictures along with the public.

Rothapfel Resigns

A PROPOS of the present need of better photodramas it is significant that time and again the New York Times chooses to ignore the feature offerings at the Rivoli, Strand and Rialto, and to refer prominently to the short subjects on the various programs.

Very often the New York papers make a feature not of the pictures themselves but of their manner of presentation, of the entertainment, in other words, of which pictures are only a part.

The man who originated this kind of motion picture presentation, who has constantly developed and consistently maintained its excellence—who in short put the motion picture on Broadway as a high class entertainment is, as everyone knows, S. L. Rothapfel.

And now, with great surprise and equal regret we learn of Mr. Rothapfel's sudden resignation of his directorship of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres.

We are hoping that the Rivoli's and Rialto's loss will not be the motion picture's loss. We can't conceive that such will be the case. The motion picture has never had a better friend nor has it ever felt a more courageous, sympathetic, uplifting influence than Mr. Rothapfel's.

Watch Washington

WE said, right after the War that, in our opinion, the leaders of thought throughout the world would rely greatly upon the motion picture to steer humanity safely through the great period of social and economic adjustment now facing us.

And we now learn that just this is the thought and plan of the administration at Washington.

The plan is a sane and sound one.

Washington will not attempt to make pictures, nor issue dictums, nor introduce the slightest evidence of Governmental red tape. Relying wholly upon our producing ability and facilities, Secretary Lane, we understand, with the aid of at least one very able writer, will suggest those ideas best to be followed and some that are obviously to be avoided, and then throw the weight of all available support back of those pictures which exemplify American ideals of life and progress.

Wild Rumors

GIVEN a hotel lobby and enough prominent film men—and rumors of mergers arise like ducks in the spring. We had them in New York in December, and now they are floating out of Los Angeles.

Our opinion of present day mergers and mergers for a long time to come coincides exactly with that of one level-headed manufacturer in New York who says: "There ain't no such animal," and who gives two reasons either one of which makes all others unnecessary.

For the benefit of the rather large territory outside of Times Square, New York, and the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles—for the exhibitors and exchangemen who are constantly uneasy and who wonder why the devil all the pot boiling is going on anyway, we can say with as good security as we know of: "There are no mergers, present, or in the making."

The Star Question

SPEAKING largely and with an eye to the sound economics of the whole industry, we would like to obtrude this thought upon the industrial powers that be: "Think less of stars."

Or we might put it this way: Think of stars as box-office attraction all you care to, but don't think of suspending the whole industry from a half dozen of them. Don't make a few personages the main assets of an industry that takes in a million dollars cash a day at the box-office.

Make pictures; make public interest; make world markets; make tangible values.

An industry, fifth in size, needs a mighty big and solid and enduring foundation.

Dealing in Personalities

"He Woke 'em Up with Film Clearing House"

FRANK HALL doesn't break into "Personalities" this issue because we happened to meet him during the week. We didn't.

He lands here because in conversations with independent producers we heard his name come up so often.

'Sfunny!

The Film Clearing House limped along for many weeks like a flivver with water in its gas.

Then the engine seemed to go dead entirely.

And then Frank Hall stepped in. Now he's got 'em all talking.

All because Frank Hall is a fillum man, and a fillum man knows that, no matter how good your proposition may sound or may be—in this game the beginning and the end is the PICTURE.

He went out after—PICTURES.

He got—PICTURES.

He got a sensational winner to lead off with—"Wanted for Murder."

No longer does the Film Clearing House give you the impression of a man sitting between two pat hands, drawing four cards—and daring to HOPE!

Mixing the News with the Rumors

Harry Reichenbach has signed contracts to handle the trade exploitation on the Macauley League of Nations spectacle "Humanity." Things will start to pop in a few weeks.

Theodore O. Eltonhead is now selling "Publicity, Exploitation and Promotion" from his own offices in rooms 1524-5 and 6 of the Aeolean Building.

The rumor came out of Los Angeles on Wednesday that Jesse Lasky had resigned from F. P. Lasky Corp. Then all was silence.

HERE'S a hand of congratulation to Joe Plunkett.

Along with everyone else we've carried the news of his appointment as managing director of New York's Strand.

But we can't miss, the opportunity of putting our "Good Luck to you, Joe" down here in black and white, where the proofreader and others have to read it.

We like Joe Plunkett.

We like him for his open-hearted, boyish smile.

We are with the man who smiles the clean, free and easy smile of a boy.

And we are always willing to bet on the man who carries a boy's heart and enthusiasm into a big job.

So we are betting with Joe Plunkett on his big job.

Just to show that we are not gambling much he starts with some corking advertising on the Fred Stone picture.

Thereby opening his campaign with the strategy of a Foch.

For, aside from such producer, created advertisements as Universal and Paramount have given New York, and the campaigns the long-run Specials have received, Gotham's picture advertising has long been in a position to learn from—

S. Barrett McCormick, Harold Franklin, George Carpenter, Jensen and Von Herberg, and some few others.

"The Answer to Vitagraph's Well Known Advertising"

If we have answered a certain question once in the last six months we have answered it a hundred times.

And we have discovered who is the least known advertising manager in the business.

The question is—"Who does the Vitagraph advertising?"

The answer is—"Paul Lazarus."

And he has been doing it over a long stretch of the calendar. But evidently Paul is too busy turning out clean, effective advertising copy and exhibitor aids to make his identity known on Fillum Row.

So we wish to announce to the world that Paul Lazarus, in addition to being a regular, hundred per cent fellow, is an all-wool thoroughbred advertising and promotion man—not an over-night product.

Paul is a graduate of the Cosmopolitan and Hearst organization. You need say no more. Unless you wish to add that Paul knows pictures and the selling of pictures as well as he once knew the selling of "Over a Million Circulation."

Just a Few Odds and Ends

The Ohio Screen League's meeting at the Hotel Astor makes peppery reading. You'll find it on page 365.

Some of the classiest trade advertising seen yet will emerge from the S-L offices in a week or so. Somebody tipped us to watch for their inserts.

He wanted a drink. Didn't have the price. Told us his story and finished with a philosophic shrug, "Oh, well, beggars can't be boozers." His name is Freddie Schader.

WE hereby announce a Grand, Sumptuous, Nonpareil, Super-Unexcelled Prize Contest.

Open to all readers of this page who recover.

The prize—a franchise in any one of the fifty-seven Mergers consummated in the last fifty-seven days.

Whose photograph is this on our immediate left?

Give us the answer and you get the prize.

Rummaging through our "morgue"—beg pardon, filing cabinet—the other day, we found it.

The caption on the back says "Harry Reichenbach."

But it can't be.

This the debonair Harry that we know?—Never!

The subject of this daguerrotype appears scared.

In fact, he seems frightened stiff.

He looks like a press agent in the hereafter.

And what in hel-iotrope could scare Harry Reichenbach?

It can't be Harry.

Tell us who it is and you get the prize.

Or—if it is Harry—

You get the prize if you tell us—

What creation of God, man or the Kaiser, could SCARE HARRY REICHENBACH?

INFLUENZA VISITS MARY PICKFORD

Other Picture Folks Also Reported Ill

WITH the renewed activities of the influenza evil, many motion picture people have fallen ill, Mary Pickford being among the most recent. While the star's temperature January 8 and 9 was reported to be 103, it was declared by her mother and physician that her condition is not alarming. Newspaper accounts of Miss Pickford's illness declared she was resting well, and immediate improvement was expected.

Others who have been reported ill of the influenza are Allen Holubar, of Universal; Victor Scheitzinger, Ince director; M. Siström, manager of Universal City, and Mrs. Siström.

The number of influenza cases has greatly increased, and agitation for "closed towns" is again rife. The Board of Health of Los Angeles was on January 9 considering the advisability of closing. Motion picture men intend to fight for complete quarantine for a week if closing of the theatres is threatened.

Mrs. Carl Laemmle, wife of the head of Universal, was also reported ill of influenza this week.

Buffalo Undergoes Lively Week

Machine Operators Get New President and Rumors Have It a New Theatre Will Be Built—Meyers Back from War

ACCORDING to latest reports from Buffalo, N. Y., the past week has been an unusually live one in film circles in that city.

Henry de Verneuil has been re-elected president of the Moving Picture Machine Operators of Buffalo for the ensuing year. Other officers named are: Walter Matchette, vice-president; Mike Diller, financial secretary and treasurer; recording secretary, Elmer Bugman, and business representative, DeWitt Martin.

Ray Meyers, a member of the Commercial editorial staff, who has been doing Y. M. C. A. publicity work in the Southern camps, has returned to Buffalo and in addition to his newspaper work is taking care of the publicity for the Elmwood theatre. Mr. Meyers was formerly press agent for Edward L. Hyman, former manager of the Victoria theatre and a member of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Advisory Board.

There is a rumor in town that local financial interests are planning the erection of a big theatre, hotel and newspaper plant in Main street, taking in the entire block from W. Eagle to Niagara streets. The building, it is understood, will be about 15 stories high and cost in the neighborhood of $10,000,000. Trouble in obtaining options on property involved, is holding up the proposition at present, it is said.

Anna L. Harlow, editor of the women's department of the Courier, has departed for New York City to sail for France, where she will be associated with the Community Motion Picture Bureau. This Bureau, with headquarters in New York, has for its president Warren Dunham Foster. Its work is the distribution of motion pictures to the soldiers and sailors of the United States and Allies.

The Government's big War Exposition is holding the center of interest in Buffalo at present, the city's two big halls, Broadway Auditorium and the Elmwood Music hall being filled with war exhibits. Motion pictures of the war are being shown in connection with the show. Among the subjects are "Along the Crimson Gash of the Western Front," "Scenes of Chateau Thierry," "Gen. Foch in Action," "The Unconquerable Spirit," and war scenes on the western front and in Palestine. Different pictures of this sort are shown every day. Secretary of War Baker opened the exhibit Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the Paramount-Artcraft stars, were in Buffalo last week at the Teck theatre in "Keep Her Smiling." The production is being presented with the screen connection of the stars being played up big.

Manager Earl L. Crabb of the Strand theatre is departing from his usual policy this week by presenting Florence Reed in "Wives of Men," for the entire week. It is very seldom that the Strand shows a picture more than four days. Week runs on any picture are a novelty in Buffalo.

Brunton Studios Greet Kid New Year

The most pretentious celebration of the West Coast Film Colony, to commemorate the arrival of 1919, was that given by Robert Brunton at his commercial studios on Melrose avenue. The ten-acre grounds were brilliantly illuminated by colored lights, but the center of attraction was the mammoth glass stage recently erected, which, for the evening, had been converted into a beautiful dance hall. Two orchestras played continuously and the host, Mr. Brunton, personally presided at the Western bar, where all kinds of refreshments were served from eight until three A. M. Suitable cafe accommodations were given.

The glass stage was perhaps the most elegant bar room setting scene at Western studios, and was built under the personal supervision of Mr. Brunton.

Fred G. Sliter Returns to Mexico City

Fred G. Sliter, former manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, New York City office, for the last few months of his service with A. S. Kirkpatrick's picked organization, has returned from Mexico City where he was sent by the Committee on Public Information, Foreign Section, with a title of Foreign Film Commissioner to Mexico.

Mr. Sliter was ordered to Mexico to open a United States Film Exchange for the purpose of creating a demand and offering for proper distribution American-made subjects throughout the Mexican Republic, released through the Committee on Public Information, Mexico City office.

Immediately on the signing of the armistice Government plans for dealing with the Mexican situation underwent important changes and Sliter had no sooner installed himself in his new offices at Mexico City than he received orders to return to New York for instructions. It is now understood that the plans for film service through American Government agency in Mexico will be abandoned and that Mr. Sliter will return to Mexico this week with orders to dismantle the exchange there and close up its business.

"I cannot say that I shall be sorry to get away from Mexico," said Sliter in discussing his future plans. "Mexico is in an amazing state of unrest and the contrasts are violent. For instance, there are thousands of starving human beings in Mexico City, which is one of the most beautiful cities on this continent, so far as my observation goes. While more than half the population is in rags and tatters and suffering from hunger, millionaires by the score are to be encountered rushing about the broad boulevards in imported motor cars of the most expensive makes. Theatres and base ball parks are prosperous.

"So far as the motion picture business is concerned, leaving Governmental interests out of the question, it seems to be pretty badly scrambled. There is a demand for certain American-made productions, and there is a good deal of American film being shown in Mexico, but most of it is pirated stuff, being smuggled across the border from all appearances at ease, in which the parties having the film in their possession boast about being so successful in reaching Mexico with some of America's best productions. This works a serious handicap to the honest buyer, who has absolutely no protection. Up until the armistice was signed every sort of German sympathy film was available for the asking and there is no use trying to make out that the American productions were very unpopular in Mr. Caranza's country."

Not Real Rapf Feature

According to a report from David Snapper, an exhibitor of Perth Amboy, N. J., certain parties are circulating a picture in that territory which they claim to be "Wanted for Murder."

The picture is not the genuine Harry Rapf feature, "Wanted for Murder," which is controlled exclusively by the Independent Sales Corporation.

Rothapfel Leaves the Rialto and Rivoli

Quits with Friendly Feeling for Company to Take Up "Project of Significance"—Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, Musical Director, Named as His Successor

ON February first, Samuel L. Rothapfel will cease to be managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, which were especially built for him and which he planned and has directed from their opening.

Announcement of his resignation caused more excitement in New York motion picture circles than any event in months and the brief formal statement which Mr. Rothapfel issues stating merely that he had resigned and was parting company with the other owners on the friendliest terms failed to satisfy the curiosity of the film colony.

Neither has Mr. Rothapfel indicated what will be his future connections, but those closest to him believe that the next of his activities will be in London or Paris, or both, where he has for some time had a desire to conduct motion pictures on the same scale, or greater, than at the two New York houses. Definite announcement of his plans are expected within a few weeks. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, musical director of the two houses, is announced as his successor.

His Formal Statement

In announcing his resignation, Mr. Rothapfel made this formal statement:

"I am leaving this connection to take up the preliminaries in a project of significance and with a greater claim upon my attention, the nature of which I cannot discuss in detail at this time. There will be more to say later.

"I am leaving the Rialto and Rivoli with the best of feeling and in pleasant personal relations with the owners. The organization which I have built will go on with the work. I shall always feel a deep personal interest in the welfare of these theatres which I have 'fathered' on Broadway."

On the day following his announcement the board of directors of the two houses issued the following announcement:

"Mr. Rothapfel is leaving to take up activities in another field of motion picture endeavor, and the good will of the institutions follow him."

"Hugo Riesenfeld, now musical director for the two theatres, has been with the organization since the opening of the Rialto theatre. He will continue a close personal supervision of the musical phases of the entertainment and will continue to conduct the orchestra as before.

"The policy of the theatres will continue to be that of the highest attainable quality in motion picture and musical production."

Close friends of Mr. Rothapfel say that his resignation was caused by the fact that he felt that he had done all that he could do at the two houses, and that he did not want his activities to be handicapped by purely business reasons. The two houses being owned by a corporation had the first duty to do in making money, and they have both shown large profits, so that after putting them on their feet the managing director felt that he had done his full duty and that to remain in a position with any limitations on his activities would be unfair to himself.

Mr. Rothapfel has had a big burden on his hands since the opening of the Rivoli, which has just celebrated its first anniversary. He has always been a tireless worker, never taking time or sleep into consideration, and he has spared no effort to make both the theatres the greatest of successes. He has had only brief vacations each year, most of these being occupied in talking to exhibitors on his trips across the country, and recently he has often expressed the sentiment that he "was tired."

Willing to Aid Others

He will remain at his post until the first of February, and it will probably be the first of April before he will actively begin work on his new projects. In the meantime he authorizes the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to announce that during the two months he is supposed to be "resting" his services will be available for brief stretches to any theatre owner who desires the benefit of his "on-the-ground" advice. In other words, he is willing to spend this time in extending his policies and practices of showmanship to the rest of the country.

Career a Brilliant One

So February 1 is to mark another epoch of the career of the world's premier exhibitor, who is probably known to more people than any person connected with the industry, dating back to the days when he started the exhibition of motion pictures in a room back of a saloon in the mining town of Forest City, Pa., where he attracted the attention of the whole motion picture world by his methods. After that he became connected with the Keith and Proctor circuit and then with Henry Fair, installing motion pictures on the Orpheum circuit.

But it was at the Alhambra, Milwaukee, that he had an opportunity to launch the first of his big idea, with which he was brimful, years ahead of his time. It was there that he made the first big presentation in the history of the photoplay—"The Fall of Troy"—in two reels. Here he had an orchestra and a fountain on the stage. From there he went to the Lyric, Minneapolis—a house that was losing money—and undertook to buck the five- and ten-cent houses, which gave acts of vaudeville and five reels of pictures with ten- and twenty-cent admissions. But there it was that he had his opportunity in the presentation of Sarah Bernhardt's "Queen Elizabeth," placing an orchestra on the stage and putting the picture on with special scenic and lighting effects.

Called to New York

It was from Minneapolis that he heard the call to New York, and here he took charge of the Regent theatre, 110th street and Lenox avenue. Shortly after coming here he amazed New York with his presentation of "The Fall of Pompeii." It was at the Regent that a musical director was introduced, this one being Carl Edouarde. After this he took the Strand, when it was opened on April 19, 1914, and after leaving there made a tour of the country for the Mutual, speaking to exhibitors in the principal cities and spreading the gospel of better exhibition methods. Next he startled the industry by taking the Knickerbocker, a legitimate house, and turning it into pictures and giving exhibitions something in the order of those at the Rialto and Rivoli to-day.

Then came the Rialto. It was built especially for him, with his advanced ideas of music and lighting incorporated. This was opened April 21, 1916, and was held to be the final word in motion pictures, and so it remained until the Rivoli came along, built by the same company, and incorporating more and newer ideas of Mr. Rothapfel. It has just celebrated its first birthday, having opened January 8, 1918.

Mr. Rothapfel has been given the full credit for the "daylight projection" of motion pictures, which means the elimination of the dark theatre, the incorporation of real interpretative music into the motion picture presentation, the use of lighting effects, the introduction of overtures and other musical numbers and, practically, every step forward that has been taken in the presentation of pictures.

One of the greatest concentrations of Vitagraph enthusiasm that has ever been photographed. The convention covered the period from January 2 to January 4

Vitagraph Forces Hold Meeting

Convention Called by Albert E. Smith
Covers Three Days—All Branch
Managers Come—New Pictures Exhibited

THE first week of the new year witnessed a concentration of Vitagraph enthusiasm and energy in New York City that was unique, not only in Vitagraph history, but that probably will be more far-reaching in its results than any similar gathering the industry has known.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, called to New York all of the Branch Managers and Division Managers of his organization and held a three-day convention, at which the out-of-town representatives of the Vitagraph Company conferred with the executives of the Home Office and the officials of the Vitagraph Studios.

The convention began on Thursday morning, January 2, at the Hotel McAlpin, when John M. Quinn, General Manager of the Vitagraph Sales Organization called the first business meeting to order with a hundred per cent attendance from every branch of the big Vitagraph Organization. The entire day was spent in a business session and was followed by a banquet at the Hotel McAlpin on Thursday evening, which Mr. Smith gave to his sales force and his studio heads, thus bringing together both branches of his organization in a happy gathering.

On Friday, the Branch Managers visited the Vitagraph Studio in Brooklyn in a body and after a tour of the big plant, meeting the stars and directors, they went into a business session.

Returning to New York Friday evening, the entire gathering met in the projection room at the Vitagraph Home Office and about twenty reels of new Vitagraph product was screened for the first time.

All day Saturday was occupied by the final business meeting at the Hotel McAlpin and Saturday afternoon the Convention adjourned, the Branch Managers returning immediately to their exchange.

The immense importance to the Vitagraph Company of this Convention cannot be overestimated and the interchange of ideas is certain to result in a more intensive co-operative effort between the producing and the distributing ends than has heretofore been known in any organization in the film business.

Mr. Smith was enabled to get at first hand the reports of his Branch Managers from every center of the country and they were able to get from Mr. Smith, at first hand, his plans and projects for the coming year.

John M. Quinn, who recently became General Manager of the Vitagraph Sales Organization met each one of his lieutenants personally, told them what he counted on in the way of accomplishment from the Sales Organization and received their assurances that 1919 was going to be the biggest year in the history of the company.

All of Vitagraph's Branch Managers were present: Geo. R. Allison, C. W. Swain, F. E. Tarbell, J. R. Johnson, C. L. Kendall, J. H. Bayley, A. G. Edwards, J. M. Duncan, F. F. Nine, W. H. Hepburn, E. S. Holmes, J. A. Gagnier, Frank P. Bryan, Joseph Partridge, L. A. Getzler, J. S. Hebrew, F. W. Redfield, E. B. Quive, F. A. Wagner, D. E. Boswell, L. M. Cobbs, R. Romney, F. F. Hartich, W. F. Barrett, E. Wilson, and A. M. Wilbur, being the twenty-six Vitagraph Exchange Managers from the important centers in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Smith's studio staff attending the convention with him included Wilfrid North, production manager; R. A. Reader, business manager; Eugene Mullin of the Scenario Department and Frank Loomis, studio manager.

Mr. Quinn headed the Home Office delegation which included A. W. Goff, assistant general manager; E. Augar, division manager; T. W. Chatburn, division manager; Paul N. Lazarus, advertising and publicity director; J. Lawton Kendrick, sales promotion manager; A. I. Siegel, head of the purchasing department, and Richard Hildreth, chief auditor of the company.

In addition to all of the foregoing the

Storey Joins Screen Review Company

A. D. V. "Alphabet" Storey has resigned as publicity manager of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres to devote himself to the field of educational pictures, having been elected President of the Screen Review Company and also of Boys' Life Productions, with offices at 1493 Broadway.

The Screen Review Company will distribute the output of Boys' Life Productions, authorized producers of motion pictures for the Boy Scouts of America.

The first production will be a single reel news-educational weekly screen magazine, "Boys' Life Screen Review," deriving its title from "Boys' Life," the official monthly magazine of the Boy Scouts of America. This will be followed by Juvenile features, comedies and serials and also a companion release, "Girls' Life Screen Review," for regular theatres.

Brink Sells Exhibitor's Mutual Interest

H. A. Brink of Grand Rapids, Mich., has sold his interest in the Distributors' Mutual Film corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' corporation to L. A. Cornelius of the same city that he may give his entire time to other interests. Cornelius takes his place on the directorate, and President William J. Clark of Grand Rapids becomes general manager. Clark now is in New York where he has taken charge of the office. The financing of the organization is in charge of L. A. Geistert, formerly member of a Grand Rapids stock-brokers' firm, who also is in New York.

other guests at the banquet on Thursday night included Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Sergt. Arthur Guy Empey, James P. Hurd, George Randolph Chester, Harry T. Morey, Dwight Cleveland, J. B. French, M. Henry-Houry, George Balsdon, Jr., William Wright, Walter Bunyon, Tom Mills, Joseph Gleason, Don Bartlett, Tom Terriss, Graham Baker and Philip Lang.

Ohio Gets Aid In Its Sunday Fight

Desberg Stages Hotel Astor Meeting That Gives Hope—National Association Backward, But Producers Independently Offer Help

FRED DESBERG, Cleveland exhibitor and president of the Ohio Screen League, arrived in New York last Tuesday with a chip on his shoulder. Fred staged a meeting at the Hotel Astor, with the intention of finding out whether the producers and distributors were going to help Ohio's exhibitors in fighting the Sunday closing law in that State or leave the theatre owners to do their own battling.

The meeting was given a fair attendance—though there were a few notable by their absence. But results were achieved.

William A. Brady pledged the sum of $500 on condition that all other producers would contribute a pro rata share. Mr. Brady was followed by C. C. Pettijohn, who pledged $500 for the Affiliated Exhibitors, the Exhibitors' Mutual and Robertson Cole, which concerns Mr. Pettijohn represented at the meeting. E. J. Hudson, representing First National, assured the meeting that the First National would act in accordance with other producers. William L. Sherry's representative pledged a like sum as did Lee Ochs, representing the United Pictures Theatres, Inc. As we go to press it is evident the meeting has brought a measure of success even this early in the stage.

Association Not Interested

Mr. Desberg explained in his opening remarks that conditions in Ohio regarding the Sunday-closing movement were such as to demand the immediate attention of those opposing the closing of theatres on Sunday. He added that such information was more in the nature of an introduction than real "news," as the agitation had been prevalent for some time, the present meeting serving as a step forward toward the goal sought, not as the initial step. He explained that the movement which he represented was started last June and that nothing definite had been accomplished during the intervening months because, during all of that time, he had been endeavoring "not primarily to get the co-operation of the National Association, but to get its proper authority to come out in the middle of the road and give him a definite answer as to its (the Association) attitude—whether it would work in conjunction with or sit passively by and look on."

Following these explanatory remarks, in the way of an introduction, Mr. Desberg quoted from a letter, written during the month of December, by Adolph Zukor in answer to a letter written by Mr. Desberg asking for the Association's attitude in the matter of co-operation and financial assistance. He said, following the quotation from Mr. Zukor's letter, that he could construe the Association's answer in but one way, and that is that it (the Association) had no intentions of co-operating with the movement, or in his opinion, did he believe that there existed, in anything except name, such an organization as the National Association, for he explained, "the letter which I have just read implies that the Association does not know where it stands itself, for the writer explicitly states that he could not get either pro or con action from the Association which he represented."

While Mr. Desberg was explaining the letter referred to and following the remarks of John W. Weinig, who explained why the National Association should cooperate with the Ohio exhibitors in amending the Ohio law as it now reads in reference to the closing of amusements on Sunday, William A. Brady entered the meeting and defended the Association against what he considered selfishness on the part of the Ohioians in criticising the Association's procrastination and indifference in the matter.

Brady Gives Opinion

"Do you know," said Mr. Brady, addressing himself to Mr. Weinig, "that during the three years of the Association's existence the exhibitors of the country haven't contributed one nickel toward its support? Do you realize," he continued, "that if the Association were to take up this cause in conjunction with the exhibitors of Ohio, that every other State in the Union would seek the same help under the same conditions and that it would be impossible for the Association to stand the strain, financially. If the Sunday-closing question could be settled once and for all in every State in the Union, the Association could not contribute the amount asked."

"Mr. Ohio," he said, continued his address to the speaker preceding him, "you're just thinking of the State of Ohio—I'm walking in the middle of the road. Not until the exhibitors of the country get together and form a responsible, country-wide organization, will you be able to get results,—until then, you're wasting your time in this matter."

"I'm here, gentlemen, in the capacity of William A. Brady, with no other interests concerned. These are my own personal opinions. Personally, I am in favor of the movement and to show you that I am, I pledge $500 toward the cause, providing the other producers give a pro rata share. I produce probably two or three pictures a year, and I give $500. The fellow that produces 100 pictures a year should give five or ten thousand dollars—that's what I mean by my pro rata share."

One Hundred Towns Closed

Mr. Weinig explained during the course of the meeting that, at the present time, there are approximately one hundred cities and towns in Ohio with their theatres closed on Sunday. Citing a concrete example of the loss to producers because of this, Mr. Weinig assumed that the theatres in these cities and towns would take bookings to the amount of $25 per Sunday. At this rate, allowing for only one theatre in each city or town, the producers would lose $25,000 each Sunday during the year, or $130,000 a year. And in some of these places, he explained, there are as many as six theatres, so that the estimate, he concludes, is the minimum.

"According to these figures," Mr. Weinig continued, "the producers lose a vast amount of money but are not anywhere near as embarrassed as some of the exhibitors whose best days are Sundays. And I will state here," he continued, "that many of the owners will have to close their doors entirely unless the obstacle is removed—and that obstacle is the Ohio law affecting Sunday closing."

"We propose to have the law amended so as to read that the penalty attached to its violation shall affect only those theatres that open their doors in the forenoon. If this amendment can be obtained, it will practically eliminate all obstacles for there is no theatre that wants to open on Sunday morning. As the law now reads, it forbids the exhibition of pictures on Sunday."

"It should be borne in mind that a theatre which can open on Sunday pays more for rental during the week. It is only about eight years ago that Columbus was closed on Sunday for about ten weeks and you all remember that half of the theatres closed their doors entirely."

"By February we expect to have the entire State of Ohio thoroughly canvassed on this subject and by the end of the month we can show results. Having decided to my own satisfaction that the National Association does not mean to support us in this matter, we will approach the producers individually and I haven't a doubt that each one will see the matter as we in Ohio see it, and work with us accordingly. The Ohio exhibitors have decided that $12,000 is needed to make this fight. It may not—if not, the balance will be rebated to the donors. This is a producers' fight as well as the exhibitors, as I have shown."

Representative film men in attendance were: Charles Stewart, representing Octagon Film Company; Lee Ochs, United Picture Theatres, Inc.; C. C. Pettijohn, representing Exhibitors' Mutual, Affiliated Distributors and Robertson-Cole; E. W. Hammons, Educational Film Corporation; William A. Brady, representing his own producing company; Earl Hudson, representing First National; Hiller and Wilks, representing Maurice Tourneur and Lewis Innerarity, representing Pathe. All assured the Ohioians that they felt sure that the companies they represented would contribute their share.

My Version of the "Special"

By E. K. Lincoln

Star of S-L Pictures

"DURING the past year a class of pictures referred to as Specials has come into prominence and this producer and that producer have stated why they considered this or that picture a Special. Advertising campaigns have been carried on in a big way and the watchword of the campaign has been Special. The trade has been given the producers' definition of this class of pictures but the star of the production has been content to accept the Special without comment.

"Herbert Lubin and Arthur H. Sawyer, sponsors for the S-L Productions, of which Ralph Ince is director general, are now completing the first of a series of new special productions. I have been before the public, on the screen, for a number of years and have had the good fortune to star in many big photodramas. Prior to signing with the Sawyer-Lubin combination, to star in S-L Productions, I made a complete survey of the possibilities in the field of those producers making specials. During this time I had occasion to talk with the big producers of both the East and West and received various offers for my services. I went with Messrs Sawyer and Lubin because I saw in their plans the real 'Special.'

"I was offered excellent contracts by other producing concerns, program and independent, but Sawyer and Lubin offered the opportunity for something 'big.' First of all, these men had the co-operation of Ralph Ince, whom I regard as one of our best directors and a man responsible for some of the biggest feature films in the past few years.

"The first script that will be produced with myself as the star presents to me new channels through which I can see possibilities for a type of screen acting which I have had in mind for several years, but before this have never had the opportunity to put in effect.

"The first S. and L. production, now nearing completion is the best evidence that I can offer to substantiate the belief that I have held since my first talk with Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin and that is, that these gentlemen have my ideal of a Special picture. It has everything to deserve that title. The personnel of my supporting cast is one element that works to this end. The members have been chosen with respect to their ability as screen artists. Miss Clara Joel, seen in the 'Vamp' role of 'Business Before Pleasure' last season, will prove a veritable find, and Miss Grace Darling, another member of the feminine support, is known to every screen fan. Even the minor roles of my first production, are interpreted by artists in their line. And back of me and my support is a wonderful story, full of possibilities, presenting not alone one big thrill or scene which usually suffices to place a production in the class of Specials, but five big scenes, each one containing a thrill big enough to elicit more than usual comment.

"For special reasons, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin are withholding details as to this production but I can safely say that it's the biggest in which I have ever worked and one of which I am proud for having appeared as the star. I expect big things from the S and L combination and I predict one of the biggest series of Specials ever placed on the market, when the S-L Productions' product gets before the public in the near future."

Berst Assists Ohio Exhibitors

President United Pictures Theatres Supports Ohio Exhibitors in Efforts to Defeat Sunday
Closing Measure

WHEN J. A. BERST heard of the meeting at the Hotel Astor in New York City, and called by Messrs. Desberg and Winnig, representing the exhibitors of Ohio, he urged that they be given every support.

The fight is for a just and salutary law that will not close the Ohio theatres on Sunday. Mr. Berst stated that he considered the motion picture theatres a most vital force of public benefit to the state of Ohio.

"It has been shown on the clear evidence of cold facts, figures and statistics, that no other single lay agency has been of more influence or proved so powerful and effective an instrument in the bettering of Sunday conditions than has the unhampered operation of motion picture theatres, declared Mr. Berst.

"Vice, gambling, intoxication and their many undesirable accompaniments are shown statistically to have tremendously decreased since the introduction of the motion picture.

"Nor is this anything but logical. Take away a great, extensive form of popular recreation and innocent amusement and you automatically leave a big idle gap that must be filled, and WILL be filled somehow—if not innocently, then otherwise.

"That is my claim, that a law which secures for the people a temperate, orderly, instructive form of recreative amusement to which the public has grown habituated and which fills the oft quoted 'long felt want,' is a good law, a just law, and any law that seeks to do the opposite—namely close the picture theatres, is inimical to the best interests of the public.

"The passing of a law that will keep open for the public good the publicly desired means of diversion in the State of Ohio will prove a salutary example to other States, and I unhesitatingly and earnestly urge not only United's exhibitors to use every effort to support Messrs. Desberg and Winnig in their great fight for their fellows, but every exhibitor, producer and distributor, not merely in Ohio, but throughout the country, and that without delay."

Belasco's Screen Debut Through Universal Distribution

UNIVERSAL exchanges throughout the country are going to surprise their exhibitor customers, who in turn can astonish the general public with the announcement that David Belasco has again become an actor and temporarily laid aside his producing mantle to please the committee from the Stage Women's War Relief.

But this time Mr. Belasco comes before the public via the screen, and according to announcements from Universal offices this is the screen debut of the famous producer of legitimate attractions.

The Stage Women's Society selects Universal exchanges to do the distributing for their two-reel "feature" known as "A Star Over Night."

Prominent in the cast supporting Mr. Belasco are Edward Martindel, Bruce McRae, Hamilton Revelle, Elizabeth Risdon, Hilda Spong, Gladys Morris, Kathlee Nesbitt, and Mrs. Kate Rothschild.

Daniel Frohman has also pledged his support for the Stage Women's War Relief Committee, which contained the following well-known women: Rachel Crother, Louise Closser Hale, Mary H. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Shelley Hull, and Jessie Bonstelle.

The series as a whole consists of twelve complete two-reel photoplays. Some are comedies, some are dramas. Five, so far, have been completed and have been placed in the hands of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, to be made ready for distribution.

In one of the productions, tentatively known as "Fighting Mad," will be seen Maclyn Arbuckle, Percy Haswell, J. McGraw and Dana de Harte.

Manitoba Association Holds Annual Banquet

The annual banquet of the Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association was held at the St. Charles Cafe, Winnipeg, on Tuesday, December 31, with a large attendance of members and others. The association took advantage of the occasion to present President R. Kershaw with a handsome diamond-set gold lock suitably engraved. Every theatre in Winnipeg was represented at the dinner which was the most successful event of its kind held since the start of the war in 1914.

The Manitoba association enjoys practically 100 per cent membership throughout the City of Winnipeg.

Announcement was made that a special committee of the organization had been able to effect a satisfactory arrangement with the motion picture projection machine operators so that a threatened strike Christmas time had been averted. With only a few exceptions, all chief operators are now paid $35 per week and assistants are earning $25 per week.

President Kershaw has found splendid response throughout the whole Province to his move to extend the activities of the organization outside of Winnipeg. His aim is to have an exhibitors' protective league—in every sense of the word.

First National in Special Coast Session

Executive Board Called Into Extraordinary Session on West Coast—Rumors Are Rife Anent Several Important Propositions and Astonishing Announcements May Be Soon Forthcoming

PLANS pending for future activities of First National Exhibitors' Circuit have resulted in the holding of an extraordinary session of the Board of Directors, at the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, California.

Los Angeles was selected as the place of meeting in compliment to the Pacific Coast directors of the Circuit. At the last regular meeting in 1918 the board promised T. L. Tally, the Circuit's franchise holder in Los Angeles, that the next meeting of the directors, whether it was a regular or a special session, would be held in that city.

In addition to action on matters which resulted in the decision to hold a special meeting, the directors prepared their annual report in readiness for the meeting of First National stockholders, which will be held in March.

No Consolidation

It was admitted by several of the directors, before they started for the West Coast, that one purpose of the special meeting was to decide several important propositions which have been submitted to the Circuit, involving a considerable extension of its scope in distributing and exhibiting special feature attractions. The directors declined to say, in advance of the meeting, exactly what these propositions were.

The only definite denial that was made of rumors concerning the nature of the plans to be brought before the Board related to the report that First National would consider the alleged offers of a consolidation with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation or Paramount-Artcraft.

"A consolidation of exchanges would not properly be within the province of the Board of Directors to decide or discuss," said a member of the Board. "The First National exchanges are independently owned by the franchise holder. First National is not a distributing concern. It is an organization of prominent exhibitors, united for the purpose of buying productions for exhibition in their own theatres and for the creation of an open market booking policy for all exhibitors."

The corporate charter of the Circuit provides that its activities shall be restricted solely and exclusively to the exhibition and rental of motion pictures. This is pointed out as an answer to the reports that First National would enter the producing field as a supplement to the productions of Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Jack Pickford and Norma Talmadge.

"There have been repeated rumors," said one of the exhibitor officials of the Circuit, "to the effect that First National was producing pictures, or about to produce them. Our organization cannot produce pictures, nor can it have any interest in a producing company. When the Circuit was formed we took particular pains to have our charter so read that the organization would be confined entirely to its two functions of distribution and exhibition."

"And, in fact, distribution is incidental and is more properly the responsibility of

IN NEW QUARTERS

Los Angeles Office of Motion Picture News Changed

AMONG the New Year cards sent out by J. C. Jessen, Coast representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, was one announcing that his offices beginning with the first of the new year would "not be where they were before."

Effective January 1, 1919, the new offices of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in Los Angeles are located at 618 Wright and Callender Building. The removal was made from 429 South Figueroa street.

The new telephone number is Pico 780.

Begin the New Year right by remembering the address and telephone number—and if we can be of service to you in any way don't forget that SERVICE is our middle name.

the individual franchise holders, who are exchange owners by necessity rather than desire. We control and operate theatres and we wanted big feature productions under contract to our houses without the liability of losing them through unfair rental practices and without the necessity of 'indemnity contracts' in addition to the top prices for those we want."

The report which the Board of Directors prepared for the annual meeting of stockholders will record a progress within the last year which is said to have been without parallel in motion picture history for phenomenal growth and shortness of time.

During the twelve months just ended the Circuit is said to have developed from what was looked upon as an experiment and a speculation into one of the foremost concerns in the industry. The contract with Charlie Chaplin for eight comedies at what was characterized generally in the trade as "an extravagant and ridiculous price," was the first definite step forward which attracted universal attention.

Then came the contract with Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, who is producing the Anita Stewart special features for First National. The results to date from "Shoulder Arms," Chaplin's second Circuit release, and on "Virtuous Wives," first of the Anita Stewart specials, is declared to give added emphasis to the basic soundness of the independent booking policy.

With these facts as a sufficient assurance of the feasibility of its plans, First National then entered into an agreement with Mary Pickford for the exhibition of her pictures after the termination of her contract with Paramount Pictures Corporation. The next step was a similar contract with Jack Pickford, and the most recent activity was the arrangement which will give to exhibitor members of the Circuit exhibition rights to the Norma Talmadge productions when her present releasing arrangement expires.

In the absence of J. D. Williams and Harry Schwalbe, manager and secretary-treasurer, respectively, the general office of the Circuit is without any positive information of the exact nature of the things which necessitated the West Coast session, but it was admitted that the meeting was called suddenly and as the result of developments within the last few weeks of plans formulated by the executive officers for further solidifying production sources.

The directors who met in Los Angeles were Robert Lieber of Indianapolis, president of the Circuit; Harry Schwalbe, of the Stanley Eastbaum Corporation of Philadelphia, who is secretary-treasurer; J. B. Williams, Circuit manager; E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Tex.; Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago; J. G. VonHerberg, of Jensen & Von Herberg, Seattle, Portland and Butte; T. L. Tally of Los Angeles; Walter Hayes of the Mitchell M. Mark Theatres Corporation, New York.

Accompanying Mr. Williams on his trip from New York to Los Angeles were David P. Howells, whose export firm has the foreign rights to all First National attractions with the exception of the Chaplin comedies, and Ralph H. Clark, manager of the New York exchange of the Circuit.

Canada Expects to Lose Heatless Days

With delightful weather prevailing all during December and the prospect of continued fine weather in January, together with the fact that the possibility of a coal famine in Canada has been lessened considerably since the cessation of hostilities, intimation has been made by various officials in the Dominion that there is little or no likelihood of the enforcement of "heatless days" north of the international boundary line. Thus one worry has been lifted from the minds of Canadian exhibitors who had, however, completed arrangements several weeks ago to conserve the consumption of coal in various ways and to divide up available supplies of hard coal if called upon to do so by Government authorities.

Laemmle Places Returned Cripples

Universal Head Suggests That Returned Soldiers Be Put in Inspection Departments—Cooperation with Government Needed

EMPLOYMENT of crippled soldiers in film inspection departments is suggested by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Co., in a letter sent to all film producers and distributors recently.

Film companies have already stated that they will willingly restore all soldier workers to their former positions but Mr. Laemmle is of the opinion that the industry can go a step further by offering employment to the men who received leg wounds necessitating amputation, upon their discharge from service.

A bureau to provide vocational training for armless and legless soldiers and to secure for them employment that will not tax their strength is being considered by Government officials at Washington at the present time but so far no definite plans have been announced. The Universal's offer to provide positions for crippled soldiers was forwarded to the surgeon general of the Army January 6 and President Laemmle is of the opinion that if other distributors adopt his ideas that the film industry can lend valuable assistance to Government officials who have found difficulty in solving the soldier employment problem.

"The film industry can provide positions for hundreds of legless soldiers," Mr.

Laemmle explained, "It is not enough that we should just provide our returning soldier workers with their old positions.

"Universal has been of great assistance to the Government during the war and there is greater need for real, direct co-operation with the Government now than before," the executive added, "therefore I hope that other producing and distributing organizations will join us in giving employment to these plucky heroes who have sacrificed so much for the cause of democracy."

Universal film exchange managers all over the country have been asked to send to Mr. Laemmle at once reports on the work of their inspection departments so that an idea of just how many crippled soldiers could be employed by the company might be obtained.

Mr. Laemmle has pointed out that work of film inspecting does not necessitate the use of the limbs in any way, that it will not tax the strength of the employee and will pay him a salary in excess of that in other lines of work.

An official of the governmental employment service, with casualty figures as his guide, has stated that in all probability the number of crippled soldiers will reach several thousand, thus it can be seen that if the film industry can provide employment for several hundred of these men that the problem of providing work for these men, will be partially solved, lessening the Government's burden considerably.

Governor Scores Lax Censoring

Pennsylvania Executive Declares Market Should Be Closed to Certain Class—Commends Films as Educative Medium

THE prominence of the motion picture in the State of Pennsylvania was brought to the front last week in the annual message of the retiring governor of Pennsylvania, Martin G. Brumbaugh, at the opening session of the Legislature in Harrisburg, January 7.

In his message, the retiring governor declared that the present Board of Censors of Motion Pictures has "effectively prevented nauseous and immoral scenes," yet, nevertheless, the Governor believes the Act of May 15, 1915, under which the board operates, should be made more exacting. He declares that the small minority of "conscienceless and greedy immorals" should by law be denied "the privilege to market their unclean wares."

The Governor's entire reference to motion picture censors is as follows:

"MOVING PICTURE CENSORS"

"The Act of May 15, 1915, placed the censorship of all moving picture exhibits under careful and effective supervision. To the credit of the courts and the conscience of our people every attempt to display nauseous and immoral scenes has been stoutly resisted and effectively prevented. The judgment of the present Board of Censors has been sustained. Our standards are more protective of morals than those of the National law. The majority of the producers of these films have been careful and considerate. Some, however, have with blatant insistence endeavored to make money by displaying indecent and unfit scenes. They have been prevented. The law should not be made less but more exacting and some conscienceless and greedy immorals should be by law denied the privilege to market their unclean ware. The moving picture film is a great educator of the masses. These places are of measureless value to our people if always they give exhibitions that are clean and wholesome. If a scene isn't fit to be displayed in a home it is not fit to be displayed in public.

"The attempt to evade by law the fire prevention laws of this Commonwealth on the part of owners of some moving picture houses was stoutly resisted and met prompt executive disapproval."

The Governor's contention that the display of immoral scenes have been prevented by the present Pennsylvania board of censors does not coincide with the findings of the Harrisburg Ministerial Association which recently conducted an exhaustive examination of several hundred film shows and decided that fully 75 per cent of the plays were "bad," blaming this alleged condition in part upon what Governor Brumbaugh seems to regard as an entirely effective plan of censorship.

Griffith Names His New Production

David Wark Griffith has made his first announcement concerning the picture on which he has been devoting considerable time since he returned from France more than a year ago. This has been given the final title of "The Fall of Babylon," and was given its international premier at Clune's Auditorium on the evening of January 13, following a four-weeks run of Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life."

The material for this picture was taken at the same time Mr. Griffith filmed the Babylonian epoch of "Intolerance," and carries the famous story which is partially shown in the previous Griffith release. This subject brings to a very pleasant culmination the romance of the mountain girl and the shepherd boy which was terminated in "Intolerance" by the death of the girl who died from an arrow wound. This role, it will be remembered, introduced Constance Talmadge in her first big part for the screen.

This film contains an altogether different story from the one which was made a part of "Intolerance," and will contain altogether different scenes throughout.

Lieutenant Hoffman Returns from France

Lieut. Dore Hoffman, who was assistant to Albert E. Smith at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn before he joined the army in the summer of 1917 and went "across," is back in the United States, nursing an injury received in the fighting.

Lieut. Hoffman returned aboard the transport Northern Pacific, which stranded off Fire Island, and from which the returning soldiers were rescued in rough weather.

To the newspapers Lieut. Hoffman told an interesting story of his European stay, and also the stranding of the troopship.

Lieut. Hoffman felt sufficiently strong to attempt a visit to the Vitagraph studio one day last week, and there he was heartily welcomed by Albert E. Smith and many other friends.

Rothapfel Leaves Rialto and Rivoli

It was only ten days ago that he returned from another trip across the country during which he addressed exhibitors in many leading cities. During the time that America was at war he rendered important service to the Government, being at one time a lieutenant in the U. S. Marines and making pictures for that corps as well as presenting them in his theatres. He was selected by the Division of Films to make the first presentations of "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags."

It is for his musical presentations that he is probably the best known, and to this he gave his earnest and personal attention. Although he cannot read music he has often directed the orchestras at the two houses and has arranged the complete scores for the biggest of pictures. He has skill, too, as a producer of pictures.

Denver Draws Schmall's Spotlight

Robertson-Cole Representative Insists That Several Cities Are Burdened by Deplorable Distribution Conditions—Exhibitors Turn Down Fair Rental Prices

EXISTING conditions in several leading cities are exceedingly deplorable, at least from the distributors' viewpoint, according to Isaac Schmall, special representative of the Robertson-Cole Company of 1600 Broadway, New York, whose product is being distributed through the Exhibitors-Mutual, and who left Denver for Omaha Friday following a visit of several days with Manager Cassidy of the Denver exchange. These deplorable conditions, which he declares are especially flagrant in Denver, can and should be met by a remedy which he has outlined.

Mr. Schmall declares that a fair rental price for pictures can not be obtained from the first run houses of Denver, owing to what he insists is a combination to keep the rentals down to practically nothing.

Exhibitors Are United

"After a careful survey of the situation in Denver," said Mr. Schmall, "I have found deplorable conditions in Denver—from the distributor's point of view. I have found conditions to be such that several of the exhibitors have united for the purpose of dictating the price of pictures through greedy methods and unfair competition.

"The exhibitors I refer to practically control all of the first-class motion picture theatres in Denver. During the course of my interview with them, first-class productions and superfeatures were offered to them at a fair rental price—a price that would enable them to make money. They came back with a counter proposition, offering a ridiculous figure for the purchase of those pictures and calmly stated that if the price was not agreeable or acceptable we could not get a booking at any first-class house. In addition to that, if the pictures were booked with them for the theatres which they control, it must be with the understanding that the booking was exclusive for their houses and without a second run.

"The very thought of such a proposition is outrageous, to say the least.

"Such a condition as this can only be remedied by the distributing and producing companies. But I have found that the distributing and producing companies, through their various exchange branches, at each other's throats, so to speak, thus permitting the condition of affairs that I have above outlined.

ix Cities Are Named

"During my survey of various important cities, beginning with Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and Oklahoma City, I have invariably found almost similar conditions; not so pronounced, however, as in Denver, owing to the few first-class theatres here.

"As a solution of the difficulties of the situation which I have indicated as existing in Denver and other large cities, I believe that all distributors and producers must get together as a unit behind the various film boards of trade in all of the leading centres of population. These local boards, to be reorganized on broader lines, could meet and overcome every obstacle that stands in the way of the prices for pictures to the exhibitor.

"I would suggest that every such board of trade should have a standing committee whose duty would be to pass upon all pictures and fix a first-run maximum and minimum price to the local exhibitor. The manager of any local exchange could then, when occasion demanded, notify all exhibitors and managers of other exchanges that he would give a trade screening of such picture at a certain time and place, and that the committee would be present to determine its maximum and minimum selling price. A national board of trade to promote the interests of these local boards and for purposes of appeal might also be advisable.

"I do not mean to infer that the producer companies and the distributing companies should take advantage of the exhibitors in fixing a maximum or minimum upon the price of a picture, because after all most of us are desirous of working harmoniously with the exhibitors, in order that they as well as the distributors and producing companies may derive a fair revenue from their respective productions.

"Until the conditions which I have outlined are remedied, unscrupulous exhibitors will continue these methods to dictate the prices of pictures, and they will have the distributors as well as the producers at their mercy."

Universal Follows New Coast Policy

The Universal Company has started the new year by the adoption of a new policy at the studios of Universal City, which will cause considerable decrease in the number of subjects produced there. At the present time sufficient films have been completed to meet the requirements of Universal releases up until in May or the early part of June, and this, combined with the change of releases to one a week instead of more, reduced the amount of production work necessary. The Super Productions made by the Universal Company will no doubt be released under the Jewel trade mark, while all others will go on the regular program. The new policy provides that several of the present companies now working will continue, but it will reduce the number of producing units slightly.

Besides the Dorothy Phillips, Priscilla Dean, Monroe Salisbury, Ruth Clifford and Mary MacLaren units, there will be two companies making two-reel subjects under the direction of Jack Dillon and Harry Harvey, and three-serial companies headed by Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and James J. Corbett, who arrived at the studios this week. The Lyons & Moran Company, making Star comedies, will continue with their one new single-reel comedy each week.

Quirk Reel Makes Debut on Broadway

The first number of James R. Quirk's Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement was pre-released by the New York Rialto week of January 12, and three days later was available for immediate showing throughout the country from the sixteen branch exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation. Vice-President Hammons of the Educational will have twenty prints in work immediately, and the number of these will be increased in accordance with the many hundreds of exhibitors' requests that have poured into the Photoplay Magazine office and the office of the Educational.

"The Stars as They Are," as the series is alternatively named, admits the motion picture spectator into the innermost secrets of studio production, together with intimate views of the home life of public favorites. In the first number are Douglas Fairbanks, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Mary Miles Minter, Montagu Love, Mary Charleson, John Emerson, James Kirkwood, Anita Loos and others. The spectator is transported to the beautiful mise-en-scène of a California studio, the workings are explained, and the secret of making a "double exposure" is laid bare. The finale of this novel one-reeler satirizes in animated cartoon the foibles of the so-called "movie pest."

Stage Claims David Powell's Services

Followers of David Powell's career on the screen will be interested to know that he has returned to the stage for a period, playing opposite Emily Stevens in Arthur Hopkins' production, "The Gentile Wife." Mr. Powell has met with marked success in his various screen appearances, having played leads to many of the stars of the day. His last film appearance was with Alice Brady in Select's "Her Great Chance." He has also been seen with Elsie Ferguson and Catherine Calvert among others.

Mr. Powell has no intention of deserting the screen but the offer made him by Mr. Hopkins was one of a particularly attractive nature.

Pittsburgh Exchange Blows Up

Reports Place Dead at Twenty, with Over a Score Others Injured—
Exhibitors Mutual Suffers
Heaviest Loss

AN explosion, followed by fire, in the film exchange building at 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., late in the evening of January 7, resulted in twenty deaths and scores of injuries, according to reports from that city on January 8. Between fifteen and twenty persons, mostly women and girls, were killed, it is estimated. Ten of the bodies had been recovered January 8, with firemen still at work in the debris. Many other bodies were reported under the remains of the wrecked structure.

Part of the building was occupied by the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, and the loss to that organization is said to be exceptionally high. Business has not been suspended, however, and a new exchange has been put into operation at 121 Fourth avenue.

No cause for the explosion has been advanced. Persons who were nearby when the blast shook the district say that prior to the upheaval a dense cloud of black smoke poured from the lower floor.

Less than six hours after the Pittsburgh exchange of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation on the third floor of the building had been wiped out a new exchange was in operation at 121 Fourth avenue.

With every employe of the exchange except the branch manager in the hospital, every foot of film in the vaults burned up and the records of the branch destroyed, a new office was outfitted in the early evening and new film began pouring in from Buffalo and Philadelphia. At 11 o'clock the morning of the fire a lease had been signed for new Pittsburgh quarters, so that when the exchange was wiped out new offices, fully equipped with vaults, were available immediately. Posters and other advertising accessories were on their way to Pittsburgh with the film and at 11 o'clock Tuesday evening four hundred reels of film with accessories were in the new exchange. A new salesman had been hired during the day and he was dispatched to the new exchange to help William H. Rippard, the branch manager, reorganize for business and at midnight Joe L. Merrick, the new assistant sales manager of Exhibitors' Mutual, arrived from New York to take charge of the situation.

Of the employes of the exchange three were seriously injured: Charles L. Casanave, salesman, leg broken and back seriously injured; Miss Clara Berger, poster clerk, leg broken; Miss Retta A. Berger, booker, unconscious from internal injuries.

The less seriously injured are: Emily Ley, Ruth M. Meiers, Edward Petri, Marie Schmidt, Harry S. Spang, Russell Taylor, A. Balavage, Fred Lacey, Howard Burket.

Two members of the exchange force were reported missing early in the evening but they were located later in a hospital by Manager Rippard. It was feared that they had been burned to death.

Immediately upon the report of the fire over the long distance telephone action was taken to reestablish the exchange that it might be in operation Wednesday morning. Buffalo and Philadelphia were called upon to furnish prints to supply the bookings scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday. With the booker unconscious and the records of the booking department destroyed it was impossible to locate a single print of film in the Pittsburgh territory the night of the fire but before morning executive office records had supplied the information, and the schedule of bookings for the next few days prepared. "It is impossible to estimate accurately our loss in the Pittsburgh fire," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Exhibitors' Mutual, "until our records are completely checked."

Fairbanks Sells War Savings Stamps

Douglas Fairbanks has been placed in charge of a Flying Squadron of five hundred of the best commercial salesmen in Los Angeles to put some "ginger" into their limit pledge campaign for War Savings Stamps.

Imbued with the internationally famous Fairbanks' "pep" these W. S. S. salesmen recruited from the star talent of Southern California's commercial circles, are going out after enough $1,000 limit pledges to make up the enormous deficit which Los Angeles is facing in her War Savings Stamps quota.

Roosevelt in Screen Telegram Reel

The most recent pictures of Col. Theodore Roosevelt who succumbed at his Oyster Bay home January 6 are said to be shown in the Screen Telegram, No. 2, which is released January 9. In addition the reel contains views of President Wilson's visit to the former battlefield in France and his review of American troops, also scenes showing the arrival of the Cruiser North Carolina with marines who were wounded at Chateau Thierry, pictures of the revolution in Austria and a reproduction of the new Liberty button which will be given to each soldier who did his bit "Over There."

McClure Respects Roosevelt's Memory

The New York offices of McClure Pictures closed and suspended all business on Wednesday, January 8. This was the result of an order issued by Frederick L. Collins, president of the company, who took this means of expressing the company's respect for the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt. The former President's life was made the basis of a photoplay to be distributed through the McClure company. This was completed only a short time before his death.

William H. Parsons Comes East on Business

William H. ("Smiling Bill") Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America and star in and creator of Capitol Comedies, has evidently entered the lists against Samuel Goldwyn for the sustained long-distance commutation record between New York and the Pacific Coast. Bill is back in the East on business, and by the journey has added another lap to his total of round-trips against the mark set years ago, when Mr. Goldwyn, then Samuel Goldfish, flitted from coast to coast with the unvaried monotony of the man who makes the 8.25 every morning and the 5.15 every night. This is Mr. Parsons' third trip to the metropolis in less than as many months.

Business brings "Smiling Bill" here, of course. And if he closes a deal he has under consideration a little cross-continent jaunt of 3,000 miles will become as nothing. Mr. Parsons proposes to take his comedy company on a picture-making tour of the world, visiting every country that makes more than a spot on the map and making a Capitol Comedy in each.

Ottawa Fans Ask for Repeat Pictures

Finding that a number of local moving picture enthusiasts desired to see several special pictures after they had been presented, the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, decided to conduct a "Repeat Week" during the week of January 20. Three productions have been rebooked for the occasion, including "My Four Years in Germany," "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" and "Masks and Faces." The latter is an English picture, with an all-star cast. Each of the three releases were booked for two days of the week.

National Association Tells What It Did During Year

Feels Positive That Its Efforts Have Made It Vital Part of Picture Industry

ACCORDING to a report issued this week by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the work accomplished by that body during the year just past has been of such a nature as to firmly establish it as a necessary and vital part of the great and growing industry.

The announcement said, in part: "As a result of conditions that have arisen during the course of the year threatening the very life of the motion picture business and placing an onerous burden on every company connected with it, the National Association has acted as the centre around which all of the activities of the industry have been focussed, and have been the means of solidifying and stabilizing the business to such an extent that it is now enabled to present a united front to any form of disaster or oppression that may arise.

"Early in the year a membership campaign was inaugurated and, as a result of continuous effort covering the entire year, many new members were added to the association. One of the important accomplishments of the association during the year, and one that not only saved the industry thousands of dollars, but which called forth the enthusiastic praise of the War Industries Board, was the adoption, as a result of the activities of the association of the revised regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to the shipment of films in interstate commerce. The new regulations provided for the elimination of the tin containers, thus bringing about an enormous saving of money to the industry and conservation of metal to the Government. The association was also instrumental in having the time when the new shipping cases were to come into use postponed for six months on account of the scarcity of metal and the inability of the exchanges to procure the new cases.

"Early in the year it was decided that two expositions were to be held, one in New York in February and the second in Boston in July. Owing to the necessity for fuel conservation the February exposition was postponed and later it was found necessary to also postpone the Boston show. It was then decided to hold one exposition in New York in October, in order to provide a means for wiping out the obligations that had been incurred by the postponement at the last minute of the other two expositions.

"In the spring of the year a strenuous attempt was made to pass a local option Sunday opening bill through the New York Legislature. After much difficult work the measure passed the Assembly, and in the Senate was referred to the Codes Committee, a majority of whose members were in favor of it. Likewise it was ascertained that if it could be brought on the floor of the Senate it was sure of passage. Governor Whitman, however, was instrumental in keeping the bill buried in a committee of the whole, and the legislature adjourned without it being acted upon by the upper body. This campaign will be continued this year.

"In September, at a convention of the American Exhibitors' Association, President Brady was instrumental in amalgamating the two national exhibitor organizations into one body, to be known as the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Exhibitors' Branch. This action was subject to the approval of the board of directors of the association, as the exhibitors demanded fifty per cent. representation on the Board of Directors and all committees.

"Later when this question was brought before the Board it was decided that the matter be placed before a meeting of the entire Association to be called for that purpose. At this meeting a quorum failed to appear and Peter J. Schaefer announced that under the conditions the exhibitors would withdraw from the Association. Mr. Brady also announced that he would present his resignation as president forthwith to the executive committee.

"During the year there has been considerable activity seeking to curtail and eliminate the prevalency of film thefts. Several conferences were held with District Attorney Swann of New York City and a committee of the Association, with Walter W. Irwin as chairman and has accomplished much meritorious work along these lines. Several indictments have been obtained by the Grand Jury and the offenders are now out on bail awaiting trial.

"At election time a campaign was instituted to obtain the sentiments of the candidates of both parties for the U. S. Senate and House of Representatives. The response to this campaign was exceedingly gratifying and served to indicate the importance with which the motion picture is looked upon by the national legislators.

"One of the most practical and conclusive demonstrations of the extreme value of the National Association to the industry occurred in October when the entire country was swept by the epidemic of Spanish Influenza. Because of the Association ninety-five per cent. of the distributors and producers were enabled to get together for the purpose of taking concerted action for the benefit of the entire industry. At a time when disaster was staring them in the face, owing to the fact that over eighty per cent. of the theatres of the country were closed, they were enabled, through the Association organization, to act as a single body and take those precautionary measures which would equalize the burden.

"An active part was taken by a committee of the Association in the War Emergency and Reconstruction Conference of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, held at Atlantic City early in December. Resolutions were introduced condemning the censorship of motion pictures and likewise in opposition to the continued life of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information and the active competition of the Government in the motion picture business now that the armistice has been signed.

"Early in the year a campaign was instituted at the behest of Herbert C. Hoover for the conservation of food. A series of slides was prepared containing all of the requests of the Food Administration for wheatless and meatless days and these slides were thoroughly distributed throughout the United States. Mr. Hoover was the first high administrative official of the Washington Government to realize the value of the motion picture screen for propaganda purposes.

"The next official to request the assistance of the industry through the Association was Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo, who required assistance in the Second Liberty Loan and following that the War Savings Stamp Campaign. In both instances slides were prepared and distributed throughout the theatres of the country.

"At about this time numerous complaints were being received relative to the quality and character of the pictures that were being supplied to the cantonments and battleships by an outside bureau which had an exclusive contract for this work. Under the direction of P. A. Powers a committee of the Association worked out a minimum schedule of prices, barely sufficient to cover the cost of handling, whereby all of the latest pictures were made available for showings in the cantonments and battleships.

"In order that the industry might be thoroughly organized for the war work which the Government was continuously calling upon it to perform, Wm. A. Brady, as president of the Association, and as the direct representative of President Wilson, appointed a National War Council consisting of prominent exhibitors in every State in the Union. The work performed by these gentlemen has brought forth constant praise from the Government officials.

"Following the Third Liberty Loan, an intensive campaign was entered into for the benefit of the Red Cross. Under the leadership of Wm. Fox, Chairman of the Allied Theatrical Motion Picture and Entertainments Committee, the co-operation of the National Association was confined to the soliciting of subscriptions from the employees in the motion picture business. Over $80,000 was collected, the largest total of any industrial team of any industry in the United States.

"During the summer extensive conferences were entered into with representatives of the War Trade Board, resulting in the adoption of regulations governing the exportation of motion pictures to foreign countries. Credit is due to Paul H. Cromelin for the efficacious manner in which he labored as chairman of the Association committee and for the results accomplished."

Additional accomplishments were also noted by the association.

Ad Smoke Light in Pittsburgh One Newspaper Well Represented in Advertising, But It Has a Great Opportunity to Go Much Further

THERE'S lots of smoke in Pittsburgh, but mighty little of it comes from the motion picture advertising or from the co-operation of the newspapers. For a city of more than a half million it is far from what could be desired. But there is one thing in Pittsburgh, and that is opportunity for a newspaper that wants to try to get out and develop the motion picture advertising and at the same time to give the public the news of the photoplay to cut a mighty wide swath from now on.

One paper stands out as trying to do things in the way of advertising, but it is not giving the right sort of co-operation, and most of the Pittsburgh exhibitors need stirring up on the displays that they are using. With the certain exception of one house and the possible exception of two others, there seems to be no effort put forward for GOOD advertising.

But in order to view the situation there fairly one must understand that Pittsburgh is a city that some years ago took in all the possible territory that it could annex. There are more than the ordinary neighborhoods within the municipal limits. For instance, the section that is known as East Liberty corresponds to what would be Harlem in New York, and there are five theatres that are first run and which compete in bookings with the downtown houses.

There are about one hundred and twenty-five theatres in the city proper. There are eleven downtown houses and the rest are neighborhood. We have a peculiar situation with the Grand Opera House, a downtown theatre, which runs pictures at the same time as the Liberty in East Liberty. The next downtown house, Loew's Lyceum, combination picture and vaudeville, also runs films simultaneously with East Liberty houses.

Another downtown theatre is the Olympic which has a first run but will not use pictures simultaneously with East Liberty, and which is reported to have changed its prices and policies several times during the past year. The other downtown houses with first run are the Columbia which runs pictures for either a week or makes two changes within that time and the Minerva which varies from changing three times weekly to a week's run. The Cameraphone changes daily running repeats on the other theatres.

Grand Opera House seats 2,500, the Lyceum 3,500, the Olympic 1,500 and the rest of the downtown theatres average about 600. In East Liberty the Liberty seats 1,500 the Regent 1,000, the Cameraphone 1,000 and the Alhambra 600. Syndicate ownership is not great in Pittsburgh, being practically confined to Rowland and Clark, who own the Liberty, Regent, Strand, Plaza, Belmar, Arsenal and Rowland and to the Harry Davis interests with the Grand and several other theatres.

Now before we go any further let's take a look at the newspapers. Here they are together with the circulation as given by the Lord and Thomas newspaper directory:

Chronicle, Afternoon (88,374).

Despatch, Morning (59,296) and Sunday (59,652).

Gazette-Times, Morning (79,853) and Sunday (85,881).

Leader, Afternoon (78,365) and Sunday (78,365).

Post, Morning Daily (65,243) and Sunday (96,445).

Press, Afternoon (116,015) and Sunday (125,004).

Sun, Afternoon (65,795).

It will be seen that there are five papers with Sunday editions, only two less than New York City. This is a bad thing for the exhibitors. There are too many theatres to expect most of the exhibitors to use all of the media. The one thing that most of them can do is to pick out one paper and devote the money they have to spend to this and try to get that paper to afford the utmost cooperation.

The one paper that is making a real showing in carrying motion picture advertising is the Press, for it carries the displays during the week of forty-one houses and shows a desire to give cooperation. As it has the largest circulation of any of the papers it seems to have the best opportunity, though it still has quite a ways to go in getting out a real Sunday department.

Let us look them over. The Leader devotes its Sunday department practically to reading notices and the fact that this paper is giving something away on account of advertising is emphasized by setting this matter in solid nonpareil—a very small type and mighty hard to read. There is a four-column layout on the first run attractions which is mighty badly printed in the copies of the paper that we have looked over. On a second page there is additional matter in better type and about a third of a column of "Food for Film Fans"—good stuff for what there is of it.

Easily the most attractive advertisement that either it or any of the other Pittsburgh papers carries is that of the Liberty. We do not like the method of advertising the attractions for the first half of the week and the last half equally, but this may be excused by the fact that the Liberty might be called a neighborhood theatre and because for the first half of the week it plays the same attraction; generally, as the Grand, a downtown house. It generally uses the largest space in the Sunday papers, the ones illustrated this week being almost seven inches double column. The Grand advertises its full bill and gets a mighty crowded effect. We think that the same amount of lettering in larger space would add more to the display. Note how the display of the Liberty next door stands out in contrast.

Loew's has the biggest space this week with a very crude drawing that will be passed up by most readers and fails to bring out prominently the name of the theatre or the title of the production. Olympic uses 2 inches and the Minerva 2½, both advertising bills for a week's run while the Columbia uses 2 inches double on a twice a week change, the Regent 3 on a triple change and the Lyric 1 inch triple on a three time change.

By the way, there are no Sunday showings in Pittsburgh.

Turning to the Sunday Gazette-Times we find practically the same advertising and here a six-column layout with the reading notices again set in the small type. There are a few real news items on the page and a few items under the heading of "Reelograms."

During the week the Gazette-Times carries a 2¼ double column announcement of the seven Rowland and Clark theatres, 1 inch double column for the Grand and two inches single for the Olympic.

Again in the Sunday Dispatch we find the same advertising with the layout here arranged across three columns but deep. It is the only Pittsburgh paper in which we find the motion picture editor signing his name. Here the notices are in more readable type but we fail to find any real news of the photoplay.

During the week it carries the same advertising as the Gazette-Times with the addition of half inches, single, from the Columbia, Minerva and Downtown Cameraphone.

The Post certainly lets one of its advertisers "get away with murder" by allowing the display of the Lyceum to occupy a position right next to the layout, so indicating that this is news matter. The reading notices here are again in small type and there is not one news item on the page. Eight houses advertise here. During the week sixteen theatres are represented.

Now we come to the Press which follows what seems to be the rule with the Pittsburgh dailies in the type that it uses for the reading notices and with a layout that stands out poorly in the copies that we have received. Twelve theatres are repre-

Harry Pomeroy, manager of the Holman Theatre, Montreal, Canada, believes in carrying one general effect through his lobby displays. For instance, in "Winner Takes All" he has used the Scotch idea with the central figure a Highlander and all the draperies in plaids. Note that with "A Society Sensation" the idea of the stripes or ribbon effects is carried through down to the one sheets in front of the house sented in the advertising.

But it is during the week that the Press gets away with a real motion picture directory, for then it carries the announcements of the forty-one theatres. And during the week it devotes some cooperation to the motion picture by giving a few inches to "Gossip of the Movie Fans," interesting matter, of which there should be more in the Sunday issue.

The Chronicle-Telegraph has thirteen theatres represented and the Sun comes along with eighteen.

Now just one observation right here. Pittsburgh is a heavy advertising town. Most of the Sunday issues are very thick and they carry a large amount of revenue-producing displays. It is a great temptation in such a case for the newspapers to look upon the comparatively small amount of space used by the motion picture houses as amounting to little, for they figure that where a department store uses a page or two and asks for nothing there is no reason why they should devote a lot of free space to a group of advertisers who do not use a total of a page.

Pittsburgh has a large industrial population, a population that is highly interested in the motion picture. A great share of its people are those who earn their living by manual labor—for we are leaving the well-known Pittsburgh millionaire of which Broadway chorus girls hear so much out of the calculation—and they are interested largely in the popular sort of entertainment which is afforded by the photoplay. There should be a whole lot greater interest given to the newspaper that would conduct a real photoplay department daily and Sunday. The Press has made a real start with the advantage of its larger circulation but it has not gone far enough. In a less degree than the other papers of the city it indicates an attitude to the motion picture of something that has to be covered—in some sort of a way.

We would advise the motion picture owners of Pittsburgh to attempt to center their efforts on this paper, and to get a realization that just as much earnest attention paid to the motion picture as to the sporting page will be appreciated by the public. And how much effort the Press has given to lining up all of the advertisers we do not know, but it has evidently been earnest in this for it makes a mighty good showing.

The average exhibitor cannot afford to use all of the Pittsburgh papers and therefore he will have to center on the best of them and in the average manufacturing town the afternoon paper is the best medium.

Now if the Pittsburgh exhibitors as a body would go to the Press and express their appreciation of what the paper is doing so far and then ask it to do a little more we believe that it would find the sheet willing to cooperate. By giving even short space to the motion picture during the week, it shows a realization of the interest.

What the Press ought to do is this:

Continue to run an attractive layout in the Sunday issues with reading notices for the first run, advertising theatres, but set these in type that will not hurt the eye and give each of them a news heading that will take off the curse of saying: "Here's something that we are handing out because we have to do it. And then devote three or four columns each Sunday to real news of the photoplay. Carry say a couple of news stories with top heads and then a couple of columns of gossip of the players illustrated with half column cuts.

And then on Tuesdays it should devote a couple of columns to reviews of the first run pictures. The fact that several theatres use the same pictures would make this much easier. And the immense number of neighborhood theatres would make this all the more interesting to the patrons of all of those theatres through the greater city.

We believe that if this was done the motion picture directory that the Press carries would show a considerable increase. We know that the larger houses would be able to increase their space, as they should do in the paper that is supporting them the best.

We fear that the main thing that is the matter with Pittsburgh all around is ROUTINE. Some of the theatres appear to think that once they have prepared a display they would give it to all the newspapers. And the newspapers conclude that in exchange they owe it their duty to give a certain amount of space—almost any old thing to the attractions. And it is all carried out in pure ROUTINE form.

Pittsburgh newspapers need PEP in their motion picture departments. When there is more of it there will be a greater response from the theatres. For as a matter of fact almost everything in connection with newspapers and the photoplay appears to be done half-heartedly in the smoky city.

Toronto Newspaper Plans Contest for Would-Be Players

The Toronto Daily News, which prints the biggest photoplay calendar of any newspaper on the continent and which ranks with the liveliest of motion picture departments, has just started a contest in connection with Famous Players-Lasky through which it offers young men and women a chance for try-outs at the Los Angeles studios of the company at a salary of $35 a week. In making the announcement the paper calls attention to the fact that Mary Pickford was a Toronto girl and that she started in motion pictures at $5 a day.

Hundred Per Cent Shown "Out In the Woods"

"OUT in the woods" of Arkansas there is a theatre that would do credit to many of the bigger cities of the country. It is a theatre that charges top prices for motion pictures and plays to packed houses. It is a theatre that uses page advertisements, though there is no newspaper published in the village where it is located. You cannot find the name of the town on any of the available maps of the State, yet it often plays first-run on pictures for that whole section.

It seems impossible that such should be a true statement of facts, but it is. The name of the theatre is the Bauxite, it is located in Bauxite and is the property of the company that owns the big Bauxite mines midway between Little Rock and Hot Springs.

Gen. J. R. Gibbons runs his property from the point of view of the welfare of his employees as well as merely making money. Through the co-operative plan followed house rent is very low, electricity costs practically nothing and every family gets medical services and treatment in a splendid hospital at a total cost of $1 a month. From these facts it would seem that the well-known H. C. L. is unknown in Bauxite.

General Gibbons realized that to keep the employees satisfied and to prevent them from going away to the cities he had to give them amusement, and so he started in to build the very best of motion picture houses. As we have said, it's "right out in the woods," but it is at the same time the amusement centre of that section. Although it cost $26,000, it has been a paying proposition since the day of its opening, seats 900 and has a stage on which any of the legitimate road attractions may be played.

Jack Parsons, who has been known for years in the theatrical business, is the manager of this novel theatre, found that the profit from running the house for three days a week was as great as for six, and so the theatre is accordingly operated only half the time. Only the highest class features and comedies are shown and the admission is 25 and 35 cents. Even higher prices are charged on big specials, the recent showing of "Hearts of the World" calling for some of the seats at $1.50—and the house was packed.

But Mr. Parsons does not depend alone on those employed by the mining company for his patronage; he literally goes out into the highways and byways and gets the business. Regular circus methods are used in the billing. When the first orders for paper came into the exchange with which he was going to do business, the manager thought that there was an insane man out in the village of Bauxite. But the order was repeated with each picture, and when the traveling film salesman called around he found that Parsons was posting every road for 20 miles in each direction from Bauxite.

Every week programs are sent out to a mailing list of 1,800, which is kept carefully corrected, and the result is the theatre gets business from as far as 42 miles away. One of the reasons for this is that practically every farmer in that section owns his "flivver," and night after night they bring in their families and friends to see the photoplays that Parsons is offering. Every possible patron in the whole section is reached through the publicity campaign, which also includes page advertisements in the only available newspaper.

There is not even a country weekly printed in Bauxite, but there is the Benton Courier published in the neighboring town and this covers the entire county. When Mr. Parsons opened up he decided that he wanted big space, and so he began using pages and has kept at it ever since. It is probably the only country town theatre in the country that does this. When he played "Hearts of the World," on December 21, he used a double-page spread, and with the worst night of the year, the Saturday before Christmas and after a three-day rain, with the roads deep with mud, he reports excellent business.

There is one additional method of exploitation used, and that consists of personal talks that Mr. Parsons makes to his audience telling them of coming productions. He makes it a point to appear on the stage at every performance, and in this way he is able to impress upon azine. This latter line should not be omitted from any advertising of this picture because the magazine has thousands of readers who will want to see the story transferred to the screen. As a matter of fact, a current story in a magazine is likely to bring more business to the theatre than would the fact that the picture was made from some novel, because of the difference in the circulation.

Here is another bright and breezy one from the Washington theatre, Detroit, using a picture of the girl on one side of the three-column, five-inch display and McIntyre on the other. The selling arguments are carried in very small type in the upper corners of the display, but we think that the Washington made a mistake in not referring to this as a magazine story instead of merely calling it Rex Beach's new comedy.

"Dreamland" is certainly a good name for some theatres—the sort that invite sleep.

WE have had many occasions to praise the work of the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. in these pages, but here is a display that we distinctly do not like. We believe that the theatre makes a mistake in using the national flag or national emblem without the utmost justification and here is a case where there seems to be none except for the fact that Fairbanks—as are most of our stars—is an American.

There is no reason for using the background of the American shield for Fairbanks or any other star. It is meaningless in the first place and the only impression that it could give would be a wrong impression. The space would have been much better occupied in saying something about the character of the picture instead of dealing merely in generalities. The designer would then have had space to get his type effects instead of crowding things up in less than an inch space at the bottom.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Cleveland, O., has put out one of the best of the series of splendid displays which have come from the Mrs. Charles Chaplin campaign. This quarter of a page has everything that it needs except an added line for the selling talk on the picture, but we have called your attention many times to the fact that the Cleveland theatres follow the general style of giving the name of the star and the name of the picture and then using some striking photograph or sketch to illustrate it.

Here the Metropolitan has used a picture of Mildred Harris as she appears in "Borrowed Clothes." We think that there would have been a considerably stronger appeal if the display itself had said that the star appears as a bride in this picture and to connect up the events in the picture with the romance of real life.

That "can't" feeling scares the dimes into the other fellow's box office.

WITH the exception of one thing, here is a display that stands out with the very best. The one thing that we don't like is the illustration at the bottom of the display. In the first place the picture at the right doesn't look anything like Norma Talmadge and the whole effect of the girl with the pistol and the man wearing the cap peering at her is lost because there is nothing to show what it is all about. We repeat: Meaningless cuts are worse than none at all.

"The Heart of Wetona"
From the Famous Stage Play by George Sombrough
Here is Norma Talmadge's final photoplay for the year 1918—a most notable year in the career of this young woman, a year of steady, sure achievement, and as it draws to a close she finds herself everywhere acclaimed by critics as the screen's most versatile and accomplished delineator of human emotions.

Theatergoers will remember "The Heart of Wetona" as a great play. It is a more thrilling and interesting picture. In it Miss Talmadge has the role of an Indian girl, and a most charming red-skinned beauty she is, indeed.
It will Make Your Heart Throb and Your Pulse Beat Quicker.

But in every other way it is all that a display should be. The Indian blanket design has been incorporated into the bride and the name of the star is played strong with the display going ahead to review the success of Miss Talmadge during the year, followed with the statement that this is her final and best photoplay of 1918. It is certainly going to convince every Talmadge admirer and then reach out and get a lot of others who are interested in seeing good motion pictures generally.

For a novelty we like the name of the theatre near the center of the display, which occupies eleven inches across three columns.

WE'VE HELPED

But the Motion Picture House Has Still a Big Part to Play

THERE isn't the slightest doubt that the photoplay has helped win the war. The manufacturers and the distributors have done their part and the exhibitors have been willing to go the limit in co-operating with the Government.

But we will still have a big part to do—not much longer with propaganda, but our duty to the people—in giving them real amusement. And to do this you should strive to improve the quality of your offerings, to round out your bills, to add the melody.

Further than that, you want to add the cheerful tone to your theatre. The boys are coming back—some of them won't. But everyone wants to be cheerful these days. Put the SMILE IDEA through your house and keep it there. Go over your service and see if you can't give your patrons just a little cheerier welcome.

A smile will help you a whole lot along the golden road.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

AT the Rivoli this week there is presented the most remarkable and most brilliant setting of entire bill around a feature that we have ever known, for it is done with a skill that shows Rothapfel at his best. And though he had just weathered through an attack of the "Flu" he found the opportunity to make the presentation one of novelty.

It is with such a bill as this that there should be no program. There is so much more enjoyment when one does not even anticipate what is going to happen, and that is one of the pleasures of the Rialto and Rivoli for even with a program in front of you you never know the interpretation that is going to be placed on a number. But you can be sure of one thing and that is the atmosphere will be created and maintained.

Now with the exception of the Animated everything on this bill hinges right on the feature, Norma Talmadge in "The Heart of Wetona," and therefore a different treatment has been given the Animated so that it will not come in as a jarring note amid the remainder of the setting. It would make a break that would take away something from the spirit of the entire offering and so this week it has been placed first on the bill. Watch the treatment:

With the house entirely dark the curtains go up barely revealing the orchestra and then with a roll of drums the musicians lights go up to blue with a reddish cast on the curtains and the orchestra bathed in red and after a few bars of music, while we are wondering what is going to happen we have the "Rivoli Pictorial Edited by Rothapfel" as the title tells us. The first pictures are of President Wilson's trip abroad and these are the official ones which far surpass any of the others of the same event, because all the facilities of the ship were granted the men who made these for the Official War Review.

We have first pictures of the George Washington steaming out of New York harbor with all the whistle effects of the harbor craft, shots of the battleship Pennsylvania leading, airships flying overhead and then without any title being used we get the first glimpse of the President and the audience breaks into tremendous applause. Following this are scenes of the ship rolling in the storm, evidently taken from the battleship, pictures of the lifeboat drill, splendid shots of the crew of the vessel with the President, then dropping depth bombs and finally the American fleet coming out to meet the ship.

Now there has been an unusual musical arrangement here by counterpointing "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here" several times with the more serious numbers. The picture opens with "American Patrol" and then there follow through "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," sixteen bars of "Dixie," "Hail Columbia," the first strain of "Before the Mast," and then come in four bars of "Hail, Hail," the orchestra

WE'LL MISS HIM

Rothapfel Has Been One of the Features of this Department

IN another part of this issue you have probably already read the announcement that after the 1st of February S. L. Rothapfel will no longer be managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli, his resignation taking effect on that day.

So the heading on this page can appear but three times more. It will be like parting with an old friend, for "Seeing the Rialto With Rothapfel" was made a regular feature of this department shortly after the launching of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. For nearly a year and a half it has been greeting you regularly.

You will miss Rothapfel and the way he presents pictures. It is going to be a genuine loss to the film world and to exhibitors in general. We will continue to print accounts of the presentations at the two houses, but they cannot be the same because there is one word that belongs with Rialto and Rivoli—and that is Rothapfel.

It has been a pleasure to write these articles with Rothapfel. He has never been too busy to take infinite pains to explain everything, he has permitted the writer of these articles privileges at the theatres that no other person has had, and you have had an inside look at his methods that could come from no other source.

Rothapfel's resignation is a real loss.

returning to "Before the Mast," playing this through from the beginning and following with "Our Jackies," then another break with "Hail, Hail," this time played through and then "Our Boys Across the Sea" for the greeting to the President, and "To Victory," used with his arrival in Paris.

Current Events then presents pictures of the arrival of King Victor of Italy in Paris and included here are shots of the call of President and Mrs. Wilson on Poincaré and here we have a few shots of Gen. Foch. Gaumont follows with pictures of the visit of Foch, Clemenceau, Orlando and other notables to London and during all of these pictures "Pomp and Circumstance" is used. Current Events brings from Akron, O. "Riding the elephants of the air," interesting pictures of the big war balloons and here the music in the first part of "In the Clouds." From the same source come striking pictures of the Great Northern shore off Fire Island, including some of the events in the rescue and the capsizing of one of the life boats. Beethoven's "The Storm" is aptly used here. The weekly comes to an end with a burst of applause with Gaumont's "Tanks of victory," the most remarkable picture of these big and little fellows that we have seen. "Le Cid" is the stirring accompaniment.

Then comes the overture which consists in selections from Victor Herbert's "Nautoma," one of the few made-in-America grand operas. The orchestra is in blue here with the settings in pink and green effects. There is no pause at the end of the overture for the curtains part and there is immediately projected on the screen Prizma color pictures of the Blackfoot country entitled "The Land of the Great Spirit." There are some wonderful cloud effects shown here and the pictures of the naked redmen riding in the river get a big hand from the audience. The colors are strikingly brought out in these pictures and much is added to them by the especially prepared score which is used, composed of a series of Indian effects.

A few more bars of music and then the curtains part again revealing Chief Red Eagle of the Blackfeet Indians standing on a pedestal, in the foreground with the mountains stretching away behind him. This setting by John Wenger is a triumph in art work. Then the chief gives his "Incantation to Manitou" and the four wings, facing in first one direction and then the other as he utters the Indian words. Immediately at the end of this the feature is started.

"Girl of the Golden West" is the theme for the feature and this is brought in immediately following the Invocation." Much of the music consists of the Rothapfel numbered selections which have been carefully switched about to form the perfect setting and bring out all of the charm of the picture. "Song of Sorrow," "Indian War Cry," "Tomas' Indian Lament," "Melancolie," "Midsummer" and "The Moon Drops Low" are some of the other numbers.

The Indian spirit is further carried through the bill with a clever cartoon entitled "Quannah's Family Tree," Quannah being one of the chief characters in the feature and the subtitle of the comedy further telling us that this is Cartoonist Felton's report on Weton's family. It gets many laughs after the tense feature and performs the Rothapfel purpose of "seeing 'em away laughing." "Passing of the Red Man" is the music.

In fact, it is remarkable that this notable presentation of a picture should call forth such praise from the New York daily papers on the same week that there came the announcement that Mr. Rothapfel had resigned from the managing directorship of the two houses. Without suspecting that there was anything in the air the paper, between the lines, paid a tribute to the Rothapfel genius in the presentation of photoplays.

And again at the Rialto this week there is another thing that marks the Rothapfel resignation week. That is the return of Mr. and Mrs. Drew to the screen in the first of their Paramount-released pictures.

January 18, 1919

Rialto and Rivoli

It will be remembered that Mr. Rothappel always made regular features of the Drew comedies at the Rialto and that when they announced that they would go to the speaking stage he started a movement to keep them on the screen although it did not prevent their venture into the legitimate drama. But they come back to the Rialto this week and the Rialto fans greet them as their own.

"Southern Rhapsody" is the overture at the Rialto this week, the number being made up largely from the work of Stephen Foster. It is played with the lights all in gold.

Then came one of the splendid Robert C. Bruce scenics, "The River Gray and the River Green." It pictures the two rivers from their sources until their meeting and their flowing together along toward the ocean. One of these is called a sorrowful river, with its sluggish course, and the other a joyful one, leaping cliffs and fighting its way along. There is one especially fine shot which shows a placid river in the foreground and the same stream tumbling from a huge cliff in the background, and another where the two rivers, now one, take their final big jump on their way to the coast. "Vativa" is the music.

With the lights in red Miss Gladys Rice then appears from between the curtains and sings "The Last Rose of Summer." She is dressed in white and carries one red rose in her hand. There was not a sound in the house, not even a cough, when we heard the selection rendered, a tribute to the singer.

Rialto Animated opens with Current Events pictures of Gov. Smith and Former Gov. Whitman reviewing the inaugural parade in Albany while "Diplomat March" is used. Then follow striking Pathe views of the steamship Northern Pacific ashore with the Beethoven storm music used. From the same source come pictures of the American tanks at Camp Polk, N. C. There is a big laugh with the antics of the "mud hen" and with the sub-title "She's a Ford." "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here" helps the pictures along.

Gaumont then presents pictures of the British mystery ship "Suffolk Coast" showing her first as a harmless "tramp" and then with her guns in action ready to sink a U-boat. From Gaumont, too, come pictures of the last of the U-boats surrendering to the British. "Rule Britannia" overture is used for both of these pictures. "On the Flanders Coast" are the final pictures showing the way that the British bottled up Zeebrugge as proven by pictures made since the end of the war and here the maestoso of the same selection is used, giving a crashing finish to the Animated.

With the lighting in red and before the Byzantine setting Vicente Ballester then sings the "Figaro Aria" from "The Barber of Seville" most effectively.

Dorothy Gish in "The Hope Chest" is the feature and for this Arndt's "Toots" is the theme.

This is rendered in various forms.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL

How Detroit theatre advertised its "Rube" week

Once with the title "That Has No End" it is rendered as a violin solo and then with the start of the honeymoon we have it played on piccolo and flute, again with the title "Whistling to Keep" on the piccolo alone and then going into the full orchestra with the title "Back to Her Ragtime," and then when Sheila looks around we have a pause and the theme on the bassoon. Still later in the picture with the second shot of the girl in bed we get it on the violin and at the end with bassoon and drums. There is a large amount of popular music used during the picture including "I Want a Doll," "Causerie," "Twilight Sketches," "Lullaby," "Gabrielle," "Saint Malo," "Flattery," and "Cherry Blossom."

Selections from "Flo Flo" form the second orchestral number and then we have the Drew comedy which is introduced with "Auld Lang Syne" played slowly. There is a novel introduction with the "verse" that K. C. B. wrote in the New York American announcing the return of the Couple to the screen, and this in itself gets a big hand. With the title "Wedding Bells" we have "The Land of the Wedding Bells" and after that the theme, "Sympathy" is introduced. This is followed by "Gianina Mia" from "Firefly," played on the piano and one violin and then Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" started on the piano alone and gradually taken over by the full orchestra. There is a clever title with "The curtain is now lowered to note passing of three weeks" and here "On the 5:15" is used, followed by "This is the Life," "The Wedding of Sunshine" and the theme. With the title "Neath the Spell" "Underneath the Sky" is used, and then "Honeymoon." At the moment that the fat friend enters the door we have "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry" followed by "Sympathy" and the "Hot Time" used to a big laugh when the bride gets the letter from the other woman and "Sympathy" played through twice at the end.

It is a most effective arrangement of the music and sends everyone away in a mighty good humor.

Charles Ray Picture Used as "Rube Week" Basis by Detroit Theatre

HERE is a plain case of thinking—of taking advantage of opportunity.

When Managing Director Phil Gleichman of the Broadway Strand, Detroit, sat in the projection room and saw Charles Ray in "String Beans" and then a little later looked over the Mack Sennett comedy, "The Village Chestnut," there came an idea and that was to have a regular "rube" week at his theatre.

He did this by naming the leader of the orchestra "Farmer" and then referring to the quartet as the "Village Quartette" and so the rural tone was given to every portion of the bill. Then he proceeded to carry this idea out in his advertising which consisted in typical farm decorations and a half-tone of Ray in overalls.

In the first place it was a case of formalizing a bill throughout and of taking advantage of the opportunity to make it appear that the Broadway Strand had gathered together these various features especially to give a "Rube" week. It worked well and the result was large audiences for it is said that no Detroit theatre has ever gotten any more word of mouth advertising than was accorded this one.

Shoe Store and Theatre Both Benefit from This

Co-operation of a merchant and a theatre manager was shown when Arthur C. Stolte showed "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots" at the Strand theatre, Omaha. He induced the owner of the most exclusive shoe shop to place in the window a pair of embroidered slippers, together with a picture of Constance Talmadge and a card reading "These are the boots—see the play at the Strand this week." Mr. Stolte, in turn, arranged a stand in his lobby on which he placed slippers and then gave the store credit for the display.

This Akron Paper Gives Its Theatres Real Cooperation and Its Readers Real News Items

SOME weeks since we reproduced a page from one of the Akron, Ohio, newspapers, the Beacon-Journal, and commented on the large amount of advertising represented there and the very small amount of co-operation on the part of the newspaper, which gave only a few sticks of type and all under the heading "From Press Agents."

At the time we said in the very opening paragraph: "We are making this comment purely on the sheet that we have reproduced * * * because we have not had time to investigate what all of the Akron newspapers are doing as a habit." And now comes along the Akron Press, which we did not even mention by name, declaring that these strictures do not apply to it. And though we didn't say they did, we are mighty glad to show the papers that are really trying to do things.

So Mrs. Grace A. Curtiss, motion picture editor of the Press, writes us that every exhibitor in Akron knows:

"That the Press asks for advance bookings of films, so we can have half-tones made for certain attractions—at our own expense.

"That the Press never has and never will run theatre news under the heading 'What Press Agents say.'

"That the Press stands back of statements regarding photoplays and acts on the legitimate stage, criticising them according to our own judgment, be they good, bad or indifferent.

"That the Press always has devoted liberal space to photoplay reviews, dealing with the current week's offerings, pictures to come and pictures in the making.

"That the Press endeavors to give to its readers an insight into the motion picture industry and up-to-the-minute stories regarding the actors who have made this great industry what it is to-day.

"That the Press never has and never will gauge the amount of reading matter according to the amount of money spent in this newspaper for advertising a photoplay.

"That the Press believes the public is entitled to know what's doing in the movies, and to this end we give space in the news columns even though the houses presenting the films do not spend a penny with us.

"That for timely news and art in the movie world the Press is always on the job."

Mrs. Curtiss further explains that since the Government put the limit on the amount of white paper to be used, the motion picture department had to suffer along with the rest of the paper, and she intimates that with the lifting of the ban the photoplay department will be restored to its previous size.

The issue of the Press that comes to us is for Friday, December 13, and shows seven full columns of motion picture advertising, and on the opposite page about three and a half columns on interesting matter about motion pictures. Most of this is devoted to reviews of local offerings, but there are a couple of attractive cuts and then considerable short gossip about the players.

Certainly, the Press deserves credit for the liberal policy that it is pursuing, and for that reason we hasten to correct any false impression that may have been intimated by an article which was supposed to cover only what the Beacon-Journal was failing to do.

them the worth of some unusual attraction.

One of the reasons for the success of Mr. Parsons is that he is never "cheap" in the way that he puts on attractions. He says:

"I have been for twenty years in the show business, from a circus to picture shows, and I have never made a dollar with a cheap show. Careful observation has taught me that the real money getters always spent money to make money. Even the distributors did not take me seriously at first when I asked for real service, but now I am offered all the big features, and we take most of them, for General Gibbons wants nothing but the best for his employees, and they get it.

"I believe the money is there for anyone who will take a chance. The time has long since passed when you can fool the public, especially the small-town public. They have more time to read the magazines and they are consequently more critical and harder to please. You cannot fool these people by telling them that you have a great picture and then giving them a piece of junk. If I did that they would not be coming back to my theatre day after day. I try to get the very best pictures and then tell the people the truth about them. The people in the small town and in the country know whom they can trust. Every picture I have is not a world beater; but my patrons know that I am trying to get the very best, and that if one falls below the standard now and then it is not my fault."

As a matter of fact, the case of the Bauxite theatre is worthy of a great amount of study. It proves that the manager in the smaller town can develop the trade around him and make money, provided he has the right sort of a house and is willing to show good pictures instead of merely getting out of it the cheapest way he can. The automobile has added wonderfully to the possibilities of the country-town theatre, but the manager must be willing to exploit the pictures and keep his standards up if he is going to build up this trade.

We would like to hear from others who are scoring successes along this line.

Theatre Arranges Call Board for Railroad Men

For years it has been the practise of many theatres to keep in the box office the locations of the seats of physicians who may be attending the theatre so that they can be reached immediately in case of emergency calls. But the Majestic theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., has gone a step further and now invites railroad and professional men to write their names on a bulletin board in the lobby. Then an usher shows them to seats and comes back and writes the location on the board so that these people can be easily reached when they are needed. Grand Junction, as its name indicates, is a considerable railroad center, and this arrangement is a convenience to many who are liable to be called out on "runs" at any moment. Now instead of having to spend their evenings at home they can go to the theatre.

Picture Theatre Plans Helps in Buy-at-Home Campaign

How a motion picture theatre can help in a local campaign has just been evidenced by the Sexton, Great Falls, Mont. Recently the merchants of Great Falls launched a movement to have the people of the section buy at home instead of patronizing the mail order houses. Manager Will Steege saw a plan to aid and so he offered free admission to his theatre to every boy and girl under sixteen who would present a mail order catalog. Three hours after the campaign was launched the theatre was packed and about all the mail order catalogs in that section of the country were in the possession of the theatre and on their way to destruction.

Many Window Displays Help Exploit "Mickey" For Moore's New Rialto Theatre

MOORE'S new Rialto theatre, Washington, D. C., a house which by its novel arrangement and exquisite beauty has taken a place among the great successes in theatrical history in America, established new attendance records in the National Capital the week of December 29, when the major feature of a bill that embraced a variety of impressive attractions, both pictorial and musical, was "Mickey," Mack Sennett's most pretentious contribution to the screen, with Mabel Normand starred.

In paving the way for this engagement, special newspaper advertising was begun in all Washington daily publications ten days in advance of the showing of the picture. This preliminary campaign was kept distinct from the running advertisements of the Rialto's current attractions, thereby eliminating all danger of confusion of dates in the public mind. A further means of publicity was found in the willingness of department and music stores to co-operate in exploiting the film feature under a reciprocal arrangement that accorded them the benefit of announcement in the Moore theatres of the establishments in which the song "Mickey" and the phonograph records could be purchased.

Special decorative frames briefly stating the name of the attraction, the place of its exhibition and date of the engagement, and containing photographic inserts of scenes from the picture were displayed in prominent downtown windows. These frames, 34 x 44 inches in size, were in the majority of cases utilized as a nucleus for window displays inviting the public's attention to the "Mickey" musical score.

When the Rialto opened on Sunday afternoon, December 29, there was a line at the box-office that extended for something over a full city square, with prospective purchasers of tickets two and sometimes three abreast. This demand for seats in a house that accommodates 2,000 spectators on one floor continued throughout the run of "Mickey," even the 11 o'clock morning shows playing to capacity. A particularly eloquent commentary on the insistence of the theatregoing population of Washington that they see this camera subject is found in the fact that on three days of the week the picture ran a cold, drizzling rain fell without ceasing. Despite the inclemency of the weather the trusty box-office line never broke—as may be observed from the accompanying photograph taken at 11.30 a.m. in a rainstorm.

As added attractions with the "Mickey" film were run the Rialto's review of current events, "The Battle of the Levathans," a natural color study of the unfathomed ocean depths, and the special views of President Wilson's arrival first at Brest, then in Paris.

Much effectiveness was lent the climactic scenes of the Sennett production by the skillfully arranged and perfectly synchronized orchestra score, interpreted by

Clever and "Different" Display Used by N. Y. Theatre for "Mickey"

HERE is a unique display on "Mickey" that was employed by the Majestic theatre, New York City, in advance and during the three-day showing of the production at that theatre. This house is located at 184th street and St. Nicholas avenue and is one of the largest theatres on Washington Heights.

Manager Brandon made the display out of three 40 by 60 pictures with "Mickey" in large letters at the bottom of the foreground, while in the background there was cut out of the character backed up by a Western scene which helped to make the whole thing stand out so that it attracted the attention. The copy on the board read:

"No photoplay has yet been produced so filled with adventure and thrills as 'Mickey.' Every human emotion, every element of life, Mabel Normand portrays with such genuine artistry, expressed with a sincerity never before equaled."

This was in addition to the campaign planned by H. J. Shepherd, of W. H. Productions, in connection with the use of copies of the song, "Mickey," photograph and player piano records. Several of the phonograph stores in the Washington Heights co-operated by giving window displays, the song was sung and played in the theatre and copies of it distributed. Mr. Shepherd's unusual plan is helping to break records in many cities.

the Rialto Symphony Orchestra of thirty solo artists under the conductorship of Mr. Daniel Breeskin, brother of Elias Breeskin, the famous concert violinist. As a special number, the orchestra rendered the familiar and always enjoyable "Zampa" overture.

The Rialto in quality of productions, manner of presentation and superiority of musical setting—amplified by the large Austin pipe organ—has established a totally new and entirely unprecedented standard of photoplay entertainment in Washington.

Oriental Stage Settings for "Salome" at St. Louis

When "Salome" was shown at Fox's Liberty theatre, St. Louis, a special presentation was given it by Manager Louis K. Sidney, who is stirring St. Louis by the manner that he exhibits the offerings at the Liberty. He was formerly manager of the Jamaica, at Jamaica, N. Y.

As the curtain arose at the "Salome" presentation there was revealed a magnificent setting of oriental splendor, lights in red and blue bathing the stage. There was a throne of white and gold on which half reclined a young lady dancer garbed as "Salome," with two Nubian slaves in attendance. At this point the soloist in oriental costume rendered Puccini's "My Bedouin Girl," and at the conclusion the dancer gave her interpretation of the "Salome" dance. The overture, played by the Liberty orchestra of twenty-five, was selections from the opera.

Branham's Success Wins Him Management of Splendid Majestic Theatre in Detroit

CHARLES G. BRANHAM of Minneapolis is the new manager of the Majestic theatre, Detroit, succeeding M. W. McGee, who resigned some weeks ago but who has remained at the post pending the selection of his successor. The Majestic is the finest theatre in Detroit and owned by a stock company.

For over a year Mr. Branham has been manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, and attracted country-wide attention by the success he made of the house as long as it was independent. It is said that he was considered the greatest success as a manager known in the section for years. When the Strand was purchased by Finkelstein and Rubin it became one of the syndicate and so lost its individuality, and it was expected at the time that Mr. Branham would not remain, yet he did so as manager of the Strand and publicity manager for another one of the syndicate houses.

In taking over the Majestic, the friends of Mr. Branham expect him to make good from the start, but he is going to have a fast pace to follow in that set by Mr. McGee, who is another of the leading managers of the country. The Majestic is a splendid house affording all the facilities for the presentation of pictures with full effects, while the fine orchestra has kept a high musical standard. In most cities the Majestic would be considered a neighborhood house, for it is far from the business center of the city, but it appeals successfully to the whole city.

Henry Guthard, one of the directors of the Majestic company, is the new lessee of the house, the directors themselves having turned the property over to him. It is reported that Mr. McGee did not find things altogether to his liking so long as he had to deal with the board of directors on every occasion.

Both Mr. Branham and Mr. McGee are members of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors Service Bureau.

Franklin Shows Possibilities of Motion Pictures With "Under Four Flags" Offering

WITH a giant airplane circling over the city dropping pamphlets, with 10,000 letters sent to every school, commercial enterprise and club, with an extensive newspaper advertising campaign and with a beautifully decorated front and lobby as well as interior, Manager Harold B. Franklin of Sheas' Hippodrome introduced the latest official government film, "Under Four Flags," to Buffalo.

The propaganda from the clouds was the opening gun, fired two days before the opening date. The idea was original in Buffalo and was talked about everywhere. Two government aviators attached to the local Curtiss flying field loaded a machine with pamphlets boosting the picture, and soaring through the skies over the residential and business sections of the city dropped their messages, bringing home to Buffalo folk some real war atmosphere.

Supplementing this stunt, Mr. Franklin sent letters broadcast throughout the city announcing the coming of the war picture and the opportunity it gave for the study of real conditions over there as well as bringing to town some real action stuff.

The front of the theatre was a mass of flags, including the national emblems of the allied nations and Old Glory. Surrounding the pillars of the "porte cochere" were bulletins attractively lettered.

The presentation of the picture itself was a memorable one, the musical setting consisting of seventy-one different numbers, and it was in this connection that Mr. Franklin introduced a new idea. Said he: Why use a lot of war music with a picture filled with heart interest and at times real humor?

To bring out these features, Mr. Franklin selected appropriate melodies wherever possible. In the scenes showing the doughboys "shooting crap" he used "Everybody's Doin' It Now." In some of the peace celebration scenes the orchestra played "There'll Be a Hot Time," while during the scenes of the ruined cities and finishing with the title "And This Was the House of God," the only musical accompaniment used was a solo violin and harp, playing "Ave Maria," by Gounod. According to Mr. Franklin, never yet had audiences applauded during the picture the appropriateness of a musical setting, but they applauded this one, and enthusiastic-

AT MIDNIGHT

Think a Little About Your Business Before You Go to Bed

ONE exhibitor, and a prosperous one, writes:

"It was eighteen months ago that I read an editorial in the NEWS about the manager who was not content with counting up his cash and then turning in for the night. If I remember it right, you urged the exhibitor to think a little after he had put the day's receipts away.

"I have been trying to do this. My show is over shortly after 11, and an hour later I am at home. Then I grab for the old slippers, light a cigar, pick out the easiest chair and reach for my copy of the NEWS. Often I read a few lines only and THINK what I can do along the same lines or with the same picture.

"Sometimes I fall asleep. But I have found out this: The night that I don't fall asleep I make a whole lot more on the picture. I like to read other's ideas. They spur mine. That's the reason why I am trying to send you all my little ones. They're not much, but maybe they'll make the other fellow think."

We're not giving you the name, but you don't need it to THINK—and then to write us.

ally. It was a wonderful effect and put over the otherwise uninteresting scenes with a punch. In one of the battle scenes, the only accompaniment used was that given by four tympani in various pitches, producing a continuous rumble, which was also very effective.

Another idea introduced was the vocal solo given by a prominent local singer at one spot in the picture. The song was "The Rose of No Man's Land," and the song began at the title "Waiting for Transportation" and closing with the scene showing the Red Cross nurse. The song was synchronized perfectly with the action, and a verse and one chorus was sung.

Throughout the presentation there was little heavy music. Songs that the home folks were familiar with predominated, and in the French scenes the famous marching song of La Belle France, "Madelon," was played with wonderful effect. There was "My Doughboy," "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kitbag," "When You Come Back," "Tipperary," and others.

For the stage setting Mr. Franklin reproduced the four figures of the allied soldiers in heroic size. These soldiers of Italy, Britain, France and America were so mammoth that they dominated everything when the curtains were drawn back unveiling them. And then as the orchestra played the national hymns of the four nations, the flags of the various countries were lowered behind each fighter, working up to a tremendous climax when the big thirty-piece orchestra boomed forth a special arrangement of "The Star Spangled Banner," by the conductor of the orchestra, Alfred A. Moulton. Applause literally shook the house. The setting was unusually appropriate.

Special setting at Shea's Hippodrome reproducing Whistler's famous painting, "Mother"

Celebrated Paintings Reproduced in Displays by Franklin Score Hit

"It is a wonderful thing, a mother;
Other folks can love you,
But only your mother understands.
She works for you,
Looks after you,
Loves you,
Forgives you anything you may do,
Understands you, and then the Only thing bad she ever does to you
Is to die and leave you."

AS these lines by Baroness von Hutten faded from the screen at Shea's Hippodrome, the big velvet curtains were drawn aside disclosing in a large golden frame Whistler's painting of his mother, a splendid reproduction of the original and well-known art classic. The setting is first shown in silhouette followed by a blending of soft lights to bring out the fine coloring of the painting.

During the unveiling of the setting, the Hippodrome symphony orchestra played "Caprice Viennoise," by Kriesler, an entrancing melody ideally expressing the atmosphere of the picture. The audience literally shook the house with applause, showing their appreciation of the first of a new series of stage settings to be introduced by Manager Harold B. Franklin, a series that will reproduce in heroic size some of the art treasures of the old and new world and which are expected to meet with even more favor than the many patriotic reproductions offered in the past. So well have these settings been received that a large staff of artists is constantly kept busy in developing Mr. Franklin's creations.

In discussing this new series of settings with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, Mr. Franklin said:

"We propose to bring to our audiences the great masterpieces and with the splendid atmosphere created by appropriate music and proper lighting expect to strike a popular chord.

"Everyone enjoys looking at good paintings and everyone likes to hear good music—here we have a combination of the two. Almost every great event has found expression through some famous painting. What is more appropriate than the combination of a good painting with a good motion picture. It is not only restful to look at a picture in color after looking at the screen through the average motion picture program, but it is distinctly novel. Every good painting tells a story, taking the audience into the realms of fancy, the glory of battle, the pomp of ceremony or the events of everyday life.

"Paintings not only represent good art, but present subjects that interest because they meet our fullest human sympathies. The love of art is universal.

"We do not propose to show reproductions of paintings solely as the subject matter for our stage settings but when occasion demands, we will present settings typical of the feature being shown, to symbolize holidays and we feel that our patrons will appreciate the gallery of art that we propose to bring to Shea's Hippodrome as an added attraction, not forgetting that in motion pictures, the feature and attraction is uppermost.

"Little Women" Characters Are Introduced in Prologue

William A. Brady's Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Little Women," received a unique introduction to Los Angeles motion picture fans at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, every afternoon and night this week. Before the screen story is flashed on the canvas a typical down east country home scene is given to the audience. The lighting effects are wonderful, giving one the impression of a crimson sunset on a cold

WHO'S SLOWING DOWN?

Has the 'Flu' Scared You? It's the Time to Do Things

HAS the "Flu" scare discouraged you from doing things? There are several theatres from which we used to get from time to time accounts of presentations, advertising campaigns and the like. And since the old Spanish epidemic has come along we haven't heard from several of them.

Right now the motion picture theatre has the greatest opportunity of its existence. Instead of getting cold feet and breaking out with the perspiration of alarm, now is the time to put on every ounce of energy and go to it as you have never done before.

There are lots of opportunity in current productions. There are many changing conditions in various sections. There has never been a time when there was more need for the showmen to THINK. We want you to think; we want you to get out and do things, and then we want you to let us know what you are doing.

The fellow who is failing to do them needs your help. And this is a forum for such a record. Let us hear THIS WEEK.

winter's day. Real, live people appear before the footlights, and on the porch of the refined old country place they make merry as they did in the days of '63. The little party consists of dances of antebellum days, melodies of '61, violin solos and four dancers in minuet. The stage introduction is so pleasing that the audience unconsciously entertains a personal acquaintance with the characters of the play when they begin later to appear on the screen.

Theatre and Paper Get Together on Subscription Plan

Manager J. M. Black, of the Broadway theatre, San Diego, Cal., took advantage of an unusual chance to get newspaper co-operation through an agreement he made with the Evening Sun, whereby every person who subscribes to the paper during that month is given a free seat at the theatre. The arrangement applies to all the pictures that are shown during January. It was required only that the receipts of the newspaper for a month's subscription be presented and the war tax paid. Then the receipt was stamped by the theatre to prevent it being used again.

The tickets were good any time, any show, day or night, Sunday or weekday. The first picture shown under the new program was "Mirandy Smiles," featuring Vivian Martin, and she wired the Broadway management her pleasure in being selected for the occasion. The telegram was reproduced in the Sun, with Miss Martin's picture. The Sun camera man snapped the first line-up at the box-office, made up mainly of the Sun's newsboys, who wished to get in on the free-ticket offer.

Fox Analyzes 1919 Film Vogue

William Fox Predicts That the "Westerns" Will Come Back Strong This Year and Cites Tom Mix Productions

WHAT type of pictures will be the vogue in the early part of the reconstruction period following the war?

Will it be comedy or drama or some particular type of these such as melodrama or Western plays?

According to many exhibitors the last named type will be one of the forms of the photoplay most in demand. The argument is that our returned soldiers will both directly and indirectly influence public demand.

There are more than 2,500,000 of these boys coming back to their homes, and it is argued that their army life and participation in world affairs will for some time, whether consciously or not, influence their choice of pictures.

These boys, according to one point of view, will demand productions that are virile, and that deal with men and women who really do worthwhile things. Moreover, it is contended, the unusual development of Western productions, exclusive of soldier influence, points strongly to a great vogue for this class of production.

In the early days of the motion picture no theme had quite so strong a hold as one with cowboy heroes. Cleverness of plot and characterization were secondary in importance to the big thrill of rapid action. Audiences were satisfied with the thrill of a leathered-trousered hero galloping madly across the plain in pursuit of the fleeing villain, or his calm holdup with a single six-shooter of a bar-room filled with "bad men."

An added reason for the great popularity of the cowboy hero is obvious. Screen patrons who have been viewing battlefields and submarine attacks for several years find in motion pictures of the great West the same bigness of action.

Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell, are presented by William Fox in "Woman, Woman"

William Fox believes that there was evidence of this great favor in the popular success, even while the war was in progress, of such features as William Farnum's "Riders of the Purple Sage" made from Zane Grey's novel of the Utah plains and mountains.

"Tom Mix has had a meteoric rise in a very few years as a photoplay actor," said Mr. Fox. "His remarkable popularity is riding the very crest of the wave of demand for fine, virile Western plays just as announcement is made of the release of his second Victory Picture, 'Treat 'Em Rough,' which was filmed on a large ranch at Prescott, Arizona."

Bessie Eyton Only Woman in Lewis Picture

Bessie Eyton is the only woman appearing in Select Pictures' forthcoming release, "Children of Banishment," starring Mitchell Lewis. The other principal supporting roles are taken by Herbert Hayes, Arthur Morrison and Tom Bates.

Miss Eyton is Mr. Lewis' leading woman in this production. She will be remembered for her work in Selig productions for several years, and for her roles, Helen Chester in "The Spoilers," and Virginia Carvel in "The Crisis." Mr. Hayes had a successful stage career with James K. Hackett, and has played leads with Theda Bara, Mary Miles Minter and May Allison. His last work was in Helen Kellar's picture. Arthur Morrison and Tom Bates are both well known on the screen. Mr. Morrison was with Mr. Lewis in "The Code of the Yukon," and Mr. Bates' best known work was in "The Garden of Allah" and "The Spoilers."

Fairbanks Engages Condon

Douglas Fairbanks has engaged Frank Condon, of Saturday Evening Post fame, as special scenario writer.

Condon's success as an author of fiction stories attracted the attention of the Artcraft actor-producer, who feels that he has been particularly fortunate to make satisfactory arrangements with the writer of "This Way Out," "By Request" and "Blue Monday," which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Condon just completed a series of five stories scheduled for early publication in Collier's Magazine.

First National Gets The Roosevelt Picture

HARRY SCHWALBE, secretary and treasurer of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and Frederick L. Collins, publisher of McClure's Magazine and president of McClure Productions, closed a deal this week whereby the First National will distribute "The Fighting Roosevelts," showing the important events in the life of Theodore Roosevelt and his sons, in the United States and Canada. The picture was completed recently under the direction of William Nigh.

The deal was closed by these parties, following a private showing for the officials of the First National, and it is said that First National paid the highest price ever recorded for the distributing rights to a production in the United States and Canada.

William Nigh, the director, will be remembered for his work in connection with the directorial work on the Gerard picture, "My Four Years in Germany," also distributed by First National. Harry M. Warner, who assisted Mr. Nigh in the production of the Gerard picture, was manager of production during the filming of the Roosevelt picture. The picture is founded on the ex-President's books and writings. As announced before, all royalties accruing to Mr. Roosevelt from the sale of this production, will be donated to the Red Cross and kindred war charities, designated by him.

Theda Bara and Tom Mix Co-Stars! Yep, in "The She-Devil!"

"Oh, Wotta Mess!"

The Only News on This Page Is in That Top Line, But What a Cyclone It Will Start!

[Editor's Note: Last week we caught a publicity department actually suppressing (!) a publicity story. Horrors! And all because of a star's contract! More horrors!! We couldn't stand for that—so we grabbed the news story, put it right up at the top of this page in bold italics, and below we go on to give you a more or less imaginary account of the mess it is going to start in the neighborhood of the Fox 46th street offices.]

THIS story is going to start an alibi afternoon in the William Fox offices over on West Forty-sixth street.

It will happen in about this wise:

First, the telephone bell in the little outer office on the sixth floor where Jack Leo and Miss WEINBERGER hold forth will yawp menacingly.

Miss WEINBERGER will say "Hello," sweetly; then—

"This is Miss Bara! I would like to speak to Mr. Fox!"

Mr. Fox, having read this issue of The News, will be out.

A little later the bell on the desk of James E. MacBride will tingle nervously.

"Mac," a voice will say, "this is Mr. Fox. Where in — did The News get that 'She-Devil' story it printed today?"

"I'm trying to find out myself, Mr. Fox," will be the alibi. "It's news to me!"

The next time the telephone rings Jay A. Gove will be on one end of the wire:

"Why, I haven't the slightest idea," Gove will be explaining to MacBride. "I certainly instructed every one in this department that no mention was to be made of that incident. It hasn't gone out in any of our copy."

Before the end of the day every one from Herman Robbins, acting general manager in the absence of W. R. Sheehan, down to the office boy in Gove's department, will have entered his little alibi, "friendly emissaries" will have visited the office of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS on a gumshoe mission—and then the incident will pass into film history.

So this is the story of how the Fox Exhibitors' Service Bureau (née publicity department) tried to suppress a real publicity story and was scooped by a trade magazine.

And these are the facts:

Miss Theda Bara has a contract with William Fox calling for something more or less than a million a year compensation. This contract, according to the best of our information and belief, contains a lot of ifs, ands and buts about the place Miss Bara shall hold in publicity in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and other publications, and chiefly a clause—of which Fox representatives today denied having knowledge—prohibiting mention of Miss Bara's name in connection with that of any other actor whomsoever—good, bad or indifferent.

Naturally, this guaranteed exclusiveness results in the suppression of numerous stories which energetic publicity folks might otherwise capitalize to the credit of themselves, the renown of Fox and the great benefit of 15,000-odd exhibitors. Parenthetically, this is probably the only publicity suppression contract in existence.

One of the stories so suppressed concerns an incident that is

herewith appropriately illustrated. (Never mind, Gove, where we found the still photograph from which the cut is made!)

It appears that in the Theda Bara picture (beg pardon, super-production!) titled "The She-Devil," there are two stars. And that's the reason we are telling the story—because exhibitors ought to have the benefit of the advertising this fact justifies—advertising which one of the stars' contracts prevents them from getting.

It will be recalled that in "The She-Devil" there is a very perilous stage coach stunt in which Theda Bara, escaping from bandits, makes a wild and woolly ride down a mountain side—the sort of ride for which limousining in Los Angeles is not exactly proper preparation.

When Miss Bara was told about this stunt, according to our California informant, she came right down on the proposition with all the force of stardom and her number fours.

Then came Fame and Fortune to the aid of Director J. Gordon Edwards.

Why, yes, Miss Bara would take a chance on the ride, for the sake of saving the picture, if Tom Mix would drive the coach.

Is there anything Tom Mix won't do—once? If there is, directors haven't thought of it yet; and this certainly was not the occasion for refusal.

Desired details are lacking regarding that ride—but fortunately film evidence isn't. According to this testimony Mr. Mix went down hill in his customary loose manner, rounding curves on two wheels or less and tempting Fate just as if he was the star of the play instead of merely a super who daren't even be mentioned in the cast. Tom Mix, as most exhibitors know, has his own ideas about how to put punch into a scene, and there is no doubt that on this occasion the chap who rides smilingly through glass windows, jumps a-horseback from second story balconies into automobiles, and plays other little jokes like that on Death, lived right up to his reputation as "the man who never fakes."

Before the real star of the play, who figured principally as a jumping jack in this scene, had fully recovered, John Boyle, the cameraman, had posed the coach, its driver and occupant for a still photograph—a long shot, of course. And a magnifying glass applied to this evidence affords our proof of the truth of Tom Mix's gallantry.

After reading this over twice the writer thought it would be only fair to give the Fox authorities a chance to make a statement.

The telephone again:

"Mr. MacBride, this is the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Is it true that Miss Theda Bara has a contract with Mr. Fox which prohibits you from mentioning her in a story in which any other star or actor is mentioned?"

"It's news to me!" said MacBride, without even a smile in his well known voice.

Use Massive Interior Set

What is believed to be the largest and most massive and at the same time, one of the most elaborate and artistic interior settings ever constructed for motion picture purposes was built and photographed for a number of the scenes in "The Great Romance."

This is the Screen Classics, Inc., production, starring Harold Lockwood, which Metro is releasing this month.

Considers "The Prussian Cur" Very Timely

With the Peace Conference about to open, and the proposed League of Nations as the paramount topic of news and editorial comment, exhibitors are finding in "The Prussian Cur," it is announced by the Fox Film Corporation, a popularity even greater than when the outcome of the world struggle still was in doubt.

"The Prussian Cur," the Fox officials emphasize, deals with the diplomacy which precipitated the war, and the vast Prussian system of propaganda and crime by which it was hoped to intimidate America.

One effect of the League of Nations, as announced by President Wilson, would be to stamp out all secret diplomacy with its resultant elaborate systems of spying and plotting against the peace of the world.

Hancock Resigns Y. M. C. A. to Produce Pictures

Herbert E. Hancock, Director of the Motion Picture Bureau of the Y. M. C. A., has resigned from that post to accept the position of Managing Director for a new producing company soon to make its debut in the motion picture field.

Mr. Hancock's final act for the Y. M. C. A. was to produce a special feature taking in the shipbuilding activities at Hog Island, which is to be released through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America on January 31.

The film is entitled "Bringing The Boys Back Home" and besides showing the benefits received by the skilled worker, is said to carry a human interest story throughout which centers around a shipbuilder, his wife and his baby.

Report Strong Appeal in "Made in America"

The producers of "Made in America," distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson plan through the Pathe exchanges, claim that the appeal is not only to the four million soldiers but also to the home folks who have heard much of America's wonderful training system; enough to sharpen their appetites for the screen production dealing with the subject in its entirety and with the basic idea of giving to the American people an adequate and satisfying picture story of the training of the American soldier.

There are patriotic organizations in every community to whose members "Made in America" is expected to have a strong appeal. It bears the official endorsement of some of the strongest organizations in the country and it is expected that they will urge their local branches to give "Made in America" cordial support.

Universal Star Spends Busy Week

Eddie Polo, Universal serial star, continued his tour of the principal cities of the country through Christmas week, spending three days in Indianapolis and three more in Kansas City.

At the Indiana metropolis Mr. Polo appeared at eight theatres. He appeared in person at the Manhattan, Gem, Sanders, Idle Hour, Two Johns, Castle, Jewel and Senate theatres.

Kansas City had made preparations to provide the star of "The Lure of the Circus" with a royal reception and he was to appear at eighteen theatres.

Personnel of Barriscale's Supporting Cast

In "All of a Sudden, Norma," Bessie Barriscale's latest starring vehicle on the Exhibitors' Mutual program, she is supported by three popular screen favorites and two of the popular juvenile type. Melbourne McDowell, Frank Leigh and Joseph J. Dowling are the members of the first group, and Albert Colby and R. Henry Grey are the members of the second.

Select Specials in Many First Run Houses

REPORTS received by Select Pictures Corporation from its various exchanges throughout the country are said to show that two of this company's special attractions, "The One Woman" and "The Cavell Case," the latter in which Julia Arthur is seen as the woman the Germans shot, are in big demand by first run houses in the most important cities.

"The One Woman," which was Select's first special of the season, has been booked solid over the entire Poli circuit in New England, including such important centers as Bridgeport, New Haven, Hartford, Waterbury, Springfield and Worcester.

It has also been booked for all of Marcus Loew's New York theatres, and in addition will be seen at Lou de Hoff's New theatre in Baltimore, Tom Moore's Strand in Washington, Guy Wonders' Wilson theatre in Baltimore, Fay's theatre in Providence, Palace in Philadelphia, Colonial in Reading, all of the Commerford theatres in Pennsylvania, the Newark theatre in Newark, N. J., and in all of the big Turner and Donnken houses in the 'Frisco and Oakland districts on the West Coast.

H. L. Knappen, Branch Manager of Select's San Francisco Exchange, reports that "The One Woman" is doing a big business in all of the Coast cities, while glowing accounts from other Branch Managers are said to be a daily occurrence.

One theatre manager, Charles Freeman, of the Regent in Newcastle, Penn., sent the following wire to Leo F. Levison, Branch Manager of Select's Pittsburgh Exchange: "Congratulations on 'The One Woman' . . . Best picture ever seen."

Egyptian Rights Are Sold for "Cleopatra"

"CLEOPATRA" in Egypt, sounds like a return engagement for the vampire of the land of the Pyramids. "Queen of the Sea" in India and in South America. Film features in Siberia. Busy days for exhibitors in far New Zealand are indicated.

These are a few bits of news received recently by William Fox from foreign representatives of the Fox Film Corporation.

There is a touch of romance in the announcement that the production, "Cleopatra," has been sold by William Fox for Egypt, where it will be shown to audiences on the very ground where the greatest vampire queen of all history lived and ruled.

"Cleopatra," Fox officials state, is one of the biggest box office successes in the history of the Fox Film Corporation. They say that it has already been shown in over 4,000 theatres in the United States, and its popularity with exhibitors is declared to be increasing daily.

Both "Cleopatra" and "Salome" now are on the open market for exhibitors everywhere.

The Fox Film Corporation announces that the Annette Kellerman feature, "Queen of the Sea," has just been leased for exhibition in India and in the Dutch East Indies. It also has been sold to South America as a special attraction, where it will be exhibited simultaneously in Chile, Peru, Brazil, Argentine and Uruguay.

Vitagraph Plans Big Exploitation for Its Coming Serial, "The Man of Might," Featuring William Duncan

PLANs announced by the Vitagraph Company tend to show that this company will intensively exploit the coming serial starring William Duncan and to be known as "The Man of Might." Billboards will be used extensively.

It is claimed by Vitagraph officials that several of the early episodes have already been showed to many exhibitors throughout the country and that the results have been that the coming serial is already booked widely.

Vitagraph exchanges managers in the many territories are reported as being more enthused over their booking success on "The Man of Might" than on any of the past Vitagraph serials.

Quite a record was claimed for bookings on "The Fighting Trail" but it is declared that already the advance bookings on the new Duncan serial has exceeded all of the most optimistic expectations.

Forty-nine theatres that have never previously run serials of any kind are said to be on the route sheet for the new one. William Duncan, the star of "The Man of Might," is reported as being tremendously taken up with the possibilities of his latest effort and predicts that it will exceed all past serials by many city blocks.

Stunts, surprises and tense situations are said to follow one another in astonishing rapidity and the many climaxes are calculated to bring them back every time.

With "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web," "A Fight for Millions" and "The Iron Test" already playing throughout the country, Vitagraph is confident that "The Alice Joyce, whose latest appearance on the Vitagraph program is in "The Captain's Captain"

"Man of Might" will find a notable welcome, as they consider the serial trail has been blazed with the Vitagraph trademark and also feel that William Duncan has a big following.

"The Man of Might" was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the authors of the previous Vitagraph serials. William Duncan not only stars in it, but he directs it as well. His chief support in the cast is Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

The following episode titles give some indication of the action that may be expected to run through the fifteen episodes of the production: The Riven Flag, The Leap Through Space, The Creeping Death, The Gripping Hand, The Human Shield, The Height of Torment, Into the Trap, The One Chance, The Crashing Horror, Double Crossed, The Ship of Dread, The Volcano's Prey, The Floor of Despair, The Living Catapult, The Rescue.

"Little Women" Has a Novel Exploitation

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY announces that thousands of special letters sent to the leading educators of the country has resulted in many offers of co-operation in assuring the success of the local exhibitions of the William A. Brady picturization of Louisa M. Alcott's famous novel, "Little Women."

In many cities, it is said, special student matinees are being arranged for the benefit of the young people who have read the novel, and in all cases school teachers are co-operating heartily with the exhibitors, as is said to be indicated by the great number of enthusiastic letters received from school teachers and others who appreciate the great educational and instructive value of the story of the four "Little Women."

The following letter from M. L. Brittain, state superintendent of the Georgia Department of Education, is declared to be indicative of the support given the Paramount-Artcraft Special by educators:

"It is a pleasure to know that Louisa M. Alcott's 'Little Women' will soon appear as a Paramount-Artcraft Special. As a boy I fell under the charm of the book and have never recovered from the fascination. I feel sure that a motion picture of such high value will receive the encouragement it deserves from the public, the educational public in particular."

Elaborate Set Installed for Brady Picture

What is declared to be one of the most expensive and elaborate sets for motion picture work ever built, was the one installed in Alice Brady's studio on West 56th street, reproducing the main lobby of the Traymore in Atlantic City for one of the scenes in the picture which Alice Brady is making to succeed "The Indestructible Wife," her Select Series attraction announced for late January.

It is being directed by Charles Maigne, and several location shots on this picture were made in Atlantic City.

Owing to the fact that Miss Brady is obliged to be in New York every evening for her regular performance in "Forever After" at the Playhouse, and the inconvenience of transporting the large number of "extras," for the interior scenes, Director Maigne found it necessary to call for a reproduction of the Traymore lobby to be built in Miss Brady's New York studio.

Likes Universal Feature

The success of Universal's recent news scoop, "The Surrender of the German Fleet," at Salt Lake City, Utah, is noted in the following letter from the Paramount-Empress theatre there. The letter follows:

Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.,
Salt Lake, Utah.

Gentlemen:

I am enclosing check for "The Surrender of the German Fleet." From every viewpoint I consider this subject filled the bill.

Permit me to congratulate you on your untiring efforts which resulted in our getting this film twenty-four hours ahead of any other version, thereby acquiring prestige and most unmercifully utilizing the advertising of others who promised in the public prints to score a "scoop."

Coming as it did at this time when business is all shot to pieces after being closed for nine solid weeks on account of the "flu" ban, "The Surrender of the German Fleet" was doubly welcome, for it certainly brought the business.

Once more congratulations.

Yours truly,

GEO. E. CARPENTER, Manager,
Paramount-Empress Theatre,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

"The Turn in the Road" Has Premiere

Brentwood Film Corporation's initial production, "The Turn in the Road," had its first public showing at Quinn's Rialto theatre at Los Angeles, following a preview given during the regular program hours at the theatre during the preceding week, at which time all patrons were given cards on which to fill in a criticism concerning the story, cast, direction and to give general remarks concerning their opinion of the film.

It was upon the opinions voiced on these cards by patrons of the theatre that the film which is to be sold by State rights was booked at Quinn's theatre.

This initial production of a new company is classed as one of a serious type, with many opportunities for emotional acting and equally as many for lighter scenes to reduce the tensions of the drama. It is based upon a very simple theme, but it is said that the suspense has been sustained fully in the direction and the preparation of the story by King W. Vidor.

"Shoulder Arms" Plays Many Return Dates

The success of the Charlie Chaplin picture "Shoulder Arms" is demonstrated by the reports that Louisville, Nashville, Chattanooga and Knoxville have had it for three engagements, says First National.

In Louisville it ran a week at the Strand theatre and a week at B. F. Keith's National, and was brought back to the National for another week. In Nashville, Tony Sudekum, head of the Crescent Amusement Co., presented "Shoulder Arms" for two engagements at the Princess theatre and has booked it for another showing at his houses.

The Signal Amusement Co., Frank H. Dowler, Jr., manager, ran it in Chattanooga and Knoxville.

Universal Makes Many Changes

Arrival of 1919 Brings a Reorganization of Various Departments of the Home Offices

THE coming of 1919 has brought a reorganization of various departments at the home office of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., it has been announced.

H. M. Berman, for the past eighteen months sales manager for Jewel Productions, Inc., has been appointed general manager of Universal Exchanges and in addition to directing the work of the distributing branches he will maintain his executive capacity with Jewel productions.

Mr. Berman, while at the head of the distributing organization of Jewel Productions, is reported to have made a big success, of these films. Much of the success of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" and "Crashing Through to Berlin" has been credited to Mr. Berman's untiring efforts and executive ability.

Several years in the exchange business at Kansas City and trips around the country on which he has met many exhibitors and exchangemen is considered to have made Mr. Berman particularly fit for the post he has been assigned to.

Joseph Schnitzer, Central States district manager for Universal with the Indianapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Buffalo exchanges under his jurisdiction has been appointed general sales manager and will supervise the distribution of Universal features, short reel dramas, and comedies.

The addition of Mr. Schnitzer to the executive staff at New York is said to bring into the office one of the oldest exchangemen in the country, and a man whose broad knowledge of conditions confronting exchanges and exhibitors means much to Universal.

Mr. Schnitzer became an exchangeman in 1807, opening the Des Moines office for the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co. Later he went to the Mullen Film Service at Minneapolis, thence to Syracuse and

New York City, where he sold the first films not controlled by the old Motion Pictures Patents Co. Mr. Schnitzer was prominent in the fight against this company and later opened an exchange at Toledo for P. A. Powers.

When this exchange was sold in 1912, Mr. Schnitzer became manager of the Central Film Co. office at Indianapolis, another Powers holding, and remained at this post until Universal took over the office when he was made district manager for the Central states.

Ralph Abbett remains as manager of the Indianapolis exchange. No successor to Mr. Schnitzer as district manager has as yet been appointed.

Joe Brandt, remains assistant treasurer of Universal and will also have specific charge of serials and news reels. Mr. Brandt will not only look after the distribution and exploitation of serials, but will also keep in close touch with those producing serials. He is now in Universal City.

In building up its sales organization Universal has not overlooked its publicity department. Tarkington Baker, head of the department has added to his New York staff, Margaret Oettinger, formerly with the "Hearts of the World" company; Elizabeth Benneche Peterson, formerly with World and Paralta, J. L. Johnston of the Minneapolis Universal exchange.

Also on a recent tour of exchanges he appointed divisional publicity men. These men and the exchanges with which they are connected are: Irving Mack, Chicago; Maurice Engel, St. Louis; Dean Collins, Portland; F. T. Grenell, Detroit; H. R. Kaull, Kansas City; S. W. Hippler, Buffalo; George H. K. Mitford, Toronto; James H. Cummings, Cleveland; B. A. Mansfield, Pittsburgh; H. T. Pebbles, New Orleans and Stuart Gould, Omaha.

A near-fighting moment in "The Fighting Roosevelts," being distributed by First National Exhibitors Circuit

"The Fighting Roosevelts" Film Completed

IN the last year of his life, Colonel Roosevelt gave permission to Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Productions, Inc., to make a film based on his life, works and war activities of himself and his sons.

This picture, including the final suggestions made by the Colonel, has been completed under the title "The Fighting Roosevelts" and viewed and approved by the relatives and close friends appointed by the Colonel to see the production.

Thus the film world is able to pass on to future generations a complete and authentic biography of the ex-President.

Not only is his life record declared to be written in celluloid, but also most of the outstanding dramatic features of his career are said to find expression in the pictures.

The making of the film was considered of more than commercial importance to Mr. Collins and those who were associated with him in its production. Roosevelt was a Harvard man and Mr. Collins, who also graduated from Harvard, was one of the Colonel's most devoted admirers and supporters.

Since Mr. Collins entered motion pictures it had been one of his great dreams to film the life of Colonel Roosevelt, and the fact that the picture has been completed and available as a lasting memorial to the Colonel is a source of deep gratification to the producer.

Charles Hanson Towne, Managing Editor of McClure's, a close friend of Colonel Roosevelt, was instrumental in securing from the Colonel and his family the authoritative data upon which the film is based. Porter Emerson Browne, the novelist and dramatist, who worked with Mr. Collins on the scenario, was also a close friend of Colonel Roosevelt. William Nigh directed the production and First National Exhibitors Circuit will distribute it.

Charlotte Walker Popular in Fox Picture

According to Fox Film Corporation, exhibitors throughout the country are reporting favorably on R. A. Walsh's production, "Every Mother's Son," starring Charlotte Walker. The exhibitors report that Miss Walker is making the same success in the silent drama as she made on the stage when she was seen in those popular successes, "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and "The Woman."

Clark Starts New Feature

Marguerite Clark has commenced work in the Fifty-sixth Street studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on a new Paramount production, the working title of which is "A Honeymoon for Three." John Robertson is Miss Clark's director and Hugh Ford has directed several of the scenes.

Penn. Censor Board Shocks Billie Rhodes

The first shock that came to Billie Rhodes as a first-run star was the report of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors' view of her "Girl of My Dreams." There are said to be some rather attractive scenes in the first reel of the picture, and Miss Rhodes, as a wild sort of a mountain girl, takes an occasional dip in a secluded pool known only to her director and camera man.

The plot depends quite largely on a surreptitiously photographing of the girl in the pool by a man who is subsequently proud to be her father. In one scene, her brother steals her clothes and she pulls his overalls off, then puts them on and chases him up a hill. When they get home there is another case of 'double and triple exposure.

However, while there are some excellent views of Billie Rhodes, Frankie Bailey and Kitty Gordon, the flashes are said to be so handled as to give no offense, except, perhaps, to the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors.

During her ten weeks as head of the scenario department of Metro's West Coast studios, June Mathis has completed three continuities, one of seven reels and the other two, five; has titled six productions and in-between-times done research work and her Xmas shopping. She claims this as the record for writing for the screen during the period of ten weeks.

War Film Vogue Just Started, Says Laemmle

"THERE has been some talk among a few exhibitors that 'war stuff' was 'through,'" said Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

"It seems this gossip started when a few over-enthusiastic people heard that Germany had signed the armistice which closed the actual fighting in France and Belgium, and in their excitement forgot that the war was such a wondrous, important event in world history that the people of the globe would never lose interest in it, though actual fighting had stopped.

"Is the war picture 'through'? Hardly. It has barely begun.

"A trip across America from one end to another, dozens of talks with leading exhibitors, exchangemen and producers, convince the writer that the war film will never be 'through.'

"Of America's 102,000,000 population, two million went to France to fight the battles of humanity. The actions, the brave deeds accredited to these two million men will not only never be forgotten but will provide stories for innumerable photoplays, magazines, and newspapers and every one of these stories will interest a mighty good percentage of the hundred million people that remained at home and helped win the war 'over here.'

"Though the gigantic guns of autocracy and democracy have been silent for over a month, does it sound at all plausible that the events of the greatest war will ever cease to interest the people of the civilized world?

"The entire world has been given an opportunity to know what war means—the men who went to fight and the people who fought at home with their dollars, their conservation and their sacrifices. It seems only reasonable to assume that the world will never grow tired or lose interest in the war picture."

A Word About Johnson's Cannibal Film

WHAT one of the prominent exhibitors of New York thinks of Martin Johnson's feature film, "Cannibals of the South Seas," depicting adventures among the cannibals of the South Sea Isles, is manifested in the following statement made by Mr. Gosdorfer, manager of the Plaza theatre, Madison avenue and Fifty-ninth street, one of the best "stands" in New York. Mr. Gosdorfer made the statement after realizing a noticeable increase in business without extra effort in the advertising lines. He ran the first five reels of this subject in December, and the last five reels, two weeks later. Here's what he said:

"We did such an immense business at the first showing, and I received so many inquiries from patrons that I went after the second bunch at once. When you're showing to crowded houses it's impossible to keep track of your patrons, but I believe I got back every last person who saw the first group, and the receipts showed that the first comers brought one for every three with them.

"Exhibitors when showing the final installment should be sure to emphasize the fact that it is distinctly different from the first, so as to insure the return of the visitors of the earlier showing. I succeeded fully in making this distinction by announcement at the first showing, as soon as I saw how strong it was going, inviting my patrons to see the remaining reels and indicating that they contained in addition to many new angles the films taken by Mr. Johnson while he and his wife were actually in the hands of the ferocious Nagapate just before their rescue by the British. I also emphasized the 'final installment' phrase in my cards."

Robertson-Cole Company are handling the distributing rights to Mr. Johnson's picture and reports equally encouraging reports from other exhibitors in different parts of the country who have run "Cannibals of the South Seas."

Huns Plotted Control of Films

So Contends Winfield R. Sheehan, General Manager of the Fox Film Corporation, on a Trade Tour

THAT the German military authorities had realized the all-powerful influence of motion pictures upon the popular mind, is the contention of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, of the Fox Film Corporation, who is on a tour of the Fox offices throughout the United States, preparatory to a long visit abroad in the interest of his company.

Mr. Sheehan made his statement in an interview at Portland, Ore., and backed it with data which had come to his knowledge and which at the time was turned over to the Government. The advent of peace now makes it possible to give to the public this additional information of Prussian plotting.

"Early in 1918," explained Mr. Sheehan, "there was formed in Berlin a corporation, with capital stock of $25,000,000, which not only had the approval of the high military command, but was virtually under its direction, since the corporation was to have been subsidized by the Government.

"We discovered through our foreign representatives that Germany had already sent films by submarine into Spain, and that these had been taken to Mexico and South America. Others were sent to the neutral northern countries. It is not unlikely that propaganda films formed an item of the cargo of the submarine 'Deutschland' when its sudden appearance at Baltimore caused a worldwide sensation.

"Thousands of pictures were to be spread through the conquered nations after the war. 'Kultur' was to be their keynote. German science and art and German standards of morals were to be preached under various forms to the people of the Allies.

"The Kaiser and his ring," explained Mr. Sheehan, "did not awaken fully to the vast possibilities of the motion picture until their fall was approaching, and as the hammer blows of General Foch increased during the summer the autocrats had other things to interest them.

"That American producers and exhibitors were not slow to meet any attempt at Prussian propaganda is proven by the release of many patriotic subjects and photoplay stories based on all that is the opposite of Prussian Kultur and its barbarities.

"In 'The Prussian Cur,' William Fox placed before the public an expose of German intrigue from the days of Wilhelm I.

"The wide booking of this feature and its big box office returns everywhere can be translated into terms of thousands of Americans who through it are familiar with the cleverness and the insidiousness of the German diplomatic machinery under the Empire. That this machinery for evil has not even yet ceased operation is the opinion of many Government officials."

First Anna Case Picture Is a Select Special

"THE HIDDEN TRUTH," in which Anna Case, prima donna of grand opera and popular concert singer, makes her first appearance as screen star, has been acquired by Select Pictures Corporation from the International Film Service Company, Inc., and will be released as a Select Special.

This makes the fifth big special to be announced by Select Pictures this season.

Miss Case, the star of "The Hidden Truth," is widely known in opera circles and is one of the Metropolitan Opera Company's favorite prima donnas. This production marks her first appearance on the screen. She is supported in "The Hidden Truth" by Charles Richman, who co-starred with Anna Q. Nilsson in Select's Special, "Over There." He is seen as a New York manufacturer and Miss Case has the role of a Western girl who comes to New York and becomes a leader in society. Others in support of Miss Case are Forrest Robinson, Grace Reals, John Charles, Thomas McGrane, Fred G. Hearn, Frank Wonderly, Madelyn Clare, William Black, and D. L. Don. S. M. Weller prepared the scenario. The production was made under the direction of Julius Steger.

The personnel of the new organization was not given in the announcement. Leonce Perret has been engaged to direct the production and Yvonne Delva will assume the role of Helen O'Neil.

"The Thirteenth Chair" was one of the most successful stage productions running on Broadway last season. Mr. Veiller, the dramatist, is one of the best-known writers for the stage and has given to the theatre some of its best works.

Complete details as to the personnel of the supporting cast, as well as details as to production and method of distribution, are promised shortly.

Medicine Show Prominent in Hamilton's Next

Hale Hamilton's second starring vehicle under the Metro banner, "Johnny on the Spot," written by Shannon Fife and scenarioized by June Mathis, and now in the course of production at the Metro West Coast studios, under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, supervised by Maxwell Karger, director general, gives in replica, the old-fashioned "medicine show" as one of its brightest comedy touches. Louise Lovely is Mr. Hamilton's leading woman. Others in the cast are Lilie Leslie, Ruth Orlamond, Phila McCullough, E. N. Wallack and Neal Hardin. Hardee Kirkland, as Dr. Barnabas Bunyon, heads the medicine show, and Oral Humphreys and Fred Warren are the two ballyhoo men.

Lewis Promises Plenty of Action

Mitchell Lewis reports from the Yosemite Valley, where he is making "Children of Banishment," for the Select Pictures program, that the production is well under way and promises plenty of "pep" and action in the production when finished. A fist fight is said to be the feature of the picture, the action of which is laid in a lumber camp. "Mitch" is opposed in the fight by Arthur Morrison, who was seen in the role of Faro Tolford in "Code of the Yukon," Mr. Lewis' last picture.

The first of the eight productions in which Henry B. Walthall will be presented by the National Film Company of America, "And a Still, Small Voice," was inspired by Mary Baker Eddy's work, "Science and Health."

The thrills and climaxes in Pathe's patriotic serial, "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, are said to reach their highest point in the eleventh episode, entitled "Betwixt Heaven and Earth," scheduled for release December 22d.

The Singapore of Kipling's is shown in No. 24 of the Post Travel Series, released by Pathe December 22d.

After a three weeks' illness with influenza Director Douglas Gerrad has resumed work on Fritz Brunette's latest film story, "Sealed Orders."

Robert McKin, identified with Thomas H. Ince pictures for five years, will make his first appearance under other management in Rex Beach's new production, "The Brand," now under way at the Goldwyn studios in Los Angeles.

Myron Selznick, Who Has Formed His Own Producing Organization

Big First Runs for Vitagraph

J. Stuart Blackton's Production, "The Common Cause," Distributed by Vitagraph. Cites Unusual Bookings

Warren Chandler, in "The Adventure Shop," Vitagraph Picture

ACCORDING to reports received at the main offices of Vitagraph from its various exchanges the Blackton production of "The Common Cause" is scheduled for a solid booking record.

Many first-run runs already made in most of the larger cities are cited as having been enormously successful. A Vitagraph official said that despite the hundreds of bookings on "The Common Cause" that have been in the Vitagraph Company's hands for a number of weeks past, the actual showing of the picture by the different theatres in the big majority of cases is not scheduled until about the middle of January.

At no time has there been the desire on the part of the Vitagraph Company to sacrifice the proper exploitation of the picture or an adequate length of run for an immediate presentation.

In other words, where a theatre found it possible to allow only two or three days for a showing in January, the Vitagraph Company co-operated with the exhibitor and accommodated its booking arrangements so that "The Common Cause" might be launched in each community with the greatest possible return to the exhibitor, it is said.

For this reason, despite the heavy business already written up on "The Common Cause," the month of January will see "The Common Cause" in leading theatres from one end of the country to the other, and the bookings reported as already on the company's books promise a steady showing of the picture way into the spring.

The noteworthy cast which J. Stuart Blackton assembled for "The Common Cause" is heralded as one of the greatest assemblages of dramatic talent any one screen production has ever boasted.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer head this company of artists and in their support are Lawrence Grossmith, Charles and Violet Blackton, Huntley Gordon, Philip Van Loan, Mlle. Marcel and Louis Dean.

In addition, the prologue and epilogue boast the names of Julia Arthur, Marjorie Rambeau, Irene Castle, Effie Shannon and Violet Heming.

Added to these are the names of J. Hartley Manners and Ian Hay Beith as the authors of the story, and Anthony Paul Kelly as the maker of the scenario.

This gathering of talent, both dramatic and literary, welded together by the hand of J. Stuart Blackton, is taken to promise that "The Common Cause" will be one of the outstanding theatre successes of 1919.

Selznick Pictures Brand Re-appears Again

THE Selznick name on motion pictures disappeared more than a year ago when Lewis J. Selznick became president of Select Pictures Corporation, which took over the stars and productions of Selznick Pictures.

This did not meet with the approval of Mr. Selznick's son, and it is now announced that Myron Selznick has just organized Selznick Pictures Corporation and promises that within a very short time the name Selznick will be a familiar one on the screen again.

In certain respects, the policy which Myron Selznick has adopted is the same as that of his father. Selznick Pictures took Clara Kimball Young, Herbert Brenon, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, and Alice Brady off programs and exploited them as Select Pictures stars.

In the same way, Myron Selznick's first star is Olive Thomas, whose work in the Triangle programs is declared to have made thousands of admirers for her. Following his father's methods, Myron will present this star in a series of productions heralded to be far in advance of any of her previous efforts.

With Charles Giblyn as director general, work on production already has been started in California.

The head of the new Selznick Pictures Corporation is said to be well equipped for his enterprise. He held the position of purchasing agent in the former Selznick organization, and this brought him into close touch with all departments.

He learned the inside of the business thoroughly, being constantly coached by his father. Having mastered all intricate details, he accepted the position of studio manager for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, and made a close study of productions.

Nehls Visits West Coast

General business and production affairs of the American Film Company, called R. R. Nehls, general manager for the corporation, to the big coast studios, the day after Christmas.

While at Santa Barbara, Mr. Nehls will look over plans and sites for interesting changes to be made early in the spring.

It is expected that Mr. Nehls will extend his trip to the Pacific coast film country and "Flying A" studios, until late in February.

Cites "Carefully Selected Cast"

Universal Officials Define What the Often Repeated Term "Carefully Selected Cast" Means

UNIVERSAL executives and critics were giving a definition of what the statement, "A carefully selected cast," means, referring to Allen Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity," a Jewel production which was then in its second week at the Broadway theatre, New York.

It has been pointed out that "The Heart of Humanity" was over eleven months in the course of preparation for the screen and it may be added that almost one month was necessary to obtain the particular types Director Holubar insisted upon having.

Dorothy Phillips, the star of the production, was first chosen and her work in the big Jewel feature is taken to prove she is able to enact the role with ease and complete understanding.

As Nanette, Miss Phillips has not only won much praise of her work but she maintains that she never has had a part that she liked so well.

Walt Whitman, who enacts the role of Father Michael, prior of the small Canadian village, critics assert, was never seen to better advantage than in "The Heart of Humanity."

As Lieut. von Eberhard, Hunnish commander, Erich von Stroheim is seen. Mr. von Stroheim's work in "The Heart of Humanity" is said to surpass any of his previous efforts.

Robert Anderson, who became known to film lovers due to his work in "Hearts of the World" as "M'sieu Cuckoo" is seen as the second son of the widow Patricia in "The Heart of Humanity."

Margaret Mann, a woman with a son in France and who, though she had never seen a motion picture camera, possessed the possibilities that Mr. Holubar was seeking as a screen mother, is very evident in "The Heart of Humanity."

Marie Walcamp Is Presented by Universal in a New Serial Called "The Red Glove"

The selection of the children for the Belgian Red Cross scenes required over a week. Director Holubar and several assistants made numerous personal visits to the poorer sections of Los Angeles before they could get the types of children they desired for the big drama. It took much pains and patience to develop these young inexperienced children into screen types but the results of this care and patience are evident.

William Stowell, who plays the hero, John Patricia, in "The Heart of Humanity," was selected only after some deliberation and all of the extras that appeared in the trench scenes were engaged only after careful examination.

men in their respective branches of the business of picture production. Each was selected for their special fitness for their positions over a large list of applicants. Mr. Johnstone's work as scenarist with several of the western producing companies is well known while Mr. Terwilliger, after a career as screen writer, beginning with D. W. Griffith, shortly afterwards gained prominence as a director.

It was no easy undertaking that Messrs. Johnstone and Terwilliger tackled. The majority of the players in the pictures were, and still are, playing in Broadway productions and it was difficult to find a time suitable for all for the work of picture production. It was accomplished, however, and all the players who volunteered their services have nothing but praise for the men who pushed the undertaking through. Mr. Terwilliger was highly praised by David Belasco who loaned his Belasco theatre, its settings, props and lighting equipment for the cause. In his picture all the details of producing a Belasco play are brought to the screen.

All the other work was done in the Estee Studio, New York City, of which Eugene Spitz is owner and active head. It was under his supervision that the rather vast undertaking was made possible.

The executives of the Stage Women's War Relief are desirous of impressing on the exhibiting public the value of these two-reel subjects. Produced by such excellently equipped men and offering casts fairly staggering with celebrities, they see nothing that will prevent success or court failure. Prominent men in the industry who have seen the first five releases have spoken favorably of them, one company official even going so far as to state that they are the best two-reel pictures ever produced, this in regard to production and not taking into consideration the advertising possibilities embodied in the casts.

Next week Mr. Terwilliger will probably begin production on the sixth subject with Ruth Chatterton as the lead. Practically every Broadway star of note is scheduled for appearance in the pictures that will follow and each one of the series will offer the same type of all-star cast.

Stage Women's War Relief Films Screened

NEWS of more than ordinary interest lies in the announcement of a series of two-reel subjects shortly to be released on one of the large programs by the Stage Women's War Relief, a society formed by patriotic women of the stage and screen at the outset of the war for the promotion of the comfort of our soldiers and the war sufferers of Europe. This series will consist of twelve subjects, five of which are already completed, and the entire proceeds will go into the coffers of the War Relief fund. It is to be distinctly understood that these pictures are in no way related to the war as to contents. It is merely that they were produced for a war charity.

These two-reel subjects will bring to the screen the greatest celebrities of the stage, so that each one of them may well be said as containing an all-star cast. For instance, "A Star Over Night" will feature David Belasco surrounded by a cast in which Bruce McRae, Hamilton Revelle, Edward Martindel, Hilda Spong, Elizabeth Risdon, Gladys Morris and Cathleen Nesbit appear, while in "An Honorable Cad" such popular members of the stage profession as Shelley Hull, Edmund Breese, Phoebe Foster, Julia Dean, Mrs. William Farnum and Mme. Yvette Guilbert appear in the principal roles.

These players and those appearing in the other subjects donated their services to the cause for which the pictures were made. The other three already completed are Cyrile Maude in "Winning His Wife," with Violet Heming, Frederick Lloyd, Mrs. Sam Harris, David Bispham, Lila Rhodes and Mrs. Louise Closser Hale in other roles of import; "Fighting Mad," with Maclyn Arbuckle, John McGraw, Dana de Hart (well-known aviator), George A. Stilwell and William Elliott all featured; Nance O'Neil in "The Mad Woman," supported by Tyrone Power, Alfred Hickman, Mildred Holland, Paul Gilmore, Mme. Mathilde Cottrelly, Ben Grauer, Mme. Tamara Sevrskaya and the Russian Cathedral Quartette, now in the play, "Redemption."

All these pictures were adapted for the screen by Calder Johnstone and directed by George Terwilliger, two of the leading Polo's return brings three serial stars to Universal City for new vehicles. Marie Walcamp is working on "The Red Glove," James J. Corbett is ready for the initial episode of his serial and Polo's vehicle will be ready in a few days. It is reported that Mr. Polo brought back with him two trunks filled with loving cups presented by admirers in various cities and his apartment in Hollywood now resembles a jeweler's window.

Fort McArthur Receives Ethel Clayton

In filming Ethel Clayton's latest Paramount picture, "Private Pettigrew's Girl," George Melford, who directed, took Miss Clayton and company to Fort McArthur to get the proper military atmosphere. Following the shooting of the scenes, the commander of the fort presented Miss Clayton and her leading man, Monte Blue, each with a cake.

"Private Pettigrew's Girl" is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story, by Dana Burnet. Will M. Ritchey made the adaptation. Lou Howland was assistant director and Paul Perry photographed.

Reel Tells About Russia

The popular theory that Russia is altogether a land of snow and riots meets quite a refutation in the new Red Cross reel entitled "Russia a World Problem," at General Film exchanges.

This reel was photographed during the recent tour of the American Red Cross Commission to Russia, by Lieutenant Harold Wyckoff who was recently dispatched again to accompany the American troops which entered Russia through Archangel.

Announces "Great Romance" Cast

Screen Classics Will Soon Release
Another Harold Lockwood Production from Finis Fox Story

George D. Baker, Metro Director de Luxe

"THE GREAT ROMANCE" has been titled and assembled and will soon be released as a Screen Classics, according to announcements emanating from Metro offices.

Supporting Harold Lockwood in that production appear Ruby de Remer, Frank Currier, Louis Stern, Joseph Granby, Helen Lindroth, Morgan Thorpe, J. P. Laffey, Franklyn Hanna and Clare Grenville.

Those who have had a glimpse of scenes from the picture assert that the star never appeared to greater advantage. The production was made under the direction of Henry Otto. The story is by Finis Fox.

In recognition especially of her excellent work with Mr. Lockwood in another Screen Classics, Inc. production, Miss de Remer had been engaged to play opposite him. She was also the heroine in Mr. Lockwood's "Pals First," adapted from the stage play of the same name by Lee Wilson Dodd, founded on Francis Perry Elliott's novel.

Another important member of the cast, Frank Currier, has appeared in many previous Metro releases. He was seen most recently in "To Hell With the Kaiser," featuring Lawrence Grant, "Opportunity," which starred Viola Dana; in support of May Allison in "A Successful Adventure" and "Social Hypocrites"; in two Nazimova productions, "Toys of Fate" and "Revelation"; and in "The Brass Check," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

It was the director of this latest Lockwood picture, Henry Otto, who gave Joseph Granby his first real opportunity to show his merit on the screen. The two worked together before in "The Man from Nowhere."

Recent productions in which Mr. Granby was seen are "Peck's Bad Girl," with Mabel Normand; "The Awakening," with Montague Love; and "The Black Monk."

Helen Lindroth may be remembered as one of the company of Kalem players who journeyed to the Holy Land, there to film "From the Manger to the Cross" amid the original scenes.

New Pathe Review Beautified by Coloring

"IN announcing the advent of Pathe Review on January 19 I feel the pride of being associated with a great constructive, educational movement, which will make for progress and general enlightenment," says Mr. Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. "Here the motion picture is fulfilling some of the inspired vision of President Wilson in his Shadow Lawn talk to the representatives of the Motion Picture Industry."

"The Review, as a definite entertainment, establishes a new era in screen entertainment; and so unusual is what we have to offer that I am moved to say it is a wonderland series, in which the best talent in science and art is employed. It is a constant revelation of the world of the invisible and of the most beautiful things that the ordinary eye may not behold; of enchanted journeys to unusual destinations, glorified by the rainbow; of unsuspected mysteries of ordinary things; of the secrets of the wild, sly creatures of the forest, and the denizens of streams and the shadowy abysses of the ocean—and, through the mechanical eye that gazes with understanding into the realm of the infinitely small, it gives an astounding glimpse of the very beginning of the life of moving things."

"Even the most unresponsive person, on beholding this magical procession, is moved to admiration and wonder at the miracles of the cinema. As fittingly has been said, these groups of artistic and educational achievements give the motion picture a new and overwhelming stature and more than ever before establishes it as the greatest instructor, the unequalled medium of human thought and the record of its stupendous, adventuring achievements.

"I can say, with absolute certainty, that the Pathe Review is the greatest popular educational feature ever issued."

George R. Meeker, General Sales Manager, World Pictures

About New Pictures

Raymond Hatton is playing an eccentric "Uriah Heep" sort of part in Bryant Washburn's new Paramount picture, "The Poor Boob." As usual, Hatton has a makeup that excites comment from everyone on the lot and which is said to serve as an almost perfect disguise.

"Breed of Men" is the title selected for William S. Hart's latest. The star, as a daredevil Western sheriff, pits himself against a land shark.

Fred Stone's second Arcraft picture, "Under the Top," which will be released January 12, was written by Anita Loos and John Emerson, and is said to be the story of Stone's early life.

More interesting news of "Japan of Today" is shown in No. 26 of the Post Travel Series which was released by Pathe January 5. It is described as an ideal educational, and shows how Nippon has become a great industrial center.

Donald Crisp, who directed Washburn in "The Way of a Man with a Maid," a Paramount release of December 29, is piloting the star through "The Boob," which was written by Margaret Mayo and Zillah Covington and scenarized by Gardner Hunting.

"Out of the Shadow," the newest Paramount production starring Pauline Frederick, which was released January 5, has a setting which is an exact reproduction of Part 1, Court of General Sessions, in Criminal Courts Building, New York City.

A magazine story written by May Edginton has been chosen as the next William Fox Excel Picture for Virginia Pearson. It is entitled "He That Is Without Sin."

Town and Country Films, Inc., has just completed the sixth of its series of Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg comedies, "Impropaganda," with Olin Howland and Eleanor Masters featured.

Borneo, one of the largest islands in the world, is the subject of the 23rd of the Post Travel Series, released by Pathe December 15.

Rosemary Theby is again in a Metro cast, and in support of May Allison in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," a new production, just starting at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood.

"The Captain's Captain," which is the second offering in the Alice Joyce Star Series, Vitagraph, is scheduled for release on December 30th. Supporting Miss Joyce are Arthur Donaldson, Percy Standing, Julia Swayne Gordon, Eulalie Jensen and Maurice Costello.

"Over the Rhine with Charlie" is the title of a new one-reel special comedy released by Universal and made by Pat Sullivan.

In Elsie Ferguson's newest Arcraft picture, "The Marriage Price," which was filmed under the tentative title, "For Sale," Zelda Crosby, long associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be seen in a part.

Maria Thompson Daviess, one of the best known of contemporary American novelists, is the author of "The Golden Bird," a story which Adrian Gil-Spear adapted to the screen for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and which, released December 29th under the title, "Little Miss Hoover, serves as a starring vehicle for Marguerite Clark.

Selwyn Writes One for De Mille

Director General of Famous Players-Lasky to Produce Story by Edgar Selwyn—Denies Rumor of Resignation

CECIL B. DEMILLE, director general, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles this week after a brief business trip to New York. His brother, William C. De Mille, made the trip with him, and together they did a scenario for one of Mr. De Mille's forthcoming Arcraft productions. This was accomplished on the trip from Los Angeles to New York. Returning to Los Angeles, Director De Mille was accompanied by Edgar Selwyn, theatrical producer and playwright, whose outline of a plot for an intended stage production, sounded so good to Mr. De Mille that, using Mr. De Mille's own words, "I kidnapped Mr. Selwyn, plot and all, and on our trip West we laid the foundation for, what in my opinion, will be one of the greatest pictures of my career as director."

"I will start work on the picture immediately," continued Mr. De Mille, and I sincerely believe that Mr. Selwyn's idea is going to materialize on the screen, in the surprise of my career as director for the silent drama. Mr. Selwyn's interest in this matter doesn't mean that he has severed connections with his other interests, but it does mean that he has written a wonderful story which I am more than anxious to see in pantomime.

"I was more than surprised to find such flourishing conditions prevailing in the industry on my trip East. During my five years of producing activities, I have never experienced such promising conditions or conditions more indicative of future successes.

"The rumors that have been circulated in the West pointing to Jesse L. Lasky's and my resignations from active interest in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, are entirely without foundation and absolutely false. Our relations with the other executive heads have always been most pleasant and will continue if my vision of the future is clear. Any statement that either Mr. Lasky, my brother or myself are leaving the organization may be branded as absolutely false.

"While I was East, I procured the screen rights to two big Broadway successes for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. These two stage successes will be adapted to the screen and produced under my direction for the Arcraft program, after I have finished the production of Mr. Selwyn's story. I had a most successful trip and am now prepared to get in the harness again and 'shoot' pictures."

With this announcement comes word that Edward Jose is progressing rapidly with the scenes for Famous Players-Lasky's Salvation Army picture. After several unavoidable delays, Mr. Jose says that he is "hard at it."

Bryant Washburn is almost finished with "The Poor Boob," directed by Donald Crisp, and will resume work at once on a new comedy drama. Ethel Clayton is doing the army camps and forts around the coast on her new picture for Paramount. "Private Pettigrew's Girl," with George Melford at the helm. She has made scenes at Fort McArthur and at Camp Kearny as well as some theatrical episodes at the Majestic theatre, Los Angeles, and at the studio, where a complete musical comedy was staged. Monte Blue is leading man.

"Breed of Men," Bill Hart's Next Arcraft

William S. Hart's latest Arcraft picture, "Breed of Men," on the Arcraft program for the early part of this month, was written by J. G. Hawks, who has done so many Western dramas for the star. It was produced under the direction of Mr. Hart. Bill has the role of a sheriff-to-be of a little town in Arizona and it is said to be the pride of all the star's Western pictures.

Artistic Sets Appear in "Everywoman"

Success in the direction of a vaudeville fragment, "Everywoman," first brought recognition to the skill of William Worthington, who presided over the making of Sessue Hayakawa's latest picture, "Bonds of Honor," which was produced by the Haworth Picture Corporation to be distributed by the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Mr. Worthington's genius for artistic and suggestive detail, which first attracted attention in "Everywoman," is given full scope in making the Japanese sets of this picture.

Bessie Barriscale Burgles in Latest Picture

A bit of burglary is accomplished by Bessie Barriscale in her late production, "All of a Sudden Norma." She prefers a little safer means of descending the outside wall than the usual improvised rope made of bed sheets.

A rope and tackle of the standard type is employed, with Albert Colby, playing the part of Cuthbert Van Zelt, at the end of it.

"All of a Sudden Norma" was made by the B. B. Features, Inc., and will be distributed by the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Grace Cunard Featured

Grace Cunard is featured in "After the War," a Universal Special Attraction, released January 13. This feature replaces "Roped," featuring Harry Carey, the marketing date of which has been postponed.

"After the War" is adapted from a story by Kingsley Benedict, Universal character actor and has been produced by Joseph DeGrasse. The film play tells a story of how love lifted a woman and man out of despondency over a woman's sacrifice to save her lover from being executed during the war.

Pauline Frederick to the West

Goldwyn Star Finished First Goldwyn and Then Leaves for Culver City Studios, Near Los Angeles

Mr. Mack was busy almost until training time, acting in his play "The Big Chance," in which he made an unquestioned success both as author and actor. In fact he left the cast barely twelve hours before leaving for the coast.

Miss Frederick's contract with Goldwyn is said to be the first under which she has had such intimate co-operation with her husband in her work. Mr. Mack has been in the cast of one of her previous plays but never until the picture just finished did he collaborate to the extent of writing the scenario, playing the most important male role and assisting in the details of direction.

At the Goldwyn studios in California Miss Frederick and Mr. Mack will work together all the time. He is taking several manuscripts with him and has already begun polishing the scenario of Miss Frederick's next picture. His functions in the Goldwyn scenario department will be advisory and constructive.

The first Pauline Frederick picture that Goldwyn will release shortly is promised to be the most novel and interesting of all those in which she has been seen, both pictorially and dramatically.

It was made from a successful Broadway play written by one of the four most experienced American dramatists. But it is expected to be even better on the screen, because the story is one that can be depicted ever so much more vividly and completely by the camera than the limitations of the spoken drama would permit.

In making the screen version, Willard Mack has grasped this advantage for all it is worth. Consequently, the character which Miss Frederick impersonates is declared to be ever more real and understandable than she was in the acted play. The story has become much more human, much more plausible and the motives much simpler and more logical.

The play is announced as having a genuine social value or historic significance, full of the American spirit, which is typified by the character of the girl played by Miss Frederick herself.

Bara's Current Release "The Light"

Theda Bara's current release on Fox Standard Pictures' program is titled "The Light," produced under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. The plot action centers around the character of a woman known as "the wickedest woman in Paris," whose regeneration comes about through the efforts of an artist who gets the inspiration for his greatest work, a painting of the Madonna, from her. The action is laid in Paris and Director Edwards took his company to New Orleans for authentic French settings.

Chet Franklin to Resume Work on Coast

Director Chet M. Franklin, brother of Sidney Franklin, director for Norma Talmadge, spent the Holidays in New York, prior to leaving for Los Angeles to start work after an absence of several months in the army, where he and his assistant, Nate C. Watt, have been making instruction pictures for the United States Government. Mr. Franklin and Mr. Watt were both discharged recently from the Army.

"Under Four Flags" Having Big Success

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS," the Government's Victory picture, which is the most recent release of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, is highly praised by exhibitors, according to letters sent to the offices of the Division of Films following the presentation in the several cities.

Commenting on the success of the picture in New York in its runs at the Rialto and Rivoli, S. F. Rothapfel wrote: "'Under Four Flags' is listed among our important successes at the two theatres. The capacity business for a simultaneous run in both houses was entirely without precedent and is a matter of motion picture history."

Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, wrote: "The writer cannot endorse the production too strongly, either from the point of interest it holds or as to box-office value. 'Under Four Flags' is a box-office attraction of the highest order."

Barrett S. McCormick, manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis; Frank W. Bu-

ler, manager of the Stanley, Philadelphia; Harry Crandall, of the Metropolitan, Washington, D. C., and the management of the principal picture houses in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Dayton and other cities all praised this production.

An official of the Division of Films said: "From the remarkable success and proven drawing power of 'Under Four Flags,' it is perhaps plain to all exhibitors that the public is still more than anxious to witness war pictures of this kind. A number of prominent men of the industry have recently written articles on the question of war pictures, unanimously agreeing that they are still in demand with the public and have a drawing power second to no other kind of attraction. It is certain that this great Government picture, that lends itself so readily to presentation and exploitation, stands in a class alone among war pictures."

"Under Four Flags" was released through the World Film Corporation January 6 with the co-operation of the Division of Films.

Exhibitors' Mutual Cites January Releases

THE Exhibitors' Mutual, in addition to their four regular releases, will offer a special on January 26, written and directed by Ralph Ince for the Affiliated Distributing Corporation. It is called "The Eleventh Commandment," starring Lucille Lee Stewart.

Among the other stars of the January list is Bessie Barriscale, who brings her familiar zest to the role of an amateur lady Raffles in "All of a Sudden Norma," for release January 5.

In the offering of January 12, William Desmond, as the star of "Life's a Funny Proposition," has a problem on his hands to know what to do with a spare Belgian baby wished on him under compromising circumstances.

Sassue Hayakawa has an excellent opportunity to exhibit his skill as the depictor of two entirely differently roles in

"Bonds of Honor," for release January 19.

One of the twin brothers he presents is wayward and lacking the courage necessary to expiate with his life a crime by which he has tarnished the honor of his family, the other is austere and self-sacrificing. The latter character, slow-moving and somber until forced by dramatic pressure to swift action.

In "Hoop-La," Billie Rhodes has a boisterous, rollicking medium as a circus girl. This picture will be issued January 26. It was produced by the National Film Corporation of America and is released through the Affiliated Distributing Corporation and distributed by Exhibitors Mutual exchanges.

W. C. Cabanne Talks on "Fighting Through"

W. Christy Cabanne, who is the producer, director and author of "Fighting Through," a story of adventure, for distribution on January 27 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the Pathe exchanges, is a native of the South. He received his education at the Culver Military Academy and his early career was spent in the United States navy.

Mr. Cabanne's idea for the story of "Fighting Through," which is built around the South of today, was not one of those sudden inspirations. Rather it was an idea born of observation during his navel service. Says Mr. Cabanne:

"My service in the United States Navy proved to me that the North and South divided and reunited by the sword of war was the biggest theme an American author could write upon. The theme of a reunited North and South seems fraught with splendid possibilities. Nearly always when an author of the stage or screen goes South for his locale, he serves us a dish of Civil War, frequently dragged in, hashed and re-hashed until the subject has grown stale and musty.

"Now, as a Southerner, I think we ought, except in a psychologic sense, to get away from that overworked, romantic Civil War period. It seems that everybody began to love us Southerners after we were defeated."

"Fighting Through" presents E. K. Lincoln in the difficult role of a hero who must sacrifice some of the audience's sympathy in the beginning, only to regain it gloriously in the end.

"Quality Before Quantity" Is Blackton Slogan

It is the opinion of J. Stuart Blackton that one of the slogans of the motion picture industry for 1919 should be "quality before quantity," this to insure the artistic success and consequent propriety which should attend the business during this first after-war year.

"The question of quality vs. quantity in production is, in my opinion," said Mr. Blackton, "the basis of the reconstruction which the industry is now undergoing. It is the aim of every producer to make better pictures. He realizes that the day when he could rely on 'any old film' to get the money and satisfy the 'fan' has passed.

"The trade press has helped change the viewpoint of the spectator and exhibitor alike, and their sense of observation and comparison has done the rest."

Shows Transport Aground

The story of the wreck on Fire Island bar of the Army transport Northern Pacific is told in detail by the Pathe News, two of whose camera men were early on the scene after the ship went aground.

It is a big feature, thrilling with interest as the work of rescue is under way, the great sweep of the tumbling, winter sea with the disabled giant pounding on the sands, which hold her fast.

The vehicle of Louis Bennison's screen production, "Oh, Johnny!" was shown for the first time at a week's pre-release run in the big Victoria theatre, Philadelphia.

It is declared that the star's cinema debut drew from critics and public the same praise accorded his work in the stage play.

"Oh, Johnny!" was produced by the Betzwood Film Company, of Philadelphia, and is released through Goldwyn.

Clara Whipple Writes Story for Hayakawa

Clara Whipple, who has been seen on both stage and screen, has turned author. Sessue Hayakawa's latest picture, "Bonds of Honor," produced by Haworth Picture Corporation for release through Exhibitors' Mutual, is an adaptation from a story by Miss Whipple. It deals with German intrigue in Japan.

Goldwyn Orders More Ford Weekly Prints

UNDER the Goldwyn auspices, the Ford Educational Weekly form the present outlook will soon be working 250 single reel prints of each weekly release, this being a greater number of prints of a sustained weekly release than has ever before been used in the history of the motion picture industry, according to reports from the Goldwyn offices.

Pre-release of "What Uncle Sam Will Do for Two Cents," the first issue of the Ford Educational Weekly through the Goldwyn organization, was held in various parts of America for the week beginning January 5, and the especial timeliness of this pictorial record of the operations of our Federal postoffice department at a moment when the entire public knows that domestic postage will return to two cents an ounce is said to have made the initial picture challenge interest everywhere.

The Stanley Company of Philadelphia, representing the Mastbaum motion picture exhibiting interests, was the largest organization to sign a blanket contract for the Ford Educational Weekly during the past few days. Fifty seven contracts represented the initial booking for this organization, representing that number of houses.

The Comerford chain of theatres in the Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, region of Pennsylvania likewise signed their contracts with the Goldwyn Philadelphia office.

"Common Cause" Gets Big Circuit Bookings

J. STUART BLACKTON'S production, "The Common Cause," which is being released through Vitagraph, is rolling up big new bookings to an extent that promises to make this production an early record breaker, according to Vitagraph.

Among the bookings recorded, at the Home Office this week were Poli's New England Circuit and B. S. Moss's Greater New York houses. These bookings are considered all the more noteworthy because they are said to have resulted from successful runs of the picture at various theatres throughout the country.

W. A. Trus of the Strand theatre, Hartford, Conn., after running "The Common Cause," wired the Vitagraph Home Office as follows:

"Common Cause playing to capacity business despite inclement weather. Production enthusiastically received. Pleasing patrons immensely. Superior to any of your specials yet released."

The Riviera theatre in Chicago sent this wire to the Vitagraph Home Office:

"Congratulations on your production 'The Common Cause.' We opened at Riviera theatre December nineteenth for four days run. Greatest picture we have yet shown. Proving to be biggest success of the season. We welcome more productions equal to this."

The New theatre in Baltimore is reported by Vitagraph as having rolled up a record with it and the beautiful new Brevoort theatre in Brooklyn closed the first week of the New Year with enormous business on this production, it is also stated.

Marie Walcamp's Work Is Hazardous Occupation

Marie Walcamp, whose daring work in the serials, "The Red Ace" and "The Lion's Claw" will be remembered, has just finished the fifth episode of the new Universal serial, "The Red Glove."

Miss Walcamp's path through the cinema field is declared to have been beset by dangers. Vastly different from her musical comedy career has been her headlong pursuit of excitement and danger. is said to be evinced by her daring in the motion picture serials she has starred in.

Five of Them—All Popularized

Select's Five for January—Four Adaptations from Former Stage Hits—One Presents Opera Star

SELLECT'S calendar of releases for the first month of the new year, singles out five productions, one of which is a Select Special. All five productions are headed by acknowledged stars of filmland and four of the productions are adaptations from "best sellers" in the way of entertainment.

"Cheating Cheaters," a big stage hit of last season, has been photodramatized with Clara Kimball Young in the featured role. "Who Cares?" Cosmo Hamilton popular serial story which appeared in the Green Book, has been adapted to the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers, and Constance Talmadge is seen in the featured role. "The Belle of New York," a Broadway hit of many years ago has been adapted to the screen and presents Marion Davies in the featured role. "The Indestructible Wife," with Alice Brady featured, is adapted from a stage success of two years ago.

Anna Case's picture, "The Hidden Truth," which has been announced as a January release, marks this star's first appearance on the screen, after many years of success on operatic and concert stage. In "The Hidden Truth" Miss Case is seen as the orphan of a western mining camp, who through various circumstances, and a hidden truth, becomes the wife of a wealthy eastern manufacturer. The picture was directed by Julius Steger and the scenario was written by S. M. Weller.

"Who Cares?" Constance Talmadge's January attraction, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, is another of Cosmo Hamilton's powerful dramas, and, like "Scandal," provides Miss Talmadge with a congenial role. It is a story of smart, rapid city life, in which the reader, or rather, the spectator, is carried from the quiet of a small country town to the pulsating life of a great city, and later back to the little rural village. Miss Talmadge's leading man in "Who Cares?" is Harrison Ford. Walter Edwards directed the picture.

Clara Kimball Young comes to the screen in January in Max Marcin's big stage success, "Cheating Cheaters." Anna Q. Nilsson, who recently starred in Select's special, "Over There," Jack Holt, Tully Marshall, Mayme Kelso and other popular artists appear in support. "Cheating Cheaters," was directed by Allan Dwan. It tells the story of a clever girl who becomes one of a band of famous crooks. In the end the cheaters are cheated in their own way.

Alice Brady's January picture "The Indestructible Wife," a screen adaptation of Frederic and Fanny Hatton's stage play of two seasons ago. With this picture Charles Maigne reaches the third of the "Brady-Maigne" productions for which Mr. Maigne has written the scenarios and also directed.

January will also bring to the screen Marion Davies in her third Select picture, "The Belle of New York," a screen version by Eugene Walter's famous stage play of twenty years ago by Hugh Morton and Gustave Kerker. During the past two decades "The Belle of New York," which was originally produced at the Casino Theatre in New York, has been played in a dozen different languages, and at the present time is enjoying another revival in London. In the screen version Miss Davies is seen as the Salvation Army lass, who later becomes the belle of the town. Julius Steger directed the picture and Garfield Thompson wrote the scenario.

"The Hushed Hour" Plays Grauman's Los Angeles

Harry Garson's production of "The Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet, plays Grauman's theatre at Los Angeles just two weeks ahead of the Garson-Neilan ten-reel production of "The Unpardonable Sin," also starring Blanche Sweet.

The latter production will play Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles early in February, and then Mr. Garson will hurry East to attend to the Broadway premiere of "The Unpardonable Sin."

Mr. Garson's New York representative said that there was nothing further to add to Clara Kimball Young's published resignation from the C. K. Y. Corporation, which has been releasing her pictures through Select Pictures, except that her resignation was absolute and final.

Mollie King to Face the Camera Again

Mollie King, now headlining at the Century Grove, and formerly star in vaudeville and on the screen, is considering four offers to return to the screen, it is announced this week. It is said that she will sign with one of the larger companies. She will not leave the Century Grove, but will combine the two.

Wm. W. Brooks Will Serve Producing Companies

William W. Brooks, who has been identified with the motion picture business for the past ten years as manager, producer and director, has been doing Government work since the United States entered the war and recently resigned his Government position to go back to active work in the movies under the name of William W. Brooks Co., 1465 Broadway, Suite 402.

The company's intentions are to furnish stars, directors, cameramen and supporting casts for all producing companies. Mr. Brooks is extremely optimistic, stating the productions of this coming year will out-class any previous year's productions in the motion picture business.

Contracts have been and are being closed, it is said, with stars and screen artists of international reputation; and negotiations are now declared to be under way for the placing of several women stars.

Negotiations have already been opened with several companies, it is stated, to secure Miss Beulah Poynter, the stage and screen star.

Social Scene for "The Lightning Raider"

"The Counterplot" is the title of the second episode of Pearl White's new Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider," and it enables Miss White, as the Raider, to shine in the most exclusive social circles of New York in her efforts to secure the dreaded ebony block which Wu Fang has taken from her.

After securing the ebony block from Wu Fang in his underground den, Lightning and Tom Norton again lose it as Wu Fang follows them to Tom's apartment and forces them to give it up at the point of a revolver.

Japanese Officials Study U. S. Film Producing

Accompanied by Marquis T. Mayeda and Y. Yonemura, Baron Minoru Hirata, former Japanese Ambassador to Russia, is in the United States studying film production, distribution and exhibition by request of his government.

The film industry in Japan has presented such unusual means of educating the Nipponese that the government is putting out features and short educational subjects to disseminate democratic ideals as propaganda.

Immediately after arriving on the Pacific Coast the Nipponese went to Universal City, Cal., where they spent several days visiting the studios, meeting the players and obtaining data on film production.

Mary MacLaren and Harry Carey acted as escorts for the party, and after considerable persuasion the baron and marquis consented to pose for several hundred feet of moving pictures with the stars.

After leaving Universal City the delegation visited various Western cities studying distribution and exhibiting conditions.

Baron Hirata stated that there is a great demand for American films in Japan, and that in Yokahama, Tokio, Nagasaki and Port Arthur the film theatres played to capacity all of the time regardless of what was shown.

Talmadge Enlarges Studio

The Norma Talmadge Film Corporation has purchased the six-story red-brick building at 324 East Forty-eighth Street, adjoining the Norma Talmadge studios at 318 East Forty-eighth, and work will shortly be started to convert this flat-house building into a new wing of the studios.

When the renovations are completed, the Norma Talmadge studios will have a frontage of one hundred and twenty-five feet, which means that this star is to own the largest of any of the downtown motion picture studios in New York City.

This purchase, with the large expenses which must necessarily ensue in making the alterations, putting in additional fixtures, apparatus, etc., is another move on Joseph M. Schenck's part which is quite in accordance with his determined policy to give Miss Talmadge even bigger pictures and better productions than ever.

Keefe Champions Longer Runs

Draws Comparison Between Runs in Los Angeles and New York—Griffith to Put Four More Through Paramount

WILLIAM KEEFE, manager of productions for D. W. Griffith, paid his first visit to New York City during the last three weeks, during which time he was concerned in settling various details of the producer's business here. During his stay here MOTION PICTURE NEWS secured his opinion on picture presentation in various parts of the country which is of particular interest considering that it comes from such a reliable source.

Mr. Keefe is of the opinion that motion picture theatre managers of New York fail to reap the full profit possible in a feature production, particularly the first run houses of Broadway, the Rialto, Strand and Rivoli. Speaking with respect to Mr. Griffith's latest production, "The Greatest Thing in Life," Mr. Keefe said: "In Los Angeles this picture opened at Clune's Auditorium and has already played there for a period of four weeks and to crowded houses. Here in New York it played at the Stand for one week and to excellent business also. Now why shouldn't the run have been extended here so that both the management of the theatre and the producer might profit?"

The interviewer suggested to Mr. Keefe that the scarcity of spoken plays in Los Angeles as compared to New York caused the difference in the length of the runs. "That, of course, deserves consideration," he continued, "but so does the size of this city as compared with that of Los Angeles. Its number of playhouses is greater, far greater, but so is its population. I think that the relative sizes and the relative number of theatres in each city about balance things up."

"The point I want to make clear is this. A picture such as 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' or any other good feature picture for that matter, earns more first run money in Los Angeles than it does in New York. Certainly there is a flaw in the proceedings somewhere. In proportion there are as many picture fans in New York as there are in the Western city, disregarding plays, vaudeville and burlesque altogether. Why, then, should a New York presentation be limited to a week while a Los Angeles presentation may run four, five or six weeks, its natural run?"

"The Rivoli management demonstrated the strength of this argument," continued Mr. Keefe, "when it rebooked 'Under Four Flags' for a week after it had already played at both the Rothapfel houses. The Strand established a precedent in its history when it retained Charlie Chaplin's 'Shoulder Arms' for a second week, though, to be sure, this was only three reels. These were two unusual pictures, to be sure, but no more unusual than this latest of Mr. Griffith's productions. I claim that this offering would have made something of a record for a picture of its length in a special house, but that is beyond the point. It should have been retained at the theatre where it was exhibited despite the fact that the rule of the Strand is a weekly change. A picture in a special house has a hard time of it here unless it be elaborate enough to warrant higher prices. But in a popular priced picture house, one with a name and reputation such as possessed by the Strand a meritorious picture could go for more than one week and show a bigger profit. It is this condition of picture presentation that I sincerely hope we are coming to in the future. It narrows down to the old cry of 'Longer Runs.'"

Mr. Keefe also spoke interestingly on what he believed to be the new age of pictures. "Producers in general have got to get around to giving the public a higher grade of picture than they have during the past year," he said. "If pictures are to assume their proper place they must be improved. It is an intellectual age in which we live, an age in which the average mind is versed on a variety of different affairs, political, international, domestic, literary and entertainment. The war has caused this rise and it is up to the producer to keep up with his public."

Mr. Keefe said that D. W. Griffith's present contract called for four more pictures to be distributed through the Paramount-Artcraft organization.

Theatre Used as Studio

Through the courtesy of James K. Hackett, lessee of the Criterion theatre, New York City, and Messrs. Smith and Golden, managers of "Three Wise Fools," the play now running at that theatre, J. Coming Program Offerings

Seven Announced by Vitagraph

"Lion and the Mouse," First New Year's Special—Releases to March 10th—12 Companies Working

FEBRUARY 24 will mark the release of Vitagraph's first special for the new year. "The Lion and the Mouse," a screen version of Charles Klein's famous stage success, with Alice Joyce in the featured role, will be given to the public on that date.

Others on the Vitagraph program for the first three months of the year are "The Enchanted Barn," starring Bessie Love, for January 27; "The Highest Trump," with Earle Williams, February 3; "Fortune's Child," featuring Gladys Leslie, February 10; "Silent Strength," starring Harry Morey, February 17; "The Girl Question," with Corinne Griffith, March 3, and "The Wishing Ring Man," with Bessie Love, March 10. Vitagraph announces that there are twelve companies finishing productions for future release.

"The Enchanted Barn" presents Bessie Love in the role of a plucky little stenographer in a big city to provide her invalid mother with a house in the country. She discovers a barn that is more elegant than their cramped city home, and her rental of this structure touches the heart of the rich owner's son, who makes life happy for mother and daughter.

"The Wishing Ring Man," with the same star in the leading role, is now in process of production.

The Earle Williams offering, "The Highest Trump," according to reports, contains some of the most fetching aerial scenes ever filmed. The story deals with the adventures of an American "ace" with love and duty in an entertaining clash.

In "Fortune's Child," Gladys Leslie appears as a waif whose belief in fairy tales leads her into strange adventures.

Harry T. Morey's new production, "Silent Strength," is said to be the most unusual play in which Mr. Morey has ever appeared. The story is one of self-sacrifice on the part of a cousin whose relative, his living image, weds the girl he loves through deceit.

Corinne Griffith is now finishing her latest picture, "The Girl Question." It tells of the coldly critical studies of woman on the part of a young novelist, who chooses a fashion shop girl as a model.

Five of the twelve companies now at work in Vitagraph's Eastern and Western studios are feature organizations, headed by Earle Williams, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith, Bessie Love and Gladys Leslie. Two are working at the Hollywood studios—Earle Williams and Bessie Love companies.

Two special companies are busy on super-productions, one being the Alice Joyce picture, "The Lion and the Mouse," and the other the Bushman-Bayne company, in their first Vitagraph offering. There are two serial companies at work, the William Duncan aggregation, in which the director-star is supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, and the Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway company. Both of these are on the Pacific Coast. Larry Semon, Montgomery and Rock, and Jimmy Aubrey are at work on comedy productions.

Interesting Views Promised by Holmes

What may be expected from the forthcoming Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures, may be derived from the following information concerning the activities of Mr. Holmes in England, France and Italy, during the past several months. He has visited the aviation fields, military cooking schools, war dog schools, experimental grounds for tanks; he has filmed the activities of the English navy in Irish and English waters, the war activities of English women, as chauffeurs, conductors, police, mail carriers, munition workers and Y. M. C. A. workers.

"Camping Out" Arrives

The experiences of the unfortunate Roscoe Arbuckle while camping out next door to the tent of a beautiful young wife who has deserted her husband, just as Fatty has left his wife, are said to be excruciatingly funny in "Camping Out," the Paramount-Arbuckle picture released January 5.

Catalina Island affords a wonderful background for the picture, with the mountains and the sea and the quaint streets of Avalon.

The mothers and relatives of the two million American boys who landed in France to end the reign of Kaiserism will find interesting snap shots of the boys on their way home in the new American Red Cross single-reel picture entitled, "Homeward Bound," a General Film release.

This picture presents the customary experience of the average soldier ordered home. It is said to teem with humor and displays the half sentimental regard for France which imbued American fighters.

It begins with scenes of the last of the great Red Cross warehouses on the American front and the winding up affairs of the last of the long link of hospitals built by the American Red Cross, in the wake of America's advancing arms.

And it portrays the departure of several hundred Red Cross ambulance drivers who had survived the perils of nearly four years on the battle fronts of Europe.

U. S. A. Series Releases Third Two-Reeler

"Horses of War," the third two-reeler of the U. S. A. Series, presented by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information and handled by the World Film Corporation, will be released January 20, following the first two pictures, "If Your Soldier's Hit" and "Wings of Victory," released December 23 and January 6, respectively.

The third picture of the series shows how the horse still holds his place of honor on the field of battle.

Paramount Describes Latest Bray Pictograph

In describing the Paramount-Bray Pictograph released January 12, it is stated that the beauties of the bays and mountains about Leeward Islands is wonderful to contemplate.

These islands are supposed to be the landing place of Columbus, and the picture shows that the natives appear to be a mixture of white, black and Indian blood.

Because a barrel is the best suited shipping package to send supplies to our boys in France, the demand for barrels has taxed the facilities of the barrel-making plants to the utmost.

This issue of "the magazine on the screen" shows how all the different parts are made.

Keenan Values the Story

That a good story is essential to a picture's full measure of success has always been the contention of Frank Keenan, America's character actor, whose latest starring medium, "The Midnight Stage," was released by Pathe January 12.

In fact, he has held that the story is the entire thing; that the most skillful setting and the best art of the actor avail nothing with material that is structurally bad.

Star Introduces Fashions

Two of the high spots in "Who Cares?" Constance Talmadge's Select Picture for January, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, are said to be a fashionable display of surf costumes and a brilliant cafe scene copied from one of the most famous places in America.

The beach scenes in "Who Cares?" are numerous, and in them Miss Talmadge introduces several decidedly modish bathing costumes.

Lehrman-Fox Released

"Her First Knight," the latest Sunshine Comedy to be made under the personal supervision of Henry Lehrman and directed by Fred Fishback will be released by the Fox Film Corporation on January 19. The picture is described as a typical Henry Lehrman production.

Star's Uncompleted Pictures to be Finished

THE last completed production, "The Great Romance," made by the late Harold Lockwood before his death, will be released on the Screen Classics, Inc., program, this month, according to an announcement made by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro. "The Great Romance" was the last of the four big features completed by the late Metro star for the Screen Classics, Inc., program. "Pals First" was the first of these, released some months ago, and according to reports received at the Metro offices it has met with unprecedented success.

At the time of his death Mr. Lockwood was working on the fifth production for Screen Classics. Mr. Rowland announces that this production will be finished and promises a surprise in the original ending for which he states plans have been made. The title has not been announced. About three-fourths of this production had been taken at the time of the star's death. Mr. Rowland announces that he has decided to release all of the productions made by Mr. Lockwood before his death.

"The Great Romance" presents the late star in the role of a clean, energetic young American with democratic principles, who believes himself an American until he is informed that he owes allegiance to a foreign country and that his return to his native land is demanded. He consents to go when he learns that his sweetheart has been forced to go. While there he becomes the center of a series of exploits by a revolutionary element. After the death of the king he is proclaimed heir to the throne.

In the supporting cast are seen Ruby de Remer, Joseph Granby, Frank Currier, Helen Lindroth, Claire Granville, Louis Stern, Franklyn Hanna, and J. P. Laffey. Finis Fox wrote the story and Henry Otto directed.

Keenan Heads Pathe Program of January 13

FRANK KEENAN heads the Pathe program January 13 in "The Midnight Stage," an adaptation to far Western setting of "The Lyons Mail," one of the favorite dramas of the late Henry Irving, and in which Mr. Keenan made a stage success.

It is released as a Pathe Extra Selected Star Photoplay and is directed by Ernest C. Warde and interpreted by a special cast, including Mignon Anderson, Maude George, Charles Gunn, Joseph J. Dowling Thomas Guise, Wadsworth Harris and Ernest C. Warde.

Episode No. 2 of "The Lightning Raider," the Pearl White serial, is called "The Counterplot" and sustains the promise of the first installment in swift action.

Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard have a riotously happy medium in the Rolin comedy, "Wanted 5,000."

"Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, with Sheldon Lewis and Charles

Hutchison, reaches its fourteenth episode in "The Code of Hate."

The Post Travel Series No. 27 deals with well contrasting views of Shanghai, the chief port of China. With this release the series comes to an end.

Official War Review No. 29 offers liberal "shots," showing the activities of the four Allies' armies and is full of action and excitement.

Screen Magazine Appeals to the Women

Universal Screen Magazine, No. 98, just released, has, its editors claim, a particular appeal to the women folk who follow films.

A prominent eastern exponent of wrestling, boxing and fencing for women demonstrates the finer points of the sciences. Zalud, the designer of fashion, also shows women how many kinds of ribbons may be effectively used in various garments of milady's wardrobe.

Inject Showmanship Says Rolfe

Producer of Houdini's Serial, "The Master Mystery," Urges Real Showmanship in Exploiting Motion Pictures

B. A. ROLFE, who produced the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," for Octagon Films, Inc., is a firm believer in injecting showmanship in the production of motion pictures.

"It is not enough for a producer to make good pictures," Mr. Rolfe says; "the producer must make pictures which are not only good, but which have the quality of showmanship in them. Showmanship is that element which for any number of well-defined reasons makes an article of entertainment readily salable.

"Putting Houdini with his feats of escape from restraint into films, for instance, was showmanship. Houdini stands alone in his line of work—the peer of all escape-tologists without a rival even in the offing.

"Though for many years he appeared as a headliner in the big-time vaudeville houses in the largest cities all over the world, Houdini is known not only in every congested center, but in every town and village. To 'Houdini' out of a perplexing situation has become a popular simile for journalists, statesmen and laymen. Houdini's name in such a connection appears in the congressional records and has been used by war correspondents in their dispatches.

"There is a peculiar public curiosity surrounding a mystifier. Perhaps it is because of a desire to discover how a mystifier's tricks, if tricks they be, are done. Whatever the reason, the facts are as mentioned.

"We could have obtained stars for a serial, but showmanship prompted us to select Houdini. That showmanship in films pays has been proved. The Houdini serial is booking heavily and at higher prices.

"If there is more showmanship in film production there will be less complaint about good pictures not bringing in expected returns."

"Echo of Youth" Titled

This month will witness another Ivan Abramson production, which he is now completing for the Graphic Film Corporation under the title of "The Echo of Youth." The photographic end of it is finished and he is now busily engaged in cutting and titling the product.

Charles Richman heads the cast with Pearl Shepard, Marie Shotwell, Leah Baird, Jack McLean William Bechtel, Peggy Shaynor and Phillip Van Loan as associate players.

A private showing for a few invited guests is promised and shortly after that the picture will be released to the public.

Queen Mary Appears in English Film

Queen Mary of Great Britain appears in the English-made film, "Women Who Win," according to an announcement made by T. H. Davison, film agent, London, who is handling the world selling rights to this production. It is in six reels and will be given a London trade showing some time in March.

"The Scarlet Trail" Has Many Endorsements

After completing an engagement at the big Shubert house at Thirty-ninth and Broadway, New York City, permitting the newspaper and trade journal reviewers as well as many thousands of others to view it, "The Scarlet Trail" is said to have been in receipt of many offers from territorial buyers.

According to a statement issued by N. R. Greathouse, general manager of this concern, nothing definite has been reached as yet regarding the marketing of "The Scarlet Trail." It may be sold outright, road-showed, or state righted.

"The Scarlet Trail" is based on the book "Don't Take a Chance," by Charles Larned Robinson, and is endorsed by the Social Hygiene Division of the American Defense Society. It is described as a daring and startling treatise on sex indiscretion.

Three Circuits Book Houdini Serial

Rolfe Productions of Philadelphia, controlling the rights to "The Master Mystery" in eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, contracted last week for the exhibition of the Houdini serial in that territory, with three of the most important circuits—the Stanley Booking Company, the Nixon and Nirdlinger houses, and the Commerford Amusement Company.

The Stanley Company will play "The Master Mystery" in thirteen houses: Regent, Savoy, Family, Great Northern, Ruby, Auditorium, Imperial, Rialto, Alhambra, Glove and Cross Keys, all in Philadelphia; the Colonial in Atlantic City and the Empress in Mauch Chunk. The runs are for one, two and three days. It is said that this is the first time that a serial has been booked in the Regent.

The Nixon and Nirdlinger interests will play the serial in fifteen houses for runs ranging from one to six days. Some houses in which it has been booked are the Grand Opera House for six days; Colonial, three days, and the Riboli, two days. All of these houses are in Philadelphia.

The Commerford Amusement Company will show each episode of the serial for fifteen days in its houses, which are located in Wilkes Barre and Scranton.

United Starts the New Year With Three

THE present month marks the beginning of the regular releases on the United Pictures Theatres, Inc., program. "The Light of the Western Stars," starring Dustin Farnum, serving as the initial offering. With this release President Berst's organization, actively enters the production and distributing field. The period of organization has resulted in the acquisition of three stars, Dustin Farnum, Kitty Gordon and Florence Reed and the completion of three productions, featuring these stars.

"The Light of Western Stars" released this week is to be followed immediately by the first Kitty Gordon United feature "Adele," an adaptation of Adele Bleneau's "The Nurse's Story." For February Dustin Farnum's second vehicle "A Man In The Open" and Florence Reed's latest picture are scheduled. Kitty Gordon's second picture is approaching completion and work has already been put in hand on Dustin Farnum's third release temporarily entitled "Square Shootin' Dan," while "Platonic Love" is announced as the title of Miss Gordon's third offering.

The roster of first run theatres housing United releases numbers strong the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago, where "The Light of Western Stars" has an indefinite run, the Lubliner and Trinz theatres, together with eleven theatres of the Fitzpatrick & McElroy chain. Others on the United list are the new California-Alhambra, Los Angeles; Crandall's new Metropolitan, Washington, D. C.; Temple theatre, Toledo; Miles theatre, Detroit; the Harris theatres, Pittsburgh; Turned & Dahnken's Tivoli, San Francisco; the Stanley houses, Philadelphia; New Theatre, Baltimore; Clinton Square, Albany; Strand theatres, Syracuse and Buffalo; the Harris theatre, Cleveland; People's, Portland, Ore.; Family, Strand and Walnut, Cincinnati; Frankel theatre, Des Moines; Washington theatre, Dallas; and the Poli chain in New England. A special pre-release presentation of the Farnum screen play was that of the 81st street engagement in New York last week.

At a special showing last week of "A Man In The Open," the Dustin Farnum second United feature, before a representative body of United members and other exhibitors, the opinion is said to have been expressed that this six reel offering affords the star the strongest role he has thus far handled for the screen. It contains striking scenes of the Great Northwest. Those present at the private presentation of "A Man In The Open" are said to have praised this offering highly.

Middle West Circuit Signs for United Pictures

The Chicago office of United Picture theatres, Inc., reports the signing of contracts with the Fitzpatrick and McElroy chain of theatres in parts of Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois. Eleven of this chain of theatres are reported to have signed for the exhibition of United product, including the Michigan, Pantheon & Lakeside, Covent Garden, Knickerbocker, Biograph, Paramount, Wilson, Vitagraph, Pershing and West End theatres, Chicago.

New "Maciste" Production to Old Customers

COMPLYING with the requests of many of his old customers who were responsible for the success of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior" in which "Maciste," the powerful Italian star appeared, Harry Raver, who presented the first "Maciste" production in America at two dollars-top and declares that he did a gross business in three years of upwards of a million dollars, has decided to place his third production at the disposal of those of the former exchanges who feel they should have an opportunity of realizing on their previous investment the full measure of prestige created in America by "Maciste."

"The Liberator" is the new vehicle for the display of "Maciste's" personality and prowess. It is described as a modern story and does not deal with the late war, although all the male principals are said to be enlisted officers and soldiers in the Italian army, obtaining leaves of absence with great difficulty to play their parts in the picture.

"Cabiria" and "Warrior" players are said to be prominent in "Maciste's" supporting cast, numbering more than one thousand. "The Liberator" is twenty-four thousand feet long and was produced after an original story by Agnes Fletcher Bain. It will be released in installment of two reels each, covering twelve weeks.

Cromelin Reveals Secret of His Change to Films

The secret is out. Paul H. Cromelin of Inter-Ocean revealed this week why he resigned the vice presidency of the Columbia Phonograph Company to become a motion picture exporter. The occasion was the presentation of a gold watch by the employees of the Inter-Ocean to their president on Tuesday, December 24, in commemoration of his second Christmas in that office. Gus Schlesinger, of the Sales department, made the presentation speech and Mr. Cromelin replied:

"This reminds me of another occasion fourteen years ago when following the St. Louis Exposition, the staff of the Columbia Phonograph Company presented me with a watch. It was by way of recognition of our success in St. Louis, where we had taken more awards for the Columbia Phonograph than our chief competitors received. We were very happy about this outcome and I am sure that all of us were convinced that of all modern devices for the entertainment of the masses, the invention we were exploiting was the greatest and none had greater faith in the phonograph that day than myself.

"If anyone would have told me then that a decade later I would be enlisted with another invention for public entertainment, and that I would consider it a more wonderful invention, and with greater educational possibilities, I would have told the speaker that he was making a foolish prediction.

"Still, hardly three years after that gathering in the Columbia office so similar to this, I was interested in the screen and the pictures that flickered forth upon it. And with the years this interest grew until I finally found myself voyaging to London as the Edison Motion Picture manager there and my return with its consequent enlistment with the late Henry J. Brock at Inter-Ocean followed."

The presentation of the gold watch took place in the main business offices on the third floor of Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West 42nd street, New York City. After which there was a dinner, herewith illustrated, tendered to the employees at Healy's Restaurant,—sort of reciprocal, you see—where the phonograph business was further forgotten.

"Suspense" Is Independent's Fourth 10-20-30

AFTER Bacon-Backer elected to market their picture, "A Woman's Experience," through the Independent, J. Stuart Blackton announced that the Paula Blackton's Country Life special, "The Littlest Scout," would be released by the same company.

This makes two of Commodore Blackton's productions, the first being "Life's Greatest Problem," to go to the exhibitors on this fixed price plan.

Frank Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, now announces that the fourth special production for distribution throughout the United States on the 10-20-30 series, will be Frank Reicher's feature, "Suspense," adapted from the novel of the same title by Isabel Ostrander, who wrote "The Flying Man" and other detective stories.

Frank Reicher, one of the best known directors in the industry, who made twenty-two pictures for Jesse Lasky, and directed others for various producing companies, now makes his appearance in the film field as an independent producer.

At the Ince Plant

Thomas H. Ince moved all his producing units from the studios on Georgia street Tuesday, December 31, to his new $1,000,000 studios at Culver City. Although the telephone company had not installed his telephones on January 1, this did not prevent Mr. Ince from getting the joyful news to the outside world.

The new plant is said to be one of the finest, if not the finest, in the world. It is modern in every particular and built along the lines specified by Mr. Ince after many years of experience in the producing game.

At least three companies will begin production work at the new studios immediately. They will be headed by Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett.

Special exercises celebrating the entrance into the new plant were held, in which prominent citizens from Los Angeles, Santa Monica, Venice and Culver City participated. A grand dance was given on the large open stages New Year's night.

Mr. Ince was welcomed back to Culver City by a special delegation of citizens headed by the mayor of the city. It has been more than one year since he left that community, having been the presiding genius in production work at the Triangle Studios, now being used by the Goldwyn producing forces.

Fox Studio Doings

Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who is in Los Angeles on an indefinite visit to the Fox studios in Hollywood, was very ill this week. He was confined to his rooms at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, and although it was rumored that he had influenza, this was denied by Mr. Sheehan. He said he was suffering from a severe attack of the gripe. However, the fact that he was confined to his bed did not prevent his reviewing two Tom Mix recent productions, "The Coming of the Law" and "Faking for God." A special projection room was fixed up adjoining Mr. Sheehan's room, and the pictures were thrown on the screen where he could see them from his bed. He pronounced both productions as being highly satisfactory. He expects to be out again within a few days.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the two Fox kiddies, received a Christmas remembrance this week from Theda Bara, who is producing in the East. Coming as it did on the heels of persistent rumors in Los Angeles—about a fourth of a series of such rumors—that Miss Bara was dead from influenza, the Lee kiddies exclaimed; "Now I guess we know that Miss Bara is not dead." The children have just finished their most recent production, "Smiles," made under the direction of Avid Gillstrom.

Peggy Hyland recently began work on a new picture for William Fox entitled "The First Man." It will be filmed under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. Among some of the most prominent people who have been selected for the cast are George Nichols, George Hernandez and Charles LeMoyné. The male lead will be played by Pell Trenton.

Tom Mix enjoyed the distinction recently of finishing two productions at the same time. They were "The Coming of the Law" and "Faking for God." The first picture was produced under his own direction, production work on it having been temporarily halted when Mix succumbed for a few days to the now fashionable malady of influenza. When he was able to resume picture making he started in to produce "Faking for God" with Edward J. LeSaint handling the megaphone. The whole process of production was so manipulated that both pictures went to the cutter this week. Later they were whipped into shape for a personal review by Winfield Sheehan at his room at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, where he has been ill for several days. Mix will begin filming a new subject within a week, it is announced, under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

About Metro Players

Viola Dana is in the middle of her newest film subject, "Diana Ardway." It is expected this picture will be completed within the next ten days.

"Johnny on the Spot," in which Hale Hamilton is being starred, will be finished early next week. Louise Lovely is his leading lady.

Edith Wherry, author of "The Red Lantern," the title of Madame Nazimova's great production now under way at the Metro studios, was a visitor on the Metro lot this week. She was present Tuesday when a number of Chinese scenes in the play were filmed, and later she told Madame Nazimova that the characterizations were being properly interpreted. She was shown about the studios, it being her first visit to a show place of this kind.

May Allison has started production on "The Island of Intrigue," her newest screen vehicle. The story was originally written by Isabel Ostrander, and the scenario was prepared by A. S. Levino. Henry Otto is the director, having arrived in the West a few weeks ago. It will be remembered that Mr. Otto directed a number of Metro pictures two years ago when Miss Allison was co-starring with Harold Lockwood. The new story selected for Miss Allison is combination of romance, mystery and comedy. A girl is kidnapped and taken to an island, where she is held for ransom. The story gains momentum and action when the girl is finally rescued by the hero in a small boat. A number of these scenes will be filmed next week at Santa Cruz Island near Santa Barbara. Jack Mower is to play the male lead in this picture.

Bert Lytell is now working in his new picture, "The Blind Man's Eyes." Production started last Monday. The play is from the novel by William McHarg, and John Ince is the director. Naomi Childers, who was leading lady for Harold Lockwood in his two last pictures before his death, is to play the feminine lead in this production. The story starts with a courtroom scene. A set depicting this action was created at the Metro plant last week and in it the first scenes of the picture were filmed.

Paramount-Artcraft

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation arrived in Los Angeles Sunday on his annual winter visit to the West Coast studios, and at once held a number of conferences with Cecil B. De Mille, David Wark Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett and Douglas Fairbanks relative to the production activities of the corporation during the New Year.

Mr. Zukor while en route to the Pacific Coast stopped at Chicago, St. Louis and Denver, where he received first hand information relative to future business conditions in the Middle West. When he arrived in Los Angeles he was very optimistic and announced that in his opinion the year 1919 will see a tremendous wave of prosperity sweep over the film industry. He said that business conditions would not only get back to normal, but with finer productions being placed on the market—productions of greater artistic as well as dramatic value—reaching the exhibitor, the public would become even greater devotees of the movies than in the "better days" of the past.

Mr. Zukor was head of the film men's committee that at the beginning of the influenza epidemic decided to advance releasing dates on all pictures for a period of five weeks. He said this plan had worked out admirably well, and that it was through this arrangement that the exchanges were enabled to resume their bookings on a normal basis when the influenza ban was lifted throughout the various cities of the United States.

He was accompanied to the Pacific coast by John C. Flynn, director of advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. While in Los Angeles Mr. Flynn outlined a few plans for a greater idea and a broader scope of advertising during the year of 1919. Mr. Flynn also held a number of conferences with Adam Hull Shirk, new director of publicity for the West Coast studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Zukor will remain on the Pacific Coast about two weeks he said. He added that before he leaves Los Angeles he may have some important announcements to make, such announcements to be made as a result of conferences with various producing heads of the organization. While here he stopped at the Hotel Alexandria.

Here and There

A New Year's greeting for Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, was announcement from the New York Supreme Court that his application that his name be changed to Samuel Goldwyn had been looked upon favorably, and that his name hereafter is not Samuel Goldfish but Samuel Goldwyn. Announcement of the change in the name came in the form of a telegram on Tuesday, December 31. The decision making the change was handed down by Supreme Justice Thomas F. Donnelly. Mr. Goldwyn announces that he will be on the Pacific Coast possibly until January 15.

Madge Kennedy has begun production on a new picture under the direction of Clarence G. Badger, the title of which has not been announced. It will be a comedy drama.

The Tom Moore company has completed the newest picture starring Mr. Moore, but its releasing title has not been selected. It is a comedy drama, and was produced under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Seena Owen is Mr. Moore's leading lady. It required about three weeks to film the story.

Madlane Traverse has begun production on her second Fox picture since arriving on the Pacific coast. Its title has not been announced. Harry Millarde is the director.

Wallace Reid, who is playing the lead in an automobile story being produced under the direction of James Cruz for the Paramount program, was called upon this week to do some trick automobile riding. The production is about half finished. Ann Little is his leading lady.

Mae Marsh has recovered from her illness, which consisted of a relapse from influenza after she had arrived in Los Angeles from New York a few weeks ago, and she will resume production on January 13. Larry Trimble will be her director.

Julian Eltinge is knocking the Bevo Junction dust off his wearing apparel this week, and hitting the rattler for a tour in vaudeville with his own company.

Bill Wing has over-worked his Oliver again, and the speaking stage is shortly to have a satire on the motion picture industry titled "Shooting Stars." Harry McCoy is producing this for our folks, and many celebrities of filmdom will be heard to say their say at the Majestic theatre shortly.

Bill William S. Hart loves his art, and he demonstrated it this week when he had his head shaved to appear as an inmate of a penal institution where he wore stripes. Yes, they got Bill in a place where he felt at home once, that is, while he was acting, and he did the convict walk just like an old life term, all of which proves his versatility again. All of this happened at the town of Folsom, California, and then Bill and the entire gang, including Gene Allen, celebrated New Year's eve at San Francisco.

A Reproduction of the Symphony Orchestra

Console of The Robert Morton

THE impersonal and Pervading tone of the organ as expressed by the Robert-Morton furnishes a quiet and unobtrusive background of music for any dramatic action on the screen.

The potent emotional influence of organ music is ultimately realized in the wide range of color and orchestral Expression stimulated and sustained by The Robert-Morton.

Shading its harmonies with the lights of the screen—the symphonic character of The Robert-Morton fits every character, motif and action of dramatic situation.

Los Angeles Welcomes Newest Theatre

Miller's California Is Open

Picture Palace Referred to as "America's Foremost Photoplay Edifice"—Fred A. Miller and Harry Leonhardt Build It Along New Lines

TO the shadow stage has been dedicated a new house of marvelous beauty and comfort. Miller's California theatre in Los Angeles, was opened to the public on Christmas Eve, 1918.

This theatre of great proportion was built upon the theory that motion pictures are here to stay, and everything placed within the house, as well as the arrangements throughout, are designed to fit the needs of proper presentation of photoplay with suitable music and environments. The ad writer styles it "America's Foremost Photoplay Edifice," and this cannot be classed as the over-enthusiastic utterings of a copywriter, for the theatre's creators have been daring in their work and the house contains many features that are strikingly new in photoplay theatre construction.

Messrs. Fred A. Miller and Harry Leonhardt are responsible for this magnificent institution. Both are well known in amusement circles. Mr. Miller, who is president and general manager of the Miller Amusement Company, the operators, left a wholesale hardware business in the central west, of which he was proprietor, almost six years ago, to go to Los Angeles and enter the amusement field. In 1912 following a very successful business career, he built an 800-seat theatre, a block farther from the business section of Los Angeles than the New California, and made it a success despite the fact that everyone in the theatre business predicted failure because the house was located "way off of Broadway." He attributes his success to persistently advertising. He is the man who first used big space regularly in Los Angeles newspapers. His slogan, "Make Miller's a Weekly Habit" became known to everyone, and many became addicted. More than two years ago he acquired the Alhambra theatre of 900 seats, and the same stick-to-it-tive-ness with printers' ink has put this house over the top. Early in the world war, Mr. Miller saw the possibilities of war pictures, and the Alhambra became the war picture theatre of Los Angeles. When the California was nearing completion, he disposed of Miller's theatre, and now has his business matters so arranged that he can give all of his time to the new house, although he continues to own the Alhambra.

Harry Leonhardt, vice-president, is a showman of twenty-seven years' experience in America and Europe, having been connected with Keith and Proctor in the management of their largest houses, and later identified with the United Booking Office. His entrance into the motion picture field was made when he became general western representative for the Fox Film Corporation following two years in this capacity, during which time his territory was enlarged to include Chicago and all west. He became one of the best known film men of the country. When the Goldwyn Company was organized he was selected to supervise the exchanges in the territory west of Chicago. He became interested with Fred Miller in the California theatre project, and shortly after this gave up his position with Goldwyn that he might devote all of his time to supervising the building of this photoplay edifice.

The third executive of Miller Amusement Company is Bart Bertelson, who is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Bertelson was formerly identified with theatres in the Northwest, and up until the time he took up his present position, he was associated with James Clemmer, of the Clemmer theatre, Seattle, as associate manager. Although the younger of the three officers of the company, he has had a wide experience.

The program of the California announces that Fred Miller and Harry Leonhardt present a musical photoplay spectacle in nine units by W. A. Bishop, who is managing director. The dedication program was one of particular merit, beginning with a lighting spectacle titled "Dawn," participated in by the mammoth orchestra, at the conclusion of which a mythical personage proclaiming himself "Policy" appeared in the center of the stage and made a statement of what could be expected at the new theatre. Kenneth McGaffey is responsible for this feature of the program. The statement was as follows:

"I AM POLICY"

Kind friends—Hear me
—I am "Policy"—"Policy of the new California theatre.

I may never speak again, but I will be here at all times attending to your wants and catering to your wishes.

With the formal opening of this edifice to the amusement-seeking and beauty-loving public, I wish to set a milestone in the artistic presentation of the best in photodrama.

It is my desire to have you leave your cloak of care at the portal: to arrange you at your ease, and then, by genius and thought, carry you along with the players on the screen—have you share their joys and sorrows, and leave with a little deeper knowledge, a better thought and a sense of rest, relaxation and enjoyment.

Only by providing you with happiness and giving you satisfaction can this structure endure. Therefore I will be governed by your likes and dislikes. It is your place of entertainment and I am eager to anticipate your desires.

In establishing this milestone in the history of the silent art you will note that I have cast aside the traditional stage and proscenium. In its original conception the proscenium and sides of the stage were used to conceal the activities of the players when not engaged in a scene. Then the popularity of the screen was established—but the stage was still retained to guard against the time when that popularity should wane and a return to the spoken word became necessary. Fear of that no longer exists, and this beautiful edifice has been erected in a sincere and deep-found belief in the enduring future of the photoplay.

The Camera—at this time the massive drapes at the left of the stage parted and there appeared a mammoth lens of the camera, through which were seen the director and cameraman at work) is your all-seeing eye—it shows you the squalor of the slums and the palace of the prince. Through it, the mysteries and beauties of the world are disclosed to you. Night and day a vast army is toiling to lay these treasures at your feet. At no time will I show you anything but the best.

The photoplay's sister art—(here the drapes at the right parted and a tableau representing Music was shown. A large Lyre formed the frame for this and through the stringed section were several girls dressed in Grecian costumes and representing the pleasure that music brings to people of all ages.)—is Music, whose haunting melodies, exquisite catches, glorious marches and majestic choruses bring satisfaction and inspiration to the whole world. With music we can convey the emotions of those on the screen to those in the audience. It will be my ambition to present, by the best musicians, the masterpieces of the composers.

Beautiful voices will entertain you, and scenes of realism and color harmonies will greet your eye.

As this edifice is dedicated to the photoplay and its allied arts, its opening at this time is still a greater dedication to a glorious and honorable victory—to a true and lasting peace and to the future of a more united and enduring AMERICA this theatre is erected as a humble monument.

When "Policy" disappeared, Nicola Donatelli, director of music, made his appearance and conducted the orchestra. The next number given was selections from Carmen, arranged by Donatelli. This opened with a prelude followed by the Spanish dance. As a finale all the gems of Carmen were included. California theatre world visions for this program consisted of the Educational Film Corporation's release, "The Tale of the Tall Timber." All releases of this company have been contracted for by this theatre.

The California Animated News is furnished by the Universal Film Exchange, the dedication number containing some particularly attractive news pictorials. The California mixed quartette sang the new composition by Arthur Kay titled "California," which has been dedicated to the new theatre.

Following the projection of the title of the Artcraft subject, "Arizona," starring Douglas Fairbanks, the stage was blacked out and two semi-prologues were given. The first, "The Desert," consists of a cyclorama the full width

Original Designing Shows Numerous Merits

Plans Require Long Period for Working Out to Almost Absolute Perfection

IN the building of Miller's California theatre, the architect, contractor and sub-contractors were brought face to face with many problems, some of which seemed insurmountable at times, but in all instances the barriers were overcome and the desired effects were secured.

The initial plans for this new Los Angeles theatre were drawn about eighteen months ago and as much time was taken for the planning as was needed for the construction. When Managing Director Fred A. Miller and his associate, Harry Leonhardt, first conceived the idea of building, they engaged the services of A. B. Rosenthal. Before any work was done on the planning it was decided that everything pertaining to the theatre should be original in design and so devised to harmonize into one whole, that would be perfection in theatre construction and decoration.

The site selected on South Main street just below Eighth, was not one that was particularly suited for theatre construction. The street at this point is not parallel with the street west of it, and consequently the lot is wider at the rear, it being 100 x 93 and 168 feet deep.

The interior and exterior are of modern Italian Renaissance style of architecture, and the outstanding features of the construction are the fact that balcony and roof are self-supporting, and that the entire stage, fifty-four feet wide with proscenium arch thirty feet high, may be seen from every seat in the auditorium and balcony. The entire picture may be seen by a person standing in any of the doors leading to the auditorium from the foyer. The projection room is located directly in the center at the back of the auditorium.

The front of the building is the entire width of the lot, eighty feet, and has exits on each side eight feet wide leading to the sidewalk. The center of the building is taken up by the lobby eighteen feet deep and thirty-eight feet wide. On either side of this are small storerooms 14 x 28 feet. In the center of the lobby is the general box office fitted with three windows, while on the right wall is the reserved seat box office of sufficient size for four ticket sellers. Entrance to the foyer is gained through four double and two single doors panelled with plate glass that extends from a foot above the floor line to within six inches of the top. The main foyer is 28 x 40 feet with tile flooring harmonizing with the general color scheme, and an oriental rug 18 x 24 feet in size. Above this is a well in the mezzanine floor promenade, twenty feet square, and above this in the mezzanine ceiling is a dome fitted with lighting effects which gives one the impression of looking up into the sky. In the afternoon it has the warm glow of the sun, and at night the pale blue of starlight.

Off the foyer on either side ten feet from the front are stairways, twelve feet in width. Back of this is an inner foyer which leads from the main one to the sides of the building. There are two wide entrances to the main auditorium and one from each side of the foyer, also from each end of the inner foyer. Drinking fountains have been conveniently placed midway between the entrances to the auditorium. The stairway consists of but ten steps, and then one enters upon a circular ramp which by a slow incline leads to the mezzanine floor level. From the back center of the mezzanine floor is an incline to within fifteen feet of the front of the balcony joining there with the lower balcony cross aisle. At the front of the mezzanine floor foyer is a large waiting room. This is 18 x 38 feet. On one side of this is the ladies' parlor with telephones, dressing tables, etc. On the other side is a nursery where children of the patrons may be left in charge of nurses. There is also a smoking room on this side. Stairways lead from right and left of the mezzanine floor to the second cross aisle of the balcony.

On the third floor (top), are located the offices of the theatre, and also a private projection room fitted that it may be used for rehearsal. Here also are installed complete equipment of the Filmusic Company for the timing of musical program for the picture. The instruments include the musicue meter and a synchron-o-meter.

The auditorium is 104 feet in length from the entrance off the foyer to the orchestra pit. At the entrance end it is eighty-two feet wide and tapers gradually to a width of sixty-six feet. The balcony is 103 feet in length and extends from immediately under the street side of the foyer to within about twenty-five feet of the stage. The auditorium has aisles at the side and also others extending from the foyer to the orchestra pit placing the house in three sections.

The loge seats are located in the first fifty feet of the balcony. There are three rows in front of the first cross aisle, and ten above the cross aisle. These seats are all leather upholstered and very large and comfortable, each one requiring a space of 24 x 46 inches. The other seats of the house used on the main floor and in the upper balcony require space 20 x 36 inches.

The orchestra pit extends across the entire stage end of the building, and is of sufficient size for forty musicians. It is sunk below the main floor, and has three levels so that all of the musicians are in plain view of the audience. The console of the Robert Morton orchestral organ is on one side of the center at the back of the orchestra pit, and on the other is a grand piano.

The antiquated fire laws of Los Angeles have materially affected the construction of this theatre. One law requires that every building in which there are entertainments, there shall be a fire-wall between the portion of the building where stagecraft is practiced and that occupied by the audience. To comply with this law a small fire wall is built on each side of the building and the remainder of the stage is separated from the audience by what is said to be the largest asbestos curtain in any motion picture theatre in the world. The proscenium arch is fifty-four feet wide and thirty feet in height in the center. A portion of the elliptical orchestra pit extends back of the stage line, and when the large asbestos curtain is in place on the stage, it drops through a grand stairway, fourteen feet in width leading down to the center of the stage. On each side of the grand stairway is a baluster crowned with beautiful lighting ornaments. A banister extends from these balusters, circular shape to the front of the stage, and then to the walls on either side. The sides of the stage have been used for placing the many parts of the mammoth Robert Morton organ. A sixty-five-foot gridiron affords all room necessary for the scores of drops used in the different stage settings. There are two screens with almost a score of drapery drops.

Another antiquated law provides there shall be five feet of space in front of the projection room which shall not be occupied by people, so that "in case any film should catch fire it cannot fall upon the people." This causes a loss of about thirty seats.

The self-supporting ceiling is a marvel in architectural beauty and construction engineering. It is the largest of its kind in the country, extending as it does, the full length and width of the building, eighty feet in the front and gradually sloping back to a sixty-six foot width in the rear or stage end. This is spoken of as a vaulted ceiling shaped into eight bays. At each of these bays are three ventilators which have the appearance of ceiling ornaments.

On each side of the building from about the middle and extending to the back end are courts connected with the main floor by three sets of doors and with the balcony by wide iron stairways. This gives the house four exits on each side from the rear, and practically half of the front as that portion of the building is enclosed by doors. The ceiling in the center of the building is fifty feet in height, and the bottom of the balcony is eighteen feet above the floor level directly underneath.

The builders of the theatre are the Winters Construction Company, a Los Angeles firm. The work was begun on February 10 of this year, and is the first theatre to be built by what is termed the unit system. Construction work along this plan made possible the planning of the separate portions of the building as the work was carried on. First the front of the theatre building was erected, and the work of finishing it was then taken up while the auditorium was being built. This made possible a speedier work and the use of scaffolding for finishing and decorating as well as construction work, requiring a small amount of labor in this respect. There is a basement under the stage only, the remainder of the floor being laid upon the ground.

The balcony was thoroughly tested for the inspection department of the Los Angeles Building Commission, when 200 pounds

Music Holds Prime Position at California

FULLY appreciating that fifty per cent of a motion picture theatre program depends upon proper atmosphere created by suitable incidental music, Messrs. Miller and Leonhardt in planning the California theatre paid marked attention to arranging for necessary music. During the five years Mr. Miller has conducted a motion picture theatre in Los Angeles, he had previously purchased five instruments from the American Photo Player Company through their district manager H. F. Charles, and when he first considered the building and opening of a new theatre he gave attention to adequate musical equipment.

Plans for the theatre were submitted to the Robert-Morton Organ division of the American Photo Player Company, and the greatest organ this company has ever made was planned and built. With this purchase Mr. Miller increases the amount of money he has spent with this firm to $127,000.

The Robert-Morton Organ of the California theatre required more than six months for the making, and after being thoroughly tested at the factory, was then brought to the theatre where six weeks were required for its installation, under the supervision of R. W. Williams, superintendent of the factory, who is responsible for many of its superior qualifications.

The California's organ has many admirable features. It has a double touch system which gives the organist the power in operation of having four hands and four feet, inasmuch as the pressure on a key or pedal to half position gives one tone, and if placed the remaining distance will give another. The organ contains every instrument used by a fifty-piece symphony orchestra, in addition to the pipes of the organ proper, has electric action and is unified throughout. Particular attention has been given to securing a high wind pressure and twenty-five inches is possible. The organ has large pipes that are thirty-two feet in length, and of sufficient size for a man to crawl through. Others used are even smaller than a lead pencil. The organ is fitted with five sets of swell shutters so constructed as to be sound proof when closed.

They open singly, alternately, or all instantaneously making possible the softest tones desired, or placing a thunderous blast within the power of the organist. The designers of this organ have developed the characteristic tone of each set of pipes to the fullest extent, mindful of the fact that each set of pipes must be used not only by itself but combined with one or all the other sets in the organ under certain conditions. It will be noticed that the crescendo from the softest tones to the full power of the instrument is very much smoother and has fewer gaps in it than instruments built on other principles. The instrument possesses the character of the full natural organ tone, and upon this foundation the brilliant string and reed effects are elaborated to produce an instrument of the wonderful flexibility and power of a symphony orchestra.

The remarkably quick and silent shutter action—the ingenious system of double touch—the arrangement of the different traps and musical effects and the combination of piston action are original features appreciated by the skilled operator.

The musical programs of the house are in charge of Nicola Donatelli, the musical director, and Ray Hastings and L. H. Clark are the organists. Abraham Rosen is vocal director, and J. Mulieri is concert master. The orchestra is made up of musicians from all parts of the world, brought together by the musical director. The members of the orchestra are: G. Romandy, U. Sistarelli, R. F. Grover, S. Bergman, Ph. Letvak, S. Wolfstahl, S. Gelberg, R. S. Martinez, Chas. Miller, O. Hundhammer, F. Grofe, R. Durand, M. Koopman, C. Cheifetz, W. Rehor, Jos. Giampaolo, G. Iuvone, E. Mancusi, Jos. Perri, G. Maselli, L. Nobile, Geo. Vieira, Rocco Donatelli, A. DeGregoriis, O. Lucci, R. Plantamura, C. Margadonna, L.

Donatelli, G. W. Cadwell, F. Viola, and Nettie Pometti.

To give their musicians all aid possible, the management investigated every known device on the market today, and then selected an equipment made by Filmusic Studios, 1729 Highland avenue, Los Angeles. This equipment includes music synchronizing devices which have been named Musicue Meters and Synchron-o-meters. These are automatic, and the dials on the desk of the orchestra leader and the consol of the Robert-Morton organ constantly keep them informed of the speed of the film, and indicate when to change from one musical theme to another, that the music may synchronize with the picture.

The Filmusic Studios, who prepare orchestral scores, music roll scores, music cue sheets and manufacture picture rolls as well as rolls for all player pianos, has been contracted for by the California management to prepare musical scores exclusively for this theatre. The scores will be composed of original compositions and others taken from the big musical library at the studios maintained. The Filmusic people are specialists in every phase of music presentation for theatres of all types.

Harmonious Decorations Make California Distinctive

THE decorative and furnishing scheme of the California theatre, worked out by Messrs. Miller and Leonhardt and the heads of the decoration department of Barker Brothers home furnishing establishment of Los Angeles, is one of harmony throughout. It gives to the theatre a distinction, as the whole scheme is an original one. Particular attention has been given to the most minute details, with the result that wherever you look you are reminded that the builders have been very thoughtful with respect to everything pertaining to the furnishing and decorating.

To make the theatre a restful and decidedly inviting place has been the intention of all concerned, and with this idea in view they selected soft tones that are restful to the eye and appeal to the lovers of the artistic. At the same time great care has been taken that nothing be placed in the theatre what will detract in the least from the stage, music, presentation and effects. Above all the theatre is homelike and lovable, and patrons will find many new and interesting features in the decorations.

The lobby walls of marble contain several attractive frames for announcements of attractions, and has massive oak doors leading into the theatre. The ceiling of the lobby gives the first intimation of the color scheme, this being of silver leaf brightened by indirect reflected lighting. The draperies behind the plate glass of the doors are of almost the same shade. The foyer gives further indication of the soft colorings by its delicate velvet and silk draperies of greyish blue shades. Across the back wall is a mammoth French mirror with panels on either side. In the center surrounded by tiling of the same shades is a Saruk rug, 18 x 24 feet, that carries out the soft colorings of the wall decorations and foyer fixtures. Standing in the center, one can look through a well in the mezzanine floor to a luminous sky-like dome, lighting effects of which give it the shades and colorings to resemble sunlight, moonlight, twilight, and are changed according to the time of day.

The walls along the stairway and ramp leading to the mezzanine floor are effectively decorated with velvet paper of an old ivory and gold over a very light grey-blue background. This paper was especially designed to fit in with the general color and decorative scheme of the theatre.

But two colors with many tints of each have been used in the decoration of the walls and domes of the auditorium, with the exception of now and then a very slight incidental dash of color to emphasize the softness of the blues and greys. The keynote of the auditorium coloring is soft and hazy greys and blues. Barker Brothers, the decorators, here attempted to color so as to remind one of a pleasant dream or a quiet sky at twilight. Mellow shades of grey, rose and dull autumn yellow are used, all of which are high lighted delicately with gold leaf. The coloring accentuates the modest tint of the walls and doors, redeeming the color scheme from monotony and yet preserving restfulness.

The promenade and waiting rooms, on the mezzanine floor, decorative plan follows the general scheme of the foyer. Along the mezzanine floor and ramp balustrade are growing flowers which will be symbolic of the different seasons of the year. During the opening week of the theatre, Christmas flowers emblematic of the wonderful California climate were effectively used.

The furnishings from Barker Brothers for the waiting and rest rooms are the personification of luxury and elegance. Very liberal provision has been made for the comfort of the women and children, and the tone of elegance has been extended to these portions of the theatre. Ivory and blue with silken drapery walls are used in the waiting rooms. The dressing room is in grey and lavender and the nursery is brightened with design that will be attractive to the children.

The carpets of the stairways and aisles are of old gold with a stripe of old rose at each side. The mezzanine floor and ramps to the loge seats have velvet carpet of subdued design that harmonizes with the draperies and walls.

A very effective feature of the wall decoration is the large tapestry panel on either side near the stage end. Screened lights reflect upon these panels, bringing out the delicate shades and silver.

A sacrifice of 400 seats has been made by the management in order that greater comfort may be given to the patrons. When originally planned the theatre was to have more than 2,500 seats, but this number was reduced to a trifle less than 2,100. The change was due to the installation of large upholstered lounge chairs, numbering 400, which are placed in the front of the balcony and constitute the loge seats. Each of these seats requires a space 24 x 46 inches. The other seats of the theatre are leather upholstered, twenty inches in width, and requiring a space thirty-six inches long. Seats were manufactured by the American Seating Company.

The theatre throughout has a tone of dignity. The draperies are either of velvet or silk, and in most instances are of special weave to meet the requirements of the general decorative scheme the firm of Barker Brothers has so effectively carried out.

The Psychology of a Smile

How William Parsons Became Known as "Smiling Bill"

BACK of the selection of the executives of the California theatre of Capitol Comedies featuring Bill Parsons that are released by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is an interesting story that touches upon the psychology of the smile. A number of years ago William Parsons entered the insurance field, and in a short time became one of the most prominent salesmen and sales managers of the country. He increased his forces until he had several thousand men in his employ, and every one became successful. Early in his business career Mr. Parsons learned that a man with a smile, who attempted to make his personality pleasing, was far more successful than the one who did not. He had applied the psychology of the smile in his own work, and he taught it to all of his men and they became hail fellows well met who were welcomed on every hand.

When "Smiling Bill" Parsons considered the creation of comedies, his first decision was that they should radiate happiness from beginning to end, and carry a smile wherever possible, for he knew that one smile would create another, and the one smile on the screen would therefore create hundreds within the audience. In other words, Parsons' belief is that a smile is contagious and the best epidemic for the world is one of smiles.

Fred A. Miller, general manager, and Harry Leonhardt, associate manager of the California, decided that regardless of what else was on their program, it should end with a picture of such character as would "send them away with a smile."

California Books Program to Next August

CONTRACTS now made by officers of the California Theatre Company provide program for the coming year or more, solid bookings having been made until the latter part of August, 1919.

Most of the weekly programs will include Paramount and Arcraft subjects, but in addition to these Nazimova productions distributed by Metro Film Corporation and Geraldine Farrar star series by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will be shown.

The management prior to the opening had contracted for the following through the Los Angeles exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation: Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona" was the opening bill, and is the only Fairbanks picture to be shown at the theatre according to present bookings. Following this will come the Arcraft Special Maurice Tourneur's Production of "Sporting Life." William S. Hart will be seen at the theatre in eight Arcraft subjects during the year. All three Arcraft films starring Fred Stone are to be shown here together with seven Paramount starring Ethel Clayton; eight starring Shirley Mason, in addition to two other Arcraft Specials and one film starring Caruso.

Present contracts provide for the next three Nazimova productions, but no date has been fixed for their showing. Geraldine Farrar will make four appearances on the California screen in as many Goldwyn releases. Messrs. Miller and Leonhardt have also contracted for the United Picture Theatres of America releases which include such stars as Dustin Farnum, Kitty Gordon and Florence Reed. The present subjects under contract are "Light of Western Stars" and "A Man in the Open" starring Farnum; "Adele" and "Platonic Love" with Miss Gordon, and subjects yet to be named which have Miss Reed as star.

The California news weekly will be made of selections from the releases of the Hearst News Universal Weeklies, contracts for the exclusive use of these films having been made with the management by Dave Bershon manager of the Los Angeles Universal exchange. The weekly feature of the program is to be made one of the important units of the California's program, and particular attention is being given to this department by the management.

The Travelogue unit of the program will be made up of releases of the Educational Film Corporation, handled in the Southern California territory by the M. & R. Feature Film exchange of Los Angeles and San Francisco. Contracts for the first run of these has been made by the management, and the dedication program included the one titled "Tale of the Tall Timbers" which showed scenes in California Redwood forests. Other travelogues contracted for showing at this theatre are the Burlingame Travel Series.

The comedy of the California theatre program will be furnished by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation exchange, and consists of Capitol Comedies featuring "Smiling Bill" Parsons.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

The Great New California Theatre Honors "Smiling Bill" PARSONS

LOS ANGELES' biggest screen institution—a tribute to the persistence and ability of F. A. Miller, a brilliant showman—has booked and will present from the day it opens its doors "Smiling Bill" Parsons in Capitol Comedies.

One by one, as the new motion pictures theatres open in cities large and small you find that their wise owners have booked Capitol Comedies

There are at this moment 3,100 theatres in the United States presenting and featuring these wholesome, lively, laughable comedies—most of them regretting that there are only 26 a year when they would like to offer 52.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons has grown upon the people of America on merit; his popularity is valid, real and deserved. Once in a house, he sticks. He stays there because the exhibitor never has to guess at his popularity or his values to the program.

Audiences talk about him, like him, praise him and ask for him.

It is a great pleasure to Mr. Parsons and the Goldwyn organization, his exclusive distributors, to have the Capitol Comedies increase their appeal in Los Angeles in the beautiful new California Theatre, which is destined to be one of the conspicuous theatre successes of the Pacific Coast.

Stage Cited as Example of "Last Word" in Picture Presentation

AS the California theatre was built and designed especially for the presentation of the photodrama and kindred subjects, every possible thing has been done to install equipment and effects that will improve the presentation of the picture with no thought of ever reconstructing or altering the house for the presentation of any other kind of amusement, and so there are innovations found on the stage that emphasize the cinema art, and give it distinction from any other form of amusement.

When the stage was conceived by the early Greeks, pillars were placed at each side of the platform so that people of the audience would know when the performer was playing, for at such time as he was always between the pillars. This stage conception has continued down to the present day with but few alterations; the one being that the pillars have been replaced in theatres by a proscenium arch, making possible the hiding of the players at the sides when they are off stage. The California would have done away with the proscenium arch altogether inasmuch as the players for this theatre are but shadows, had it not been for the fire laws which provide that an auditorium must be divided from the portion of the building where stagecraft is practiced. The proscenium arch of the California can hardly be classed as such, for it is so draped that it becomes a part of a cyclorama which begins back in the auditorium fifteen feet behind the front seats and extends around the entire presentation end of the theatre, the walls harmonizing into one whole are played upon by many different hues of light. The finish of the walls and the main drapes of the stage when the large asbestos curtain is raised is practically the same. At each side of the auditorium where the presentation cyclorama begins are batteries of huge lights used for flooding the orchestra pit and stage. Each lamp is fitted with five different colors. These, as well as the side lights in the proscenium arch proper, are hidden by massive velvet curtains of the same color as the walls. The stage proper and orchestra pit is divided by a mammoth asbestos curtain thirty-six feet high and fifty-five feet in width which was furnished and installed by the Edwin H. Flagg Scenic Company of Los Angeles and San Francisco which firm made all scenic effects for the theatre. This curtain is the largest of any motion picture theatre, and exceeded only in this country by that at the Hippodrome theatre, New York. When this large curtain is raised the ingenuity of the designers in so cleverly arranging the presentation end of the theatre is appreciated by the spectator, for then it is that the grey cyclorama is complete. The audience is seemingly placed closer to the presentation and effects used and made a part of the stage portrayals. This gives a feeling of intimacy with the entertainment features projected or given by the orchestra.

The asbestos curtain has the appearance of a silken portiere, regardless of the fact it is a theatre curtain of solid asbestos fibre woven into steel wire and re-enforced with iron pipes. The gridiron of the stage is of sufficient height to make possible the lifting of this curtain thirty-six feet into a loft of steel and concrete, and so evenly is it counterbalanced that operation by a child is possible. The curtain and frame is suspended by five steel cables operating over large ball-bearing sheaves, it ascending in slides seventy-two feet in length each 4x8 inches in depth and made by quarter-inch boiler plate.

The painted decorations on the curtain, executed in the studios of the Flagg Company, in Los Angeles, are alternate broad vertical stripes in gray tones, harmonizing with the interior scheme, and across the bottom is a conventional design of golden poppies intertwined in a Greek fret ornament. Back of this curtain are the mechanical and scenic appliances with which the atmospheric, operatic, dramatic and spectacular productions will be staged, in addition to the latest and most complete cinematographic exhibitions, for all of which the entire country has been scoured, to make the California the ultra theatre perfect.

Huge pylons of gold block off the three alcoves where scenes from the pictures will be shown. Back of these, futurist hangings mask and divide different features. In the center opening a reproduction of a palace interior is shown when occasion call for an interior of this nature, and it is so arranged that massive chandeliers can be illuminated and have the appearance of exaggerating the perspective. Around the back of the stage are various cyclorama drops which will act as the background for other scenes that will be changed each week. The opening week one of these scenes represents the lens of a motion picture camera with a novel iris effect showing actual people as they are seen through the finding lens. Another is a heroic harp with an entire Grecian setting of set drops and netted drops back of the strings. The cloth of gold drawn curtains over the picture screen are embellished with butterflies embroidered with jewels.

The lighting of the stage makes possible the changing to many different hues and tints, there being every solid color of the rainbow represented in the thousand of globes used in foot, border and bank lights above.

The stage, while much shallower than that for the spoken drama or musical comedy, is of sufficient depth to accommodate as many as thirty drops, and the stage equipment is sufficient.

The screen is hidden from view by a beautiful golden drop on which are projected the main title. The designing of this curtain makes possible a new effect causing the picture to sparkle with a glow similar to that of phosphorescence. The stage is equipped with two screens each 24x32 feet in size, and were prepared by William Hafemann and were made by the nitro silver painting process on canvas.

The stage, and all pertaining to that end of the building, was prepared under the supervision of W. A. Bishop who is managing director of the theatre and supervises the presentation. He was formerly identified with New York houses, and has had a wide experience in the show world having been identified with some of the greatest producers and theatre men of the country.

of the sixty-five-foot proscenium opening, upon which were placed various lighting effects of the stage to illustrate dawn, day, twilight and night. The second was named "The Patio" and showed a scene emblematic of conditions in Arizona. The closing number of the program was the Bill Parsons Comedy, "Bill's Opportunity," distributed by the Goldwyn Corporation.

The many friends of the several men identified with the theatre sent floral offerings which occupied prominent places in the lobby, foyer and the promenade of the mezzanine floor.

Besides the men mentioned above, the staff of the new theatre consists of the following: R. H. Poole, assistant house manager; Nicola Donatelli, musical manager; Ray Hastings, L. H. Clarke, organists; Abraham Rosen, vocal director; Roy Miller, director of publicity; Norman K. Wistler, stage manager; H. G. Robinson, staff artist; Frank Hardill, chief projectionist; Temple Company, costumers.

The program of the California will be changed every Monday, and there will be continuous performances from eleven fifteen A. M. to eleven thirty P. W. daily. Six programs will be given daily. All will include the orchestra, soloist, musical numbers, special color harmony and scenic effects, except those starting at eleven fifteen and six o'clock. The prices for matinees are fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents, and for evenings, Sundays and holidays, fifteen, twenty-five, thirty-five and loges fifty cents.

of dead weight was placed upon every square foot of the balcony. When this weight was there, there was a deflection of less than three-eighths of an inch which was considered by all engineers consulted as normal. The weighting was done by the placing of bags of cement upon the balcony floor. A better idea of the size of the undertaking can be gained by the figures showing the amount of material used which were compiled by Mr. Hawkins of the Winter Construction Company. They are as follows: Lumber, 671,838 square feet; 274 coils of wire; 196 kegs of nails, 300,990 pounds of steel, 19,200 bags of cement, 242 tons of crushed rock, 15,000 yards of sand, and 1,700 bags of plaster. There was a payroll of $54,000 on the building.

The sub-contractors were Arden Building Material Company, Bleecker-Nelson Company, sheet metal and marquee; S. C. Brown, plumbing; E. S. Cederberg, masonry; Hammond Lumber Company; Charles H. Fortune, ventilating; Llewellyn Iron Works, re-enforced steel; Pioneer Water Proofing and Roof Company; Standard Ornamental Iron Company; Southwestern Portland Cement Company; Simons Brick Company, and Watkins Art Stone Company. F. J. Twaits was engineer, G. F. Hill, general superintendent of construction, and Raymond G. Osborne was in charge of testing. A. B. Rosenthal, the architect, was constantly at the theatre during the construction and designed everything used within the building.

Managing Director Bishop Devises Lighting System

ADDITIONALLY to the restful features of the California theatre is a lighting system devised along plans originated by Managing Director W. A. Bishop, who is in charge of presentation, and has given the past six months to working out new and pleasing effects for screen and auditorium. There is not a single light within the auditorium in view of the audience, the indirect system having been most effectively installed. The main illumination of the auditorium is from 50,000 candle power lights placed in wall pockets designed in the shape of Horns of Plenty, out of which appear flowers and fruits, making them symbolic of California. The light rays strike upon the ceiling and is shed to all portions of the house outside of the orchestra pit. A semi-indirect lighting system is used in lobby, foyer, and all portions of the mezzanine floor. The vestibule is a blaze of white lights with two large fixtures. The foyer is in genuine ivory, with old ivory in relief work. The main lighting fixtures are at the foot of the grand stairways. These have ivory glass with cupids looking down from above. There are long fixtures hung by silk cord covered stems, and the light is sufficient and reflected by devices of particular beauty.

Throughout the auditorium and stage as well as the dome under the mezzanine well are fitted with reflectors manufactured by the National X-Ray Company. These together with all lighting fixtures were installed by the Forve-Pettibone Company of Los Angeles. This company is responsible for the creation of the lighting fixtures and materially aided the California executives in perfecting their lighting system. The lighting effects for the stage are described in an article treating that feature of the California separately.

Particular Attention Given to Planning Projection Room

TO insure the proper projection of pictures, and to facilitate in the lighting effects needed for presentation features, particular attention has been given to the planning of the projection room located on the main floor at the rear of the auditorium. The projection department occupies a solid concrete room nearly four feet above the floor level of the auditorium. Frank Hardill, who has been with Fred A. Miller for more than five years, is in charge, and to him was left the responsibility of planning the interior and selecting equipment. Hardill is assisted by Ed. Davis. The projection room has two late Powers model machines furnished by the Pacific Amusement Supply Company of Los Angeles, and besides a dissolving stereopticon, two spotlights have been especially made to fit the needs of the theatre. All special wires of direct current are run to the theatre from a nearby station, the service feed being on "00" wire to the 6x4 switchboard. The machine switches are of 100 amp. capacity, and the feed to the projection machine is on a number two wire. The resistance coils are placed in a separate fireproof room. The switchboard is 4x6 feet, and very conveniently located. This contains volt and amp meter, and all necessary devices. The motors of the projecting machines are connected with cutter-hammer field rheostats which make possible regulation of the speed of the machine. The downers of the projecting machines are operated by a wire which goes from the lamp house to the floor, and is connected with the other machine by means of pipes. This does away with all overhead wires or cord. Each machine is fitted with an adjustable overhead desk lamp bracket and the projection room equipment provides necessary work bench and tools, including a Hooker automatic rewinding device which has fireproof storage place for all reels used during one program. The projection department is ventilated by two sets of fans, one that pumps fresh air in and an exhaust fan.

Hammel Plans and Furnishes the Heating Arrangement

THE heating arrangement of the new California theatre was planned and furnished by E. F. Hammel of 730 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Southern California agent for the James B. Clow & Sons "Gasteam" system of heating. The entire heating scheme is admirably worked out by the adaptability of this system, in which each radiator is a complete plant in itself. It requires no furnace to be taken care of, consequently no basement or janitor is necessary. The only connection is with the gas pipe, each radiator being partially filled with water, the replenishing of which need only be done from three to four times a year and takes but a minute or two. The gas is automatically controlled by the steam pressure in the radiator, while in appearance they are identical with the regulation type of steam radiator. The great elasticity of the "Gasteam" system is one of its principal features, in that any one or more of the units may be used as demands require, heating any part or parts of a building, but without the necessity, as in the case of a furnace, of burning more fuel than is required to heat simply the desired space. Once lighted the radiators require no attention and can be turned off instantly and lighted equally as easy. Their very elasticity, economy and ease in operation makes this system of heating ideally adapted to the home or office of any kind of building, just as much so, as to this magnificent new theatre building.

Signs Particularly Attractive and Show Quality of Theatre and Program

THE attractive appearance of the front of the theatre has been greatly enhanced by the addition of electric signs equally attractive. Across the top at the front of the building is one of the largest signs erected by an coast theatre, the main portion of which is the single word, "California." All of this is in white with white lights. An idea of its size can be gained from the dimensions of the single letter "C" which is fourteen feet in height. Back of the word "California" is a cluster of California poppies which at night are seen to grow, and the buds open. The sign requires more than a thousand lights in opal, green, gold, orange and white. This was built by the Tucker Electric Sign System, and outside dimensions are 35x60 feet.

The Electrical Products Corporation installed most of the electrical work of the theatre including border, foot, overhead and proscenium arch lights. This same firm also installed the interchangeable sign in the front of the lobby which is furnished in Circassian walnut, as well as the miniature signs on each end of the marquee which were installed after the photograph in this section was taken. These spell the words "Miller's California Theatre."

The front of the theatre aside from the semi-indirect lights at the four sectional pillars of the marquee is lighted by reflectors that are hidden across the street. The great volume of light projected by these make the front of the theatre very attractive at night, and are so arranged that it may be flooded with different hues automatically.

In the basement at the stage end of the building is the intake for the ventilating system. This is connected with mushrooms placed over every third seat and fresh ventilated and washed air is pumped into the building by a mammoth fan. There are ten large ornamental exhaust vents in the ceiling. Claim is made by the installing ventilating engineer that the air at the theatre is changed every three minutes.
